SENT BAD NEWS

Lord Kitchener's Latest News Discouraging to the British.

BOERS CAPTURE HELVETIA

Who Did Not Expect Such Orders for at Least Ten Days—Emperor Instructs His Envoys to Get Best Terms Possible at to Guards, Etc.

London, Dec. 31.—The war office has received the following dispatch from Lord Kitchener:

"Pretoria, Dec. 30, 7:50 a. m.—Gen. Lyttleton reports that our post at Helvetia was captured yesterday morning by the Boers. About 50 were killed and wounded and 200 taken prisoners.

"Col. Kitchener reports that he is following with a small force in the track of the enemy, Helvetia being reoccupied by Reeves, who has been reinforced from Belfast.

"Helvetia was a very strong position on the Machadodorp-Lydenburg railway and was held by a detachment of the Liverpool regiment. Am asking for further information."

London, Dec. 31.—While Lord Kitchener sends bad news for England on the closing day of the year, the press continues to take a surprisingly hopeful view of a grave situation and of revelations of an enormously wide field of Boer activity. Gen. Dewet is still at large. Kimberly is isolated. The Boers are in force enough to have captured a strong position at Helvetia, in the Lydenburg district, while, judging from Lord Kitchener's very recent advices no progress is being made against the Boer invaders in Cape Colony.

According to further telegrams received yesterday, Zeerust is practically besieged, but has provisions sufficient for five months. The garrison at Ottoshoop has been withdrawn to Lichtenburg.

A dispatch from Carnarvon, dated yesterday, reports that the Boers who have been threatening that point were driven off and are being pursued.

"It is evident," says a belated message from Krugersdorp, dated Dec. 23, "that the Boer commissariat in the direction of the Magliesburg is well supplied and that until the country between here and the Magliesburg is properly cleared of Boers, they will continue to concentrate there, the ground being particularly adapted to their methods of warfare."

The Boers admit that in their fight with Gen. Clements at Nooitgedacht they lost 130 men.

"It is understood that Lord Kitchener cannot ask the colonies officially to send troops," says a Durban dispatch dated Dec. 29, "but he desires it to be known in Australasia and Canada that Australians and Canadians arriving in Natal will be eligible for immediate enlistment in an irregular corps, which is proceeding to Johannesburg for five months' service."

To emphasize Lord Kitchener's covert admission that no progress is being made against the invasion of Cape Colony a correspondent at Burghersdorp, wiring Saturday, reports as follows:

"Two fresh commandoes are entering the colony. One has already crossed near Knaapdaar, and the arrival of another is momentarily expected in the Strinsburg district. The Boers are said to have two or three horses each, though in bad condition. They have no guns or transport, but are well supplied with Lee-Metford rifles and ammunition. Captured Boers say that the intention of these commandoes is to roam about and wait until Gen. Dewet appears upon the scene."

All dispatches arriving in London agree that the Cape Dutch show no inclination to rise, but on the contrary appear to be tired of the war and desirous of peace. Many refuse to supply the Boers with food and are willing to give information to the British regarding Boer movements.

Details of the Greylingstad affair show that, while Colville's column was pursuing the Boers, a second force of 400 of the enemy was seen moving toward the camp where the British transport was inspanned. The small British force made a plucky stand until reinforcements arrived with artillery and, after a severe fight, the Boers were defeated. The British losses altogether were nine killed and 63 wounded and missing. The Boers are said to have 31 killed.

Refuses to be Bailed.

Wichita, Kas., Dec. 31.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, the W. C. T. U. woman who broke mirrors and destroyed a valuable painting in a Wichita saloon, has refused bail secured by her co-workers. She now says that under no circumstances will she step out of jail until cleared of the charge against her, and the W. C. T. U. has practically abandoned their effort to secure her release. Mrs. Nation says if she is released from imprisonment she will demolish saloon furniture in other Kansas cities.

May Visit America.

London, Dec. 31.—With reference to the order for Prince Henry of Prussia to repair to Berlin, which the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung explains as due to the wish of Emperor William to have him learn the affairs of government, the Berlin correspondent of the Daily News mentions a conjecture that the summons is preparatory to a visit by the kaiser to the United States.

Fatally Burned.

English, Ind., Dec. 31.—While rescuing her 1-year-old baby from her burning home at St. Croix, Mrs. Cornelia Barth was fatally burned Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Barth had left her child in the house asleep in its cradle and was at the home of her mother, less than 100 yards away, when the fire was discovered.

[illegible]

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 31.—Mrs. Aart Schilker, aged 60 years, for many years a resident of Grand Rapids, attended the third reformed church Sunday morning to hear a sermon by her son, Henry Schilker, who is a student in the Western Theological seminary. On her way home she dropped dead of heart disease.

Fingers Pinched.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 31.—Arthur Gore, 23 years old, a Grand Trunk conductor stopping at the St. Charles hotel, had three fingers of his left hand badly pinched in a drawbar at Milwaukee Junction early Sunday morning He was taken to St. Mary's hospital, where an effort is being made to save the fingers.

CROWE RENTED HOUSE.

A Man Who Knew Him Saw Him Do So.

Omaha, Dec. 31.—John Smith, a broom maker employed by the Schneiderwind broom factory, has positively identified Pat Crowe as the man who, in his presence, rented the Schneiderwind house on Grover street which was used as a prison for Eddie Cudahy while he was being detained for the $25,000 ransom. This is the first positive personal recognition of any of the bandits and establishes the most important point yet developed in the case. When asked to identify the picture of Pat Crowe in connection with the case, Smith said: "You need not show me any picture. I know that man. It was Pat Crowe. I could have told any police officer the same thing had he called upon me. I was busy at the broom machine when Pat Crowe called to rent the house and paid no attention to him during his talk with Mr. Schneiderwind. Then I thought I recognized the voice and stopped my machine long enough to get a good look at him. I saw at a glance that the man was none other than Pat Crowe, a man whom I have known for ten years. I am as positive as to the identity of Pat Crowe as I would be of my own brother."

Smith has lived in Omaha 12 years, during which time he has known Crowe and seen him at frequent intervals.

CALIFORNIA COMMERCE.

Imports and Exports from the Golden State in 1900.

San Francisco, Dec. 31.—The new year's edition of the San Francisco Chronicle gives a comprehensive summary of California's commerce during the past year. Considerable space is given to the growing trade with the Philippines. The total imports and exports out of and into San Francisco to and from the islands were: Imports, $436,293; exports, $601,704. In 1899 they were: Imports, $290,000; exports, $325,000.

The orange and lemon shipments from California for the year amounted to 22,000 car loads. The product of raisins was 75,000,000 lbs.; prunes, 120,000,000 lbs.

The total values of imports and exports from San Francisco to foreign countries for the year: Exports, $41,651,193; imports, $41,084,811. For the year 1899 the figures were: Exports, $37,618,300; imports, $44,575,170.

The total gold and silver imports for 1900 were $23,500,000; exports, $23,675,000. Wheat exported, 7,348,000 centals; flour, 1,131,944 bbls.

Died of Puenmonia.

New York, Dec. 31.—Hiram Hitchcock, the last of the founders of the Fifth Avenue hotel, died at the hotel Sunday morning after a few days of illness from pneumonia. The deceased was born in Claremont, N. H., Aug. 27, 1832. In 1859, with Alfred B. Darling and Paran Stevens, Mr. Hitchcock founded the Fifth Avenue hotel and with the exception of a few years spent abroad he lived continuously in it and has been always engaged in the management. In 1866 his health failed and Mr. Hitchcock was forced to relinquish the active management of the hotel.

Trade Growing Rapidly.

Copengahen, Dec. 31.—Denmark's trade with the United States is growing rapidly, showing record figures for 1900. Imports from the United States have trebled since 1896 and now exceed $20,000,000. The increasing commerce between the two countries is inducing many Danish-Americans to return to Copenhagen to represent American houses, and this is doing much to introduce American goods. As a natural result new ships have been ordered for the American trade.

Cabinet Crisis Imminent.

Madrid, Dec. 31.—Rumors of a cabinet crisis increases. Senor Sagasta, former premier, who has finally broken silence, declares that a change of ministry is inevitable on account of the differences in the cabinet itself as well as in the ranks of its supporters. Many ministerialists assert that the Axcarraga government will continue. Should it fall its only possible successor would be a Silvela ministry.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

Madrid.—Two persons were killed and 11 seriously wounded at Vivara, province of Grenada, during an election riot.

London.—Col. Willcocks has cabled the government that the Ashanti rebellion has ended, all of the rebel chiefs having surrendered.

London.—Scandalous scenes occurred at a Dowie Zionist meeting in Bermondsey town and all Saturday evening, the disturbances culminating in a free fight.

London.—Two German tourists, Herren Lainer and Kindlinger, ascended Mount Schwartzenbergen without guides, according to a dispatch to the Daily Express from Vienna, and fell into an abyss and were killed.

Berlin.—Much American maize 1900 crop is arriving here in bad condition. The society of Berlin grain and produce dealers has cabled to American exporters cautioning them to see that their goods correspond with the certificates.

St. Petersburg.—The Russian transport St. Petersburg has left Odessa with 1,500 recruits for the maritime provinces. She carries also numerous presents from the empress to the Red Cross society's officials and nurses in that district.

In Danish official circles the report that Germany is negotiating to purchase the Danish Antilles is denied. "If the islands are to be sold," said a high official Sunday, "the purchaser will be the United States and no other power. All will be sold or none."

London.—It is announced that the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, on receiving news that his son, Lord Frederick Temple Blackwood, had been wounded at Glenfontein, resigned the chairmanship of the London and Globe finance corporation, limited.

New Michigan Corporations.

Non-capitalized corporations—Michigan State Association of Master Horseshoers, Lansing. The following corporations filed notice of increase of capital in the sums named: Michigan & Alabama Fruit Package Co., Eau Claire, $10,000; Fulton Iron & Engine works, Detroit, $100,000.

ORDERED TO SIGN

Chinese Emperor Sends Instructions Concerning Note.

SURPRISE PARTY TO CHINESE

Fifty British Killed and Wounded and Two Hundred Taken Prisoners—The Close of the Year Disastrous for Kitchener's Forces.

Pekin, Dec. 31.—The Chinese plenipotentiaries have been unexpectedly ordered to sign the preliminary joint note and have notified the foreign envoys to that effect.

The Chinese themselves were greatly astonished at receiving the imperial instructions. Neither Li Hung Chang nor Prince Ching had expected success in persuading the court under 10 days.

The emperor's instructions are to agree fully to the note, but to endeavor to get the best terms possible, particularly in the matter of limiting the number of the legation guards and also as to the places where these are to be located.

The plenipotentiaries are instructed to endeavor to limit the number of army posts along the line of railway to as few as possible and finally to request the powers not to destroy the forts, but merely to disarm them.

Li Hung Chang's health is bad and it is doubtful whether he will be able to do more than affix his signature to an instrument delegating his powers to Prince Ching until another plenipotentiary has been appointed. He was dressed Sunday morning and carried in a chair to the residence of Prince Ching, with whom he held a long consultation. Prince Ching then called upon the doyen of the diplomatic corps, the Spanish minister, Senor De Cologan, and requested him to notify the other envoys that instructions had been received from the emporor to sign the note.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 31.—There have been no negotiations regarding the arbitration of the China indemnities between the United States and Russia which first proposed arbitration, and the raising of this question, the correspondent of the Associated Press understands will not be regarded as timely until the negotiations in Pekin have proceeded further. It is believed, however, that Russia is still inclined to support the arbitration proposal.

Shanghai, Dec. 31.—There are persistent reports in circulation here that the imperial court is preparing to return to Pekin. Chinese advices from the capital say that 90 carts, with mules and horses, have been dispatched at Tai Yuen Fu to meet and bring back the imperial personages and their entourage.

It is also asserted that Emperor Kwang Su has summoned Hu Ping Chih, former governor of the province of Shan Si to Sian Fu to accompany him to Pekin

The Mohammedan rising in the province of Kan Su is spreading, and the troops of the viceroy of the province of Hu Nan are alone able to hold their own against the rebels.

Took a Gloomy View.

London, Dec. 31.—All the religious denominations have arranged for "end of the century services," some of which were held Sunday, and others will be held Monday. At Westminster Abbey, Archdeacon Frederic W. Farrar, preaching Sunday took a very gloomy view of the future. He said he thought it by no means improbable that early in the coming century England would have to meet a combination of European powers. Referring to the "serious trade competition of Germany and the United States," he appealed to England to rouse herself. Alluding to the national curse of intemperance, he said that the Rev. Chas. Sheldon had told him that he had seen more drunkenness in England in one year than in his own country, the United States, in a whole life time.

The Cunarder Won.

New York, Dec. 31.—The American line steamer New York and the Cunard line steamer Etruria, the former from Southampton and Cherbourg, the latter from Liverpool and Queenstown, arrived late Saturday night at quarantine. For three days the steamers were in company and an interesting race was afforded the passengers. Dec. 26, 27 and 28 the steamers were in sight, and it was evident that the Cunarder was constantly gaining. On Dec. 28, at 6 p. m., the New York was passed by her rival and during the ensuing night she dropped out of sight astern. The New York brought the passengers of the disabled steamer Westernland of the Red Star line, which was towed into Southampton Dec. 22 by the steamer Somerhill.

Mutilated by Filipinos.

West Superior, Wis., Dec. 31.—In a letter written from the Philippines just before the recent election, to his relatives in this city, Capt. Harry W. Newton says that at that time the encroachments of the natives were worse than they had been at any time during the year previous. As one instance of their ferocity he writes: "Just the other day they jumped a detachment of our Twenty-fourth, numbering 22 men, and captured 16 of them. One of them was found terribly mutilated, showing signs of being skinned while yet alive."

Clay is a Lively County.

London, Ky., Dec. 31.—Four men have been killed and ten wounded in Clay county fights within the past two weeks, while two other Clay county men were killed and two wounded in a fight just over the Clay county line during the same period, making a total of six killed and 12 wounded within two weeks. The factions are again becoming hostile and drastic measures may be necessary to quell the feudists.

Challenge to McGovern.

Chicago, Dec. 31.—Benny Yanger, the "Tipton Slasher," through his manager, has deposited a forfeit of $1,000 with George Siler and issued a challenge to fight Terry McGovern at 122 pounds, ringside, before the club offering the best inducements. As these are the terms asked by McGovern's manager, it is almost a certainty the match will be made. If the men meet it will be for the featherweight championship of the world.

Scholastic Acuteness.

"I proceeded on the general proposition that whatever a woman seems to be she isn't."—Chicago Record.

As the Result of Game.

Abbeville, S. C., Dec. Kennedy, of this county, of Massachusetts, who has intending the building of a cott here, and John Dansby, who was several years a United States mar are dead as the result of a shooting a card game and an attempt to arrest the men who did the shooting. Several persons were playing cards Saturday night when Dansby threw two dollars on the table and said: "Play for this." The men at the table refused and an altercation ensued. Dansby suddenly drew a pistol and shot Kyle in the abdomen. He then backed out of the room, declaring that he would shoot any one who attempted to stop him. He was followed by two policemen, but held them at bay until Sheriff Kennedy and a number of citizens arrived. The sheriff called to Dansby to come out of the house of his father-in-law, whither he had fled, and surrender. Dansby came out and commenced firing. Dansby was shot twice in the leg and once in the chest, and the sheriff was struck near the heart and fell. Dansby walked 50 steps and was reloading his pistol when he was shot again, it is said, by the dying sheriff. The sheriff and Dansby died within a few minutes, Kyle lingering until 2 o'clock Sunday.

MYSTERIOUS SHOOTING.

Chicago Police Suspect Murder and Will Investigate.

Chicago, Dec. 31.—Merritt D. Hoff, president of the Turnagain Arm Gold Mining Co. of Phoenix, Ariz., was arrested here Sunday night and is held pending an investigation by the police into the death of Mrs. Nora Hammers, who was found dead in her room Sunday with a bullet in her brain. Hoff, who has been acquainted with Mrs. Hammers since July, admits that he was in the room at the time of the shooting, which was done with his revolver, but he claims the woman committed suicide. Chas. Gaussen, a friend of Hoff's, and Mrs. Lydia Criswill, a sister of the dead woman, have also been arrested. These two maintain that the woman killed herself because she feared Hoff, who has a wife and daughter, intended to cease his acquaintance with her.

Hoff's revolver was found in one of the dead woman's hands. Hoff claims that when Mrs. Hammers fired the fatal shot he picked up the weapon and ran for a doctor. On the way he met Gaussen, who in turn took it back to the room where the shooting occurred, and placed it in the woman's hand.

Hoff lived for 18 years in Minneapolis and was the station agent of the Great Northern railroad in that city.

A BLIZZARD

Accompanied by a Heavy Snow Fall in the Southwest.

St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 31.—A severe snow storm set in late Sunday afternoon with a constantly lowering temperature. Telegraphic reports from all sections of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and northern Missouri show the fall to be heavy. Winter wheat in many sections of these states, as well as throughout the west generally, has been greatly in need of a heavy blanket of snow.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 31.—A snow storm, driven by a strong north wind, prevailed here Sunday night. The storm is general in the southwest. No reports of damage or delay of trains have been received.

Denver, Dec. 31.—A blizzard visited Colorado Saturday night and continued with varied strength throughout the state Sunday. The temperature is falling in most sections and at several places the fall of snow has been quite heavy. Railroad traffic, though not seriously affected, has been interrupted and trains are all arriving late. No great damage to live stock has been reported.

Buffalo Live Stock Market.

East Buffalo, N. Y., Dec. 31.—Receipts: Cattle, 167 cars; sheep and lambs, 24 cars; hogs, 22 cars. Shipments: Cattle, 186 cars; sheep and lambs, 14 cars; hogs, 14 cars. Cattle, light demand. Calves, choice to extra, $8@8.25. Lambs, choice to extra, $5.35@5.50. Sheep, choice to extra, $4@4.25. Hogs, heavy, $5.05@5.10; pigs, $5.30@5.35.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

Among the passengers who arrived at New York Sunday on the steamer La Gascogne, from Havre, was M. Cambon, French ambassador at Washington.

Bert L. Goodale, a theatrical man of Los Angeles, Cal., died at Kansas City after a short illness. The remains will be sent to Kalamazoo, Mich., the home of Goodale's parents, for burial.

Edwin G. Bedford died near Paris, Ky., Sunday, aged 86 years. He was a noted breeder of short horn cattle. He paid the highest price ever given for a short horn, $36,000, for a bull at the New York Mills sale in 1876.

Two frightful elevator accidents occurred at Cleveland Sunday morning within five minutes in buildings only a short distance from each other. Sydney Hamm, of London, Ont., stepped into an open shaft and fell six stories, and Ralph Spellman, aged 19, fell nine stories. Both were instantly killed.

Dr. Justus O'Hage, health commissioner of St. Paul, having been satisfied that the new health board formed at Winona has taken proper measures to guard against the spread of smallpox, which is said to exist there, has raised the quarantine and intercourse between the two cities is now of its normal character.

It is announced that Ed Cook, as the representative of Manager Wm. A. Brady, will be in Cincinnati to open up Jeffries' headquarters this week and that Jeffries is expected to go into training at West Baden, Ind., next week. Gus Bezenah is trying to make a match for the preliminary of the Jeffries-Ruhlin fight on Feb. 15.

Charged With Collusion.

Berlin, Dec. 31.—The Lokal Anzeiger announces that the appeal in the case of the banker Sternberg, convicted of an offense against morality, will result in a new trial, owing to a legal flaw. It also asserts that proceedings have been begun against Dr. Sello, the leading counsel for the defense, and Dr. Werthauer, the junior counsel, for collusion with Criminal Commissioner Thiel to secure illegally the acquittal of Sternberg.

A. GIBONEY'S WIVES

Got a Divorce and Married Again—Lived With Wife No. 1 After Marrying No. 2, and Now No. 1 Applies for a Divorce from the Husband.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Dec. 31.—A peculiar condition of affairs has been brought to light through the commencement of divorce proceedings in this city by Mrs. Melvina A. Giboney, against her former husband, John A. Giboney, now a traveling salesman of Chicago.

It transpires that Giboney secured a bill of divorce in Chicago from Mrs. Melvina A. Giboney, previous to Aug. 26, 1899, on which date he was married in that city to Miss Carrie E. Taylor, of Kalamazoo. Although having secured a divorce, which the first Mrs. Giboney's attorney declares is not legal, and although having married again, Giboney came back to Kalamazoo and lived with wife No. 1 peacefully and happily for nearly two months after. She says she was ignorant of what had transpired in Chicago up to this time. Wife No. 1 has never been notified that Giboney has a bill against her.

On the day he left home for good, two months after his marriage to Miss Taylor, he gave wife No. 1 some money and gave her to understand that he would be back in a day or two, but, she alleges, that she has not seen him since, although he visits in Kalamazoo quite frequently with his second wife.

Will be Free.

Lansing, Mich., Dec. 31.—Between a rush of pardons and paroles and the presence of a dozen extra clerks addressing envelopes in which copies of Gov. Pingree's forthcoming message will be sent out, the executive office was altogether the busiest place in the city Sunday.

Late Saturday night Fred P. Striker, a Detroit saloonkeeper, arrived with an order for the parole of Stonewall J. De France, the notorious forger, who was sent from Kalamazoo in 1894 for 11 years. Striker was at the executive office early Sunday morning, and after obtaining the necessary papers, had the parole put through the secretary of state's office. At noon he left here overland for Jackson, after arranging to be met with a fresh team and driver at Mason. His desire was to get to Jackson in time to secure the release of De France before locking up time.

Another Boy Kidnaped.

Houghton, Mich., Dec. 31.—The 5-year-old son of Mrs. Raymond Thiervy, of Dollar Bay, has been kidnaped, evidently in the hope of securing a ransom. It is believed the boy was taken by a well-known character in the copper region and the sheriff, with a large posse of indignant citizens, is scouring the country hoping to catch him before he gets beyond the state line. It is thought he is heading for Canada.

Was Deranged.

Marquette, Mich., Dec. 31.—William Sullivan, a tramp, picked up the 5-year-old son of Raymond Thiery, of Dollar Bay, Saturday, and led him to Point Mills, some miles off. Sheriff Lean apprehended the man 18 miles south of Houghton Sunday afternoon. There was considerable excitement over the affair, but it is not believed that Sullivan harbored any sinister intentions. He is believed to be mentally deranged.

Found Dead.

Muskegon, Mich., Dec. 31.—Sergt. C. H. Barber, of the United States army, was found dead in his room at the Wierengo hotel Sunday morning. Death was presumably due to heart trouble. Barber came to this city from Grand Rapids a few days ago and opened a recruiting office. He retired apparently in good spirits and was found in a sitting position on his trunk. A widow lives at East Salem, Mich. The remains are now in charge of the coroner.

A Close Call.

Ludington, Mich., Dec. 31.—A house belonging to Wm. Weaver caught fire early Sunday morning and burned to the ground. The family was absent at the time, but Mr. Weaver was asleep in the second story. He was awakened by the smell of smoke barely in time to jump into a snowdrift and escape without his clothes. There was $700 insurance on the house and contents.

Charge Was Dismissed.

Flint, Mich., Dec. 31.—Dr. E. J. Covey, of Swartz Creek, was arrested several months ago on a charge of practicing medicine without being licensed. The case has been dismissed, as the board, after investigation, found he was entitled to registration and registered him.

Property of the State.

Richmond, Ind., Dec. 31.—After many years of effort the grave of Nancy Hanks Lincoln, mother of Abraham Lincoln, is now the property of the state. Gov. Mount has received the deed for the ground in the immediate vicinity of the grave in Spencer county in behalf of the Nancy Hanks Memorial association. The ground is to be turned into a park and a custodian will be put in charge and much beautifying done. The deed is for the commissioners of Spencer county.

Excites Sympathy.

London, Dec. 31.—The elaborate statement given to the press Saturday by Major General Sir Henry Colville, whose resignation has been demanded by the office but who refused to resign and has demanded a trial by court-martial to establish the responsibility for the yeomanry disaster at Lindley last May, excites considerable sympathy and a tendency to make further attacks upon the war office. It is generally conceded that he has been harshly treated; but, as his statement is ex parte, the papers withhold final judgment.

Business at a Standstill.

Kingston, Jamaica, Dec. 31.—The British steamer Orinico, which arrived here Sunday from Colon, Colombia, reports considerable rebel activity in nearly all the provinces. The Colombia railway and the Magdelena river services are disorganized and business is at a standstill in every section except Colon. The Colombian government, according to the same advices, have been making successful attempts to corner rebel bands.

Arms and The Woman

CHAPTER VI.

During the first year of my residence in London there happened few events worth chronicling. Shortly after my arrival Hillars disappeared. His two months' vacation stretched into 12, and I was directed to remain in London. As I knew that Hillars did not wish to be found, I made no inquiries. He was somewhere on the continent, but where no one knew. At one time a letter, dated at St. Petersburg, reached me, and at another time I was informed of his presence at Monte Carlo. In neither letter was there any mention of her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia. Since the night he recounted the adventure the wayward princess had never become the topic of conversation. I grew hopeful enough to believe that he had forgotten her. Occasionally I received a long letter from Phyllis. I always promptly answered it. To any one but me her letters would have proved interesting reading. It was not for what she wrote that I cared, it was the mere fact that she wrote. A man cannot find much pleasure in letters which begin with "Dear friend" and end with "Yours sincerely" when they come from the woman he loves.

In the preceding autumn I completed my first novel. I carried it around to publishers till I grew to hate it as one hates a Nemesis, and when finally I did place it it was with a publisher who had just started in business and was necessarily obscure. I bowed politely to my dreams of literary fame and became wholly absorbed in my journalistic work. When the book came out, I could not but admire the excellence of the bookmaking, but as I looked through the reviews and found no mention save in "books received" I threw the book aside and vowed that it should be my last. The publisher wrote me that he was surprised that the book had not caught on, as he considered, the story unusually clever. "Merit is one thing," he said, "but luck is another." I have found this to be true not only in literature, but in all walks of life where fame and money are the goals. Phyllis wrote me that she thought the book "just splendid," but I took her praise with a grain of salt, it being likely that she was partial to the author and that the real worth of the book was little in comparison with the fact that it was I who wrote it.

One morning in early June I found three letters on my desk. The first was from Hillars. He was in Vienna:

> My Dear Son—There is another rumpus. The princess disappeared on the 20th of last month. They are hunting high and low for her and incidentally for me. Why me is more than I can understand, but I received a letter from Rockwell of the American legation warning me that if I remained in Austria I should be apprehended, put in jail, hanged and quartered for no other reason on earth than that they suspect my having some thing to do with her disappearance—due, I suppose, to that other miserable affair. Though I have hunted all over the continent, I have never seen the Princess Hildegarde since that night at B. Where shall I find her? I haven't the least idea, but as a last throw I am going to the principality of Hohenphalia, where she was born and over which she rules with infinite wisdom. The king is determined that she shall wed Prince Ernst. He would take away her principality but for the fact that there would be a wholesale disturbance to follow any such act. If I ever meet that watchdog of hers, the Count von Walden, the duffer who gave me my conge, there will be trouble. The world isn't large enough for two such men as we are. By the way, I played roulette at the Casino last night and won 3,000 francs. Well, au revoir, or adieu, as the case may be. They sell the worst whisky here you ever heard of. It's terrible to have an educated palate.
> HILLARS.

So he was still desiring for something he could never have! I got out of patience with the fellow. Even if she loved him, what chance had he against the legions of the king? Hillars was a wild headed fellow, and if at liberty was not incapable of creating a disturbance. It might land him in jail or on the gallows. Still Hillars, with all his love of adventure, was not ordinarily reckless. Yet, if he met the princess, she would find a willing tool in him for her slightest caprice. Whatever happened the brunt would fall upon him. My opinion, formed from various stories I had heard of the princess, was not very flattering to her. The letter and its possibilities disturbed me.

The second letter was from headquarters in New York:

> Dear Winthrop—We want a good Sunday special. Her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia has taken it into her head to disappear again. Go over and see Rockwell in B. He will give you a good yarn. It has never been in type yet, and I dare say that it will make good reading. London seems particularly dull just now, and you can easily turn over your affairs to the assistant. This woman's life is more full of romance than that of any other woman of the courts of Europe. The most interesting part of it is her reputation is said to be like that of Cæsar's wife, above reproach. Get a full history of her life and of the prince whom she is to marry. If you can get any photographs, do so. I know how you dislike this sort of work, prying into private affairs, as you call it, but with all these sensational sheets springing up around us we must keep in line now and then. Do you know anything about Hillars? Is he dead or alive? Take all the time you want for the story and send it by mail.

"The Princess Hildegarde!" I cried aloud. "The deuce take the woman!"

"What's that?" asked my assistant, who had overheard my outburst.

"Oh, I am to go across on a special story," I said, with a snarl, "just as I was fixing for a week's fishing. I've got to concern myself with the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia."

"Ah, the Princess Hildegarde!" said the young fellow, pushing back his hat and elevating his feet, a trick he had acquired while being reared in his native land, which was the state of Illinois, in America. "You want to be careful. Every one burns his fingers or singes his wings around that candle."

"What do you know about her?" I asked.

"A little. You see, about six months ago I discovered all regarding Hillars and his fall from grace. It was through the Reuter agency. Hillars got badly singed. An elopement of some sort between him and the princess was nipped in the bud. He was ordered to leave the country and warned never to return at the peril of his liberty. A description of him is with every post on the frontier. As for the princess, she is an interesting character. She was educated in this country and France. She speaks several languages. She is headstrong and willful, and her royal guardian is only too anxious to see her married and settled down. She masquerades in men's clothes when it pleases her, she can ride a horse like a trooper, she fences and shoots, she has fought two duels, and heaven alone knows what she has not done to disturb the tranquillity of the court. For a man she loved she would be a merry comrade. I saw her once in Paris. She is an extraordinarily beautiful woman. A man takes no end of risk when he concerns himself with her affairs, I can tell you. Hillars—well, I suppose it's none of my business. He must have had an exciting time of it," concluded the young man.

"I'll leave you in charge for a week or so," said I. "What little news there is at the houses you can cover. I'll take care of anything of importance that occurs abroad. I might as well pack up and get out tonight. A boat leaves Dover early in the morning."

Then I picked up the third and last letter. It was from Phyllis. It contained the enjoyable news that the Wentworths were coming abroad and that they would remain indefinitely at B——, where Mr. Wentworth had been appointed charge d'affaires under the American minister. They were to visit the Mediterranean before coming to London. They would be in town in October. The mere thought of seeing Phyllis made my heart throb. The next morning I put out from Dover. It was a rough passage for that time of the year, and I came near being seasick. A day or so in Paris brought me around, and I proceeded. As I passed the frontier I noticed that my passports were eagerly scanned and that I was closely scrutinized for some reason or other.

A smartly dressed officer occupied half of the carriage compartment with me. I tried to draw him into conversation, but he proved to be untalkative; so I busied myself with the latest issue of the Paris L'Illustration. I never glanced in the direction of the officer but what I found him staring intently at me. This irritated me. The incident was repeated so many times that I said:

"I trust herr will remember me in the days to come."

"Eh?" somewhat startled, I thought.

"I observed that you will possibly remember me in the days to come, or perhaps I resemble some one you know."

"Not in the least," was the haughty retort.

I shrugged and relit my pipe. The tobacco I had purchased in Paris, and it was of the customary vileness. Perhaps I could smoke out mein herr. But the task resulted in a boomerang. He drew out a huge china pipe and began smoking tobacco which was even viler than mine, if that could be possible. Soon I let down the window.

"Does the smoke disturb herr?" he asked, puffing forth great clouds of smoke. There was a shade of raillery in his tones.

"It would not," I answered, "if it came from tobacco." He subsided. Whenever there was a stop of any length, I stepped out and walked the platform. The officer invariably followed my example. I pondered over this each time I re-entered the carriage. At last, my irritation turned into wrath.

"Are you aware that your actions are very annoying?"

"How, sir?" proudly.

"You stare me out of countenance, you refrain from entering into conversation and by the way you follow me in and out of the carriage one would say that you were watching me. All this is not common politeness."

"Herr jests," he replied with a forced smile. "If I desire not to converse, that is my business. As for getting in and out of the carriage, have I no rights as a passenger?"

It was I who subsided. A minute passed.

"But why do you stare at me?" I asked.

"I do not stare at you. I have no paper and tried to read yours at a distance. I am willing to apologize for that."

"Oh, that is different," I said. I tossed the paper to him. "You are welcome to the paper."

I covertly watched him as he tried to read the French. By and by he passed the paper back.

"I am not a very good French scholar, and the French are tiresome."

"They would not have been if they had had a general who thought more of fighting than of wearing pretty clothes."

"Oh, it would not have mattered," confidently.

"Prussia was once humbled by a Frenchman." I was irritating him with a purpose in view.

"Bah!"

"The only reason the French were beaten was because they did not think the German race worth troubling about."

He laughed pleasantly. "You Americans have a strange idea of the difference between the German and the Frenchman."

This was just what I wanted.

"And who informed you that I was an American?"

He was disconcerted. "Why," he said lamely, "it is easily apparent, the difference between the American and the Englishman." Then, as though a bright idea had come to him: "The English never engage in conversation with strangers while traveling. Americans are more sociable."

"They are? Then I advise them to follow the example set by the Englishman—never try to get up a conversation while traveling with a German. It is a disagreeable task." And I settled back behind my paper.

How had he found out that I was an American? Was I known? And for what reason was I known? To my knowledge I had never committed any offense to the extent that I must be watched like a suspect. What his object was and how he came to know that I was an American were mysteries to me. I was glad that the journey would last but an hour or so longer. The train arrived at the capital late at night. As I went to inquire about my luggage I saw my late fellow passenger joined by another officer. The two began talking earnestly, giving me occasional sidelong glances. The mystery was deepening. In passing them I caught words which sounded like "under another name" and "positive it is he." This was anything but reassuring to me. At length they disappeared, only to meet me outside the station. It got into my head that I was a marked man. A feeling of discomfort took possession of me. Germans are troublesome when they get an idea. I was glad to get into the carriage which was to take me to my hotel. The driver seemed to have some difficulty in starting the horse, but I gave this no attention. When the vehicle did start, it was with a rapidity which alarmed me. Corner after corner was turned, and the lights went by in flashes. It was taking a long time to reach my hotel, I thought. Suddenly it dawned upon me that the direction we were going was contrary to my instructions. I tried to open the window, but it refused to move. Then I hammered on the pane, but the driver was deaf or purposely so.

"Hi, there!" I thoughtlessly yelled in English. "Where the devil are you going?"

No one paid any attention to my cries. It was becoming a serious matter.

The lights grew fewer and fewer, and presently there were no lights at all. We were, I judged, somewhere in the suburbs. I became desperate and smashed a window. The carriage stopped so abruptly that I went sprawling to the bottom. I was in anything but a peaceful frame of mind, as they say, when the door swung open and I beheld standing at the side of it the officer who had accompanied me from the frontier.

"What tomfoolery is this?" I demanded. I was thoroughly incensed.

"It means that herr will act peacefully or be in danger of a broken head," was the mind easing reply of my quondam fellow passenger. The driver then came down from the box, and I saw that he was the officer who had joined us at the station.

"If it is a frolic," I said, "one of your beer hall frolics, the sooner it is ended the better for you."

The two laughed as if what I had said was one of the funniest things imaginable.

"Get out!"

"With pleasure!" said I.

Directly one of them lay with his back to the ground and the other was locked in my embrace. I had not spent four years on the college campus for intellectual benefits only. And indignation lent me additional strength. My opponent was a powerful man, but I held him in a grip of rage. Truthfully I began to enjoy the situation. There is something exhilarating in the fighting blood which rises in us now and then. This exhilaration, however, brought about my fall. In the struggle I forgot the other, who meantime had recovered his star gemmed senses. A crack from the butt of his pistol rendered me remarkably quiet and docile. In fact, all became a vacancy till the next morning, and then I was conscious of a terrible headache and of a room with a window through which a cat might have climbed without endangering its spine—a very dexterous cat.

"Well," I mused, softly nursing the lump on my head, "here's the devil to pay and not a cent to pay him with."

It was evident that, without knowing it, I had become a very important personage.

CHAPTER VII.

I saw some rye bread, cold meat and a pitcher of water on the table, and I made a sandwich and washed it down with a few swallows of the cool liquid. I had a fever, and the water chilled it. There was a lump on the back of my head as large as an egg. With what water remained I dampened my handkerchief and wound it around the injury. Then I made a systematic search through my clothes. Not a single article of my belongings was missing. I was rather sorry, for it lent a deeper significance to my incarceration. After this I proceeded to take an inventory of my surroundings. Below and beyond the little window I saw a wide expanse of beautiful gardens, fine oaks and firs, velvet lawns and white pebbled roads. Marble fountains made them merry in the roseate hue of early morning. A gardener was busy among some hedges, but beyond the sound of my voice. I was a prisoner in no common jail, then, but in the garret of a private residence. Having satisfied myself that there was no possible escape, I returned to my pallet and lay down. Why I was here a prisoner I knew not. I thought over all I had written the past twelvemonth, but nothing recurred to me which would make me liable to arrest. But, then, I had not been arrested. I had been kidnaped, nothing less. Nothing had been asked of me. I had made no statement. It had been all too sudden. Presently I heard footsteps in the corridors, and the door opened. It was mine enemy. He locked the door and thrust the key into his pocket. One of his eyes was decidedly mouse colored. The knuckles of my hand were yet sore. I smiled. He saw the smile, his jaws hardening and his eyes threatening.

"I am sorry," I said. "I should have hit you on the point of the chin, but I was in a great hurry. Did you ever try raw meat as a poultice?"

"Enough of this," he snapped, laying a pistol on the table. I was considered dangerous. It was something to know that. "You must answer my questions."

"Must?"

"Must."

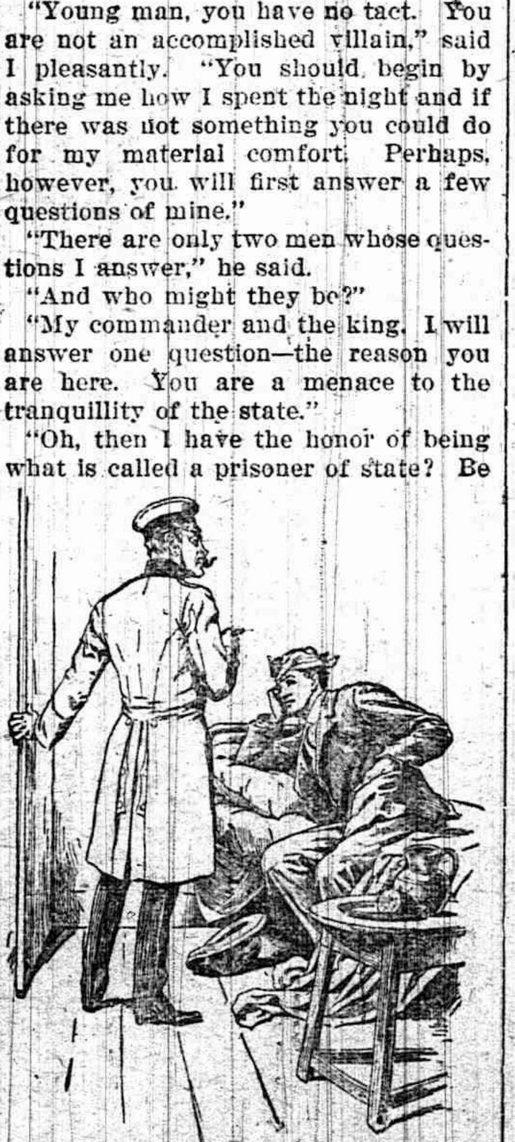
"Young man, you have no tact. You are not an accomplished villain," said I pleasantly. "You should begin by asking me how I spent the night and if there was not something you could do for my material comfort. Perhaps, however, you will first answer a few questions of mine."

"There are only two men whose questions I answer," he said.

"And who might they be?"

"My commander and the king. I will answer one question—the reason you are here. You are a menace to the tranquillity of the state."

"Oh, then I have the honor of being what is called a prisoner of state? Be careful," I cried suddenly; "that pistol might go off, and then the American minister might ask you in turn some questions—disagreeable ones too."



It was mine enemy. He locked the door and thrust the key into his pocket.

"The American minister would never know anything about it," said he gruffly. "But have no fear. I should hesitate to soil an innocent leaden bullet in your carcass."

INDORSED BY DEPE

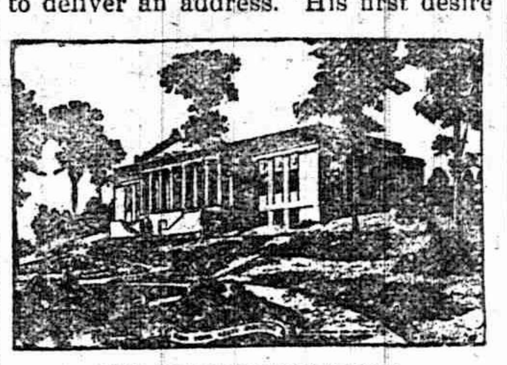
SAYS THE "PAN-AM." WILL SURPASS THE PARIS FAIR.

Tells Chairman J. N. Scatcherd the Half Has Not Been Told of the Grandeur and Beauty of the Exposition at Buffalo.

"Scatcherd, you did not praise it half enough."

So spoke the distinguished statesman and famous after dinner orator, Senator Chauncey M. Depew, as he stood in the center of the grounds of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo and gazed upon the beautiful structures surrounding him on every side and now approaching completion.

Senator Depew had come to Buffalo to deliver an address. His first desire on arrival in the city was to be driven to the grounds of the Exposition. The remark quoted above was addressed to Chairman John N. Scatcherd of the executive committee of the Exposition, who had told Senator Depew of the progress made in the building of the Exposition when they had met in Europe last summer. Mr. Scatcherd had dwelt long and eloquently upon the success which had attended the organization and construction of the Exposition, and "Our Chauncey's" expectations were high. Nevertheless anticipations are not equal to realization.



NEW YORK STATE BUILDING.

Looking upon the scene before him from the sight of the grand Triumphal Bridge, he saw to his right the stately proportions of the United States Government buildings, to the left, across the spacious Esplanade, the charming architectural effects of the Graphic Arts, Horticultural and Mines buildings, while the vast Machinery and Transportation building, now almost complete, was seen in the background to the left. Opposite it, across the Court of Fountains, was the Manufactures and Liberal Arts building, and the Electric Tower could be seen rising skyward in the distance at the far end of the vast court, with the towers and minarets of other buildings outlined against the horizon. As Mr. Depew took in this impressive scene the exclamation burst from his lips that the half had not been told.

Later in the day the popular orator addressed an audience which filled to overflowing Buffalo's great Convention hall. In the opening lines of his speech the speaker declared: "Six weeks ago I was at the Universal Exposition at Paris. Today I went through the grounds where your Pan-American Exposition is to be held. I felt that Buffalo is going to do at least twice as well as Paris."

Latin-American and Pan-American.

The press of the various countries of Latin-America show a cordial interest in the Pan-American Exposition. It is recognized that their co-operation is essential to the end that the Exposition may adequately represent the progress of all the states and countries of this hemisphere. As a rule the editors of newspapers and other publications in the countries to the south of the United States display a very favorable attitude toward the enterprise. B. B. Lopez, editor and proprietor of La Correspondencia de Porto Rico, has become so enthusiastic over the Exposition that he writes to the Press Department that he is about to come to Buffalo to see for himself the progress made in the development of the Exposition. He will be accompanied by his family. Many other editors of the Latin-American press have also announced their intention to attend the Exposition, and inquiries are pouring in from these countries regarding steamboat and railroad routes. Many editors and correspondents from Central and South American countries have already visited the Exposition grounds.

Wisconsin's Building.

Commissioners from Wisconsin, who have charge of the exhibits from that state at the Pan-American Exposition, have selected a site for the State building. About 20 acres have been set apart on the eastern side of the Exposition grounds for state and foreign buildings. The site chosen for the Wisconsin building is nearly opposite the large buildings of the National governments just south of one of the mirror lakes and south of the Ohio building. It will overlook the Esplanade, with its wonderful fountains and gardens, and a number of the large buildings will be in full view. The Wisconsin commission are Willard A. Van Brunt and George B. Burrows of Madison, B. E. Edwards of Lacrosse, Charles Reynolds of Sturgeon Bay and George H. Yule of Kenosha. Wisconsin will spend $25,000 on her building and exhibits at Buffalo.

A $6,000 A. O. U. W. Building.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen are planning elaborately to welcome the members of the order to Buffalo next year. The Supreme Lodge has appropriated $3,000 and the State Lodge $3,000 more to be used for the erection and furnishing of a fine headquarters building at the Pan-American Exposition. The Supreme Lodge will meet in Buffalo next year. The building is a handsome pavilion, with rooms for rest, and the upper floor a great balcony, with easy chairs, for all members of the order who attend the Exposition.

Answered the General.

"The old sappers were admirable fellows," says a writer in Cassier's Magazine, "as brave as lions, though sometimes rather stupid. A certain peninsular general rode down to some sappers who were digging trenches and commenced to cross question one on his duties. You must know that a gabion is a basket which can be filled with earth and so made to stop a bullet, and a fascine is a bundle of fagots.

"'Now, supposing the first sapper in the trench you were driving were killed,' said the general, 'what would you do with him?'

"'Stuff him in a gabion, sir,' said the stolid sapper.

"'And what would you do with the second if he were killed?' said the officer in surprise.

"'Make a fascine of him, sir.'

"The general rode off without another word."

Brought Good For

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1 00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

Sympathy Not What Was Wanted.

A native of the mountain district of Kentucky had occasion to go on a journey recently and before starting took out an accident policy. He chanced to be one of the victims of a railway collision, and the next morning his widow, armed with a newspaper report, in which his name was mentioned among the killed, called on the agent of the insurance company and demanded the money.

"But, madam," said the agent, "we will have to have more definite proof before we can pay your claim."

"More proof!" exclaimed the bereaved woman. "Why, he's dead'rn a doornail, I reckon."

"Possibly, my dear madam," answered the polite agent, "and I'm very sorry."

"Sorry! You are sorry, are you?"

"I certainly am, madam. I sincerely sympathize with you in your sad affliction."

"But hain't you goin to give me the money what's comin to me?"

"Not today. Your claim will have to be investigated first."

"That's just like a good fer nothin man," angrily retorted the bereaved woman. "You all are mighty perlite 'bout things so long as they hain't costin you nothin, but the minnet a poor, lone female does git a chance to git holt of a leetle spendin money you got the gall to say you're sorry."

And the indignant female slammed the door.—Chicago News.

Telegraphers' Grip.

"I have lost my grip."

This phrase is applied by men to all kinds of failures. One of the technical usages of losing one's grip is in the case of telegraph operators.

Many of the most skilled operators suffer at times from a loss of the "grip" and are compelled to give way temporarily to a substitute. This "grip" is the hold on the key, and the moment the operator begins to lose the control of this "grip" he realizes a rest, although for only a brief time is due him.

Another but unpleasant term applied to this loss of "grip" is "telegraphers' paralysis." It shows itself in many curious ways, all showing that the muscles brought into play in working the key are badly worn.

One of the most skillful operators in Louisville, who is subject to these attacks, cannot send "P." The Morse manual calls for five dots for this letter. The operator in question has by some hook or crook lost the power to stop at the fifth dot, and it is a common thing for him to warn the taker to look out for his "P's."

Recently he asked a fellow operator to watch him send "P's" and to stop him at the end of the fifth dot. It resulted that, although he would be warned at the fourth dot, the fingers, no longer mastered by the brain, would continue dotting beyond the fifth.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

At a luncheon recently held by a Brooklyn woman the salad course consisted of chopped celery with mayonnaise dressing served in a basket formed by deftly scooping out the pulp from a large, firm tomato. In the center of each basket was a tiny sprig of celery top.

White has not been so popular in years as now. It takes the lead in evening gowns, and much jeweled net and brilliant passementerie are used for its decoration. Green spangles on white are among the newest decorative devices.

The demand for fancy stockings, especially lace ones, has brought to the market a great variety of those dainty articles which are very reasonable in price. This grade of goods is also found with silk inserted in the instep.

The Highest Art.

The word "artistic" has been so misapplied that the majority of people suppose it means something rather disorderly and haphazard. How often literature gives us the prim, precise maiden aunt, with her narrow, intense love of exact outline, and the art loving niece, all on fire with raptures over "color harmonies" and contempt for everything which is not picturesque! Let us give our sympathy, however, to the derided aunt. Craze for color is a lower degree of the sense of beauty than appreciation of symmetrical arrangement. Sculpture is a finer achievement of the intellect than painting. Savages and ignorant children can take pleasure in color display, but only an educated mind is moved through effects of form. —Florence Hull Winterburn in Woman's Home Companion.

The Japanese Minister's Wife.

Mme. Takahira, the wife of the new Japanese minister to this country, is a woman of many attractions and fine education. She has a beautiful complexion, large and expressive eyes and a quantity of glossy black hair. She dresses in American style, with perfect taste, and her jewelry is remarkably fine. She is a member of a noble family and was educated at one of the best schools for women in Japan. She was married in 1887 and has since accompanied her husband upon his various diplomatic missions, which have at different times taken him to China, The Hague, Rome, Vienna as well as to the United States.

By a recent ruling of the courts an American girl who marries a foreigner becomes a citizen of that country to which her husband owes allegiance.

LOOKING AND SEEING.

THERE IS A VAST DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THESE TWO ACTS.

It Is Important to Cultivate the Power of Observation Even In Ordinary Things—A Faculty Possessed by All, but Developed by Few.

It is the hope and desire of all parents that their children shall make some sort of a mark in the world when they grow up. They do not in the majority of cases expect that their offspring will become famous and make names that will live for ages, but they cherish the thought that they will be successful men and women in some profession or business. That is the keynote, that success shall be their portion.

Yet it is a fact that most parents neglect or pay very little attention to one part of the child's education which is of the highest importance. They do not train the perceptive faculties.

Power of observation will help you more than anything else in your struggle for existence, and yet there are comparatively few people who are keen observers. One small fact will prove this latter statement. The man who observes everything, he who sees everything he looks at, is singled out either as an inquisitive person or a clever one, and this shows that he is an exception.

It is easy to give instances of this lack of perception even in the ordinary things of life. Some years ago an artist engaged in a London firm of printers had to draw an advertisement in which the central figure was a cock in the act of crowing. Nothing seemed easier, but when he set to work the artist found himself confronted by a difficulty—does the cock show its tongue prominently when it crows? Every one of the hundred men employed by the firm had seen a cock crow scores of times, yet not one of them could answer the question. The artist had to go to a friend who kept fowls and chase the poor rooster round and round the yard until it crowed.

A schoolmaster, wishing to test the perception of his boys, asked them how many times they had seen a cow or pictures of that animal and found, as he had expected, that all the boys had seen the creature more times than they could remember. Then he offered to give small prizes to the boys who could correctly answer this question, "Are a cow's ears above, below, in front of or behind its horns?" Only two boys gained prizes, and theirs was guesswork.

Now sit down and test yourself in some such simple manner. You have all seen a horse "down." Can you describe how it rises? Does it get up on its fore feet first and then on its hind feet or does it kneel first, then get on its hind feet and finally on its fore feet?

However, you need not confine yourself to the animal kingdom in testing your perceptive faculties. Many subjects will suggest themselves to you on reflection.

As an excuse for this want of observation it is often urged that "a man can't know everything," but the excuse is a bad one. There is a great difference between knowing little or nothing and knowing everything. When the faculty has been trained, it requires no more effort to note the points of the object looked at than it does to glance at that same object and come away none the wiser.

The chances of success in life are on the side of the man who knows certain things because he has learned about them by using his senses instead of having to go to a book for all that he wishes to know. Books are indispensable, as there are so many things which cannot come within the range of our observation; but, wherever possible, we should use our senses to acquire knowledge at first hand.

This will explain why men who cannot read or write have built up substantial businesses. They have made use of the power possessed by all, but cultivated by very few.

The perceptive faculty must be trained during childhood and youth. After the completion of the twentieth year very little progress can be made. A grown man is unable to develop his powers of observation to any satisfactory degree. Youth is full of energy, and that is the time to inculcate the lesson that we should see all that our eyes rest upon.

It should be the object of every parent to teach his child to note every object that comes in his way. When out for a walk in a park, the child should be told to observe the shapes of the leaves on the different trees, the paling of the color of animals toward the under part of the body and so on and should be told that when asked a question on the subject he must be prepared to say that it is so, not that he thinks it is.

All children have inquiring minds, and after a walk or two, coupled with such instruction as we have mentioned, you will find the child making great progress and acquiring a quality that will be invaluable to him in after life.

One of the methods adopted by Houdin, the conjurer, for quickening the perception of his son was to make him walk rapidly past a shop window or a stall on which a number of articles were displayed and then write down a list of the objects noticed. At first only half a dozen articles were perceived during the moment occupied in passing the store or window, but after having done it once a day for a month the boy was able to make a list of 40 objects.—Pearson's Weekly.

Coffee as a beverage had a slight start of tea in London, for the first coffee house was opened about the year 1652.

Palmer and Douglas.

General John M. Palmer was fond of telling the amusing circumstances under which he first met Stephen A. Douglas. During the summer of 1838, with a desire to see more of the world, he started out to peddle clocks in western Illinois. One evening Palmer and a friend stopped at a little inn at Carthage and were awakened at night with the explanation that they would have to take two men into their beds.

One of the newcomers asked the politics of Palmer and his companion.

"My friend is a Whig," said Palmer, "and I am a Democrat."

"Well, you take the Whig," said the stranger to his companion, "and I'll turn in with the Democrat."

In the morning Palmer learned that his bedfellow was Douglas.

Pack of Cards—Prayer Book and Bible.

A private soldier named Richard Lee was taken before a magistrate for playing cards during service. It appears a sergeant commanded the soldiers at church, and when the parson had read the prayers he took the text. Those who had a Bible took it out, but this soldier had neither Bible nor common prayer book, but pulling out a pack of cards he spread them before him. He just looked at one card and then at another. The sergeant of the company saw him and said:

'Richard, put up the cards, this is no place for them.'

'Never mind that,' said Richard.

When the service was over the constable took Richard before the mayor.

'Well, what have you brought the soldier here for?' says the mayor.

'For playing cards in church.'

'Well, soldier, what have you to say for yourself?'

'Much sir, I hope.'

'Very good. If not I will punish you more than man was ever punished.'

'I have been,' said the soldier, 'about six weeks on the march. I have neither Bible nor common prayer book. I have nothing but a pack of cards and I'll satisfy your worship of the purity of my intentions.'

And spreading the cards before the mayor, he began with the ace: 'When I see the ace, it reminds me there is but one God. When I see the deuce, it reminds me of Father and Son. When I see the tray, it reminds me of Father, Son and Holy Ghost. When I see the four spot, it reminds me of the four evangelists that preached, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. When I meet the five, it reminds me of the five wise virgins that trimmed their lamps—there were ten, but five were wise, and five were foolish and were cast out. When I see the six, it reminds me that in six days God made heaven and earth. When I see the seven, it reminds me on the seventh day he rested from the great work he had created and hallowed it. The eight reminds me of the eight righteous persons that were saved when God destroyed the world, viz: Noah and his wife, with three sons and three wives. When I see the nine, it reminds me of the nine lepers who were cleansed by our Saviour, there were nine out of ten who never returned thanks. When I see the ten, it reminds me of the ten commandments which were handed down to Moses on tablets of stone. When I see the king I am reminded of the King of Heaven, which is God Almighty. When I see the queen, I am reminded of the Queen of Sheba, for she was as wise a woman as Solomon was a man. She brought with her fifty boys and fifty girls, all dressed in boys' apparel, for King Solomon to tell which were boys and which were girls. King Solomon sent for water for them to wash; the girls washed to their elbows and the boys to the wrists, so King Solomon told by that.'

'Well,' said the mayor, 'you have given a good description of all the cards except one.'

'What is that?'

'The knave,' said the mayor.

'I will give your honor a description of that too, if you will not be angry.'

'I will not,' said the mayor, 'if you do not term me to be the knave.'

'Well,' said the soldier, 'the greatest knave that I know is the constable who brought me here.'

'I do not know,' said the mayor, 'that he is the greatest knave, but I know he is the greatest fool.'

'When I count how many spots there are in a pack of cards, I find 365, as many days as there are in a year. On counting the number of cards in a pack, I find 52, the number of weeks in a year, and I find four suits, the number of weeks in a month. I find there are 12 picture cards, representing the number of months in a year, and on counting the number of tricks I find 13, the number of weeks in a quarter. So you see, sir, a pack of cards serves for a Bible, an almanac and a common prayer book.'

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

With LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

Distance and Dancing.

A physician with a mind for statistics has been estimating the distance covered by a woman in dancing through the ordinary ball room programme, says an exchange. An average waltz, the doctor estimates, takes one over three quarters of a mile. A square dance makes you cover half a mile, the same distance is covered by the polka, while a rapid galop will oblige you to traverse just about a mile. Say there are twelve waltzes, which is a fair average—these alone make nine miles.

Three galops added to this make the distance twelve miles, while from three to five other dances, at a half mile each, bring up the total to from thirteen to fifteen miles, this, too, without reckoning the promenade and the extras.

"As a means of exercise," says the physician, "it will thus be seen that dancing stands at the head of the list. In golf, for instance, the major part of the exercise consists in walking around the links, following up the ball, and yet even in golf not so much ground is covered as in an evening's dancing."

One of our Hillsdale ladies recently had an experience with her Swede girl that would be exasperating if it were not so ridiculous. She wanted to wash her lace curtains herself and told her girl to wake her up the next morning early if it was pleasant and did not rain. "But," she patiently explained, "if it is rainy, you understand, I won't need to get up so early, for of course, I could not put them out." The next morning she was awakened at an early hour by the girl who exclaimed, "Oh, Mrs. B. you no need to vake up for it vas raining." Patience has since ceased to be a virtue and the girl has a new place.—Hillsdale Standard.

The Pocketless.

For many moons the pocketless woman has been ridiculed and maligned and held up to scorn for carrying her pocketbook in her hand, but a scene on a cable car a few days ago convinced one man that she had a reasonable excuse for her condition. A woman with a pocket entered the car, and her struggles to find it compelled the assistance of every other woman within reach. The conductor waited for her fare. She searched the folds of her gown until she grew red with the exertion; then she stood and made frantic dives at every part of her skirt beyond her line of vision. Then she turned, almost weeping with mortification, as she saw the wild interest she was exciting, to a young woman beside her, saying desperately, "Will you please help me to find my pocket?" The young woman good naturedly complied, soon a second lent a hand, and finally the pocket was located triumphantly by feeling the pocketbook. Even then it required several minutes to find the opening, and when at last the pocketbook was extracted a sigh of relief went through the car.

We admire the independence of a western poet who says in a preface to his volume: "If the critics don't like this book, I wish to say to them that I do. If they tear it to tatters, I shall pick up the pieces and embark in the plastering business. I am here to stay, and you bet I've made up my mind to it."—Atlanta Constitution.

She Revolted.

Apropos of things to eat out in the center of the state they have a good sized man and woman's club which meets monthly at the different homes, and the rock it came near splitting on was the question of refreshments. One lady must not make a lavish display which would cast another lady's hospitality in the shade. It was decided that coffee and sandwiches should be the limit at every house, but there was one generous housekeeper who persisted in serving cold fowl or lobster salad. A committee had to call upon her to remonstrate. But she stood firm.

"Is it sandwiches? Not I!" quoth that valiant woman. "Sandwiches! If you serve them good and fresh—and there'll be no other in my house, I can tell you—sandwiches mean heaps of trouble. Some one has got to be cutting and spreading bread at the last minute. Some one, or, more likely, some two, will be busy with sandwiches to make for a hundred people. And No. 3 would be boiling the coffee and No. 4 seeing to the table and all the little things that need looking after. No, ma'am; no. I don't keep a whole retinue of servants. I can have my fowl roasted the day before or I can have my salad dressing made early in the morning and kept on ice ready for mixing, when wanted, in 15 minutes. But sandwiches—fresh, thin slices of bread that dry almost as fast as you cut them—I'd rather resign from the club."

It was "the revolt of mother" in earnest. The committee gave up its point and went away impressed with the fact that what appears most simple is frequently most elaborate.—Chicago Post.

The Payment He Asked.

Mme. Meissonier, the wife of the noted French artist, evidently was not overabundantly supplied with tact. It is told of her that one day she sent for the family physician, and he hurried over to the house, thinking some illness had overtaken the artist. It was not the master of the house, however. It was only the lapdog. The doctor pocketed his pride and most zealously attended the patient, which soon recovered. At the end of the year he sent in his bill, but among the items there was none for attendance on a dog. Mme. Meissonier noticed the omission and called the physician's attention to it.

"You must charge for that also," she said. "I insist upon it."

"By no means," was the reply. "I am not a veterinary surgeon. I was very glad to the dog a service, but really I can't be paid for it."

"But I insist upon it!" said the lady.

"Well, then," returned the doctor, "as the hinges on my gate are somewhat rusty M. Meissonier may bring his brush and paint them for me."

But Meissonier in the role of a gate painter is not known to history.

BY THE LYCH GATE

A Story of One Who Married For Wealth and Beauty.

There is a valley amid the Yorkshire hills known as Coverdale, from whose slopes, long years ago, came pious Miles, who translated the Bible, and who was called by the simple folk Miles of Coverdale, after the place of his birth.

Very calm and peaceful the little dale lies under the shadow of the great hills, whose summits are purple in the sweet summertide with their royal mantle of fragrant heather, and where the curlew and the golden plover's cry alone break the gentle stillness that rests over the little world beyond the haunts of restless activity and hurrying life.

There is no railway in quiet Coverdale, no town to which the country folk may wend their way, no shops save the wonderful village emporium, where everything in a very small way may be obtained, but where few fashions come to startle the gayer minded of the maidens, or strange new devices in neckties to dazzle the vision of the country lads.

To peep into the world necessitates a journey under the shelter of the lone hillsides, along bonny lanes, intwined with pink and creamy tinted honeysuckle, and green with waving ferns; past the quaint inn, whose sign is a famous but long ago race horse, called in the canny Yorkshire tongue the Lady Bab, and, finally, across the moor into horse loving Middleham, where are people and shops, and many inns with curiously painted signposts—the Black Swan and its brother, the White Swan, and many others too.

But down in Coverdale there is a beautiful old church, set like a jewel in its surrounding of stately trees and blossoming hedges, with the quiet greenness of God's acre lying stretched about it, and the singing of nature's choristers in the sweet air around—a place of peacefulness and repose, where earth's burdens may fall from one for a little space and heaven's benison light softly on such of its children as stay to pray and think awhile.

There is a quaint lych gate at the entrance to the holy spot, a carved halting place of oak, set tenderly by some good man of the dalespeople—a squire of the olden days, who loved his home and his neighbors and his God full well, I think, and sought to beautify the church in which he and his had worshiped so long.

And down the fair avenue of trees within the precincts and past the quiet church lie the remains of what was once the proud abbey of Coverdale, where the monks said masses and cultivated their garden and tended the souls and bodies of the poor and needy in the dale.

It is a beautiful spot in a beautiful countryside, and so thought a man who viewed it lovingly and pointed out all its changeful lights and shadows and all its pretty peeps of field and river to his wife.

They had only been married a little while, a few short weeks, and had elected to spend their honeymoon in some of the quaint corners of England; hence their journeying thither to this sequestered nook among the hills and the far stretched moorlands in their veiling of regal purple. The man loved it already with the artist love which sees the beautiful so quickly and feels it so strongly, and the woman—well she saw the beauties, too, but she was growing a little weary of pretty sights and she was very pretty and spoiled herself and perhaps a little jealous of admiration wasted which might have been diverted homeward.

So she stood by the quaint relics of the abbots and mailed knights at Coverdale, where two quaint forms guard a doorway as perchance their originals guarded some stronghold in the old fighting days long gone, and her white gown fell over the gray stones and gleamed against the red and orange nasturtiums in the garden which surrounds the old walls and arches, and she wondered if her husband had nearly finished his sketch and whether they should stay at Middleham for a day or two or go on farther to Wensleydale.

"I am rather tired of admiring places," she said to herself a little impatiently, "and, then, I never can remember who lived in the castles and abbeys. How uncomfortable they must have been!"

And then—for she was only a very young bride, too—she felt sorry for having been impatient, even in her thoughts, toward her husband, and she turned to speak to him with an even sweeter smile than usual on her pretty lips, for her husband was a genius in his way, a thinker and an author, and every one had envied her when she married him in spite of her wealth.

Ah, there was a pitiful ring in the story—poor and nameless, but clever; beating himself to pieces in his eager attempts to win fame single handed, and rich and beautiful the woman with the fairylike figure and exquisite face who had given the man her gold.

And, ah, a more pitiful note still, and the man remembers that some one has once long ago talked of this very spot, with its quaint surroundings and its old world atmosphere, in the time that might have been and is not.

He closed his sketchbook, with a sigh, and turned to the white robed loveliness of his wife with a murmured apology for having kept her waiting, and then together they passed down the avenue that leads to the road again.

But he was very silent, and his wife felt tired and just a little cross. She liked to be petted and coaxed and flattered, and latterly Wilfred had been too serious to suit her gay fancies and too absorbed in new ideas for his book to pay her the attentions she loved so dearly to exact from every man and especially from her husband.

"Let us go home to town," she said suddenly. "I am so tired of roaming in this out of the way place, Wilfred, and there is still so much going on, I hear. You must have got lots of ideas now sure." She laughed glee- The murmur of the ady in her ears, and jewels came over you not you would be interested in them, I think."

But she shook her head until the diamonds in her little ears twinkled like dewdrops. "You know I am not interested," she said petulantly. "I hate those old people who perched castles on the tops of hills and expect you to climb up to see them. Do let us go back."

They had reached the lych gate now, and a girl was entering it from the other side, where their carriage—his wife's carriage—with its beautiful bays, stood waiting. The sunlight fell on her quiet black gown and her soft hair as she passed under the quaint oaken structure, and then she lifted her eyes, and a sudden light flashed into them and then died very gently again.

The man's face grew white in the shadow of the leafy elms, but his wife chattered on in her high, pretty voice and noticed nothing of his pallor. And then, as they met, he advanced quietly to meet the girl as quietly as if they had never parted in bitter, bitter sorrow, the one brave and ready to sacrifice herself for his sake, the other, as he said to himself bitterly enough, a coward and a craven. And now they met again in the soft sunshine of the autumn day, with the first few leaves falling, golden tinted, from the trees around, with the blue, bright sky overhead and the purling of a little stream somewhere near, under the old gateway that leads to the house of prayer.

She spoke to him very calmly and quietly, and he introduced her to his lovely wife, and she told the stranger at once in her pretty, petulant voice of her wish to go back to town and its gayeties, only Wilfred wouldn't, he was so cross.

But the girl smiled so gently and spoke so soothingly that the little lady's wrath melted away, and she laughed like a merry child and straightway invited her new friend to pay them a visit in town.

"We will go tomorrow, won't we, Wilfred?" she said laughingly, and the grave faced man answered that her will was law.

"Yes; we will go tomorrow," he said when the girl had answered that she never went to town now. Her father was old and needed her care, and she was quite content with her life in the still countryside.

"I have him, and he has me," she said, with her peaceful smile, and the laughing woman before her could not guess and would never have realized that this gentle faced girl had loved the man beside her with all her heart and soul and had passed through the deep waters alone with her sorrow to take up her life again bravely and well.

And then one of the beautiful horses claimed the pretty wife's attention, and she went hurriedly on, leaving the two together for a brief moment in the sunshine of the old gate.

"Forgive me, Enid!" he said brokenly. "Ah, I have wronged you so, and I deserve your hatred, but forgive me if you can!"

His face was haggard, and his lips whitened and trembled as he spoke the few strained words.

But she laid her hand in his very gently, as if to say goodby to a dear, dear friend forever. "I have forgiven you, dear," she said. "I may call you that for this one last time? I have forgiven you everything, and God keep you, keep you safely and lead you aright!" She paused, and the great tears rose in her calm eyes and rolled down the pale cheeks. She loved him so well still, and the meeting and the parting were very hard to bear.

And then, with one last look, she passed on into the loneliness of the still graveyard and the quiet dead.—Exchange.

Abyssinians Expert at Thatching.

In describing Abyssinia and its strange capital a writer in Pearson's tells of its mushroom growth as follows: A crowd of workers appears with loads of sticks some 12 feet high. These are planted in the ditch to erect the walls, and a few more sticks are twisted in and out to keep them together. Now comes the preparation of the roof. A number of men climb up inside and bind together more sticks like the frame of an umbrella. As soon as these are in position they clamber outside like monkeys and set to work to thatch. For this purpose they bring great bundles of hay and twine it between the sticks. They are not an artistic nation, and they have next to no industries, but at thatching they are really expert, and they turn out work which would call for admiration even in a civilized country. They do not trouble to produce an elegant finish, but this often adds to the picturesqueness of a cottage.

Quick Witted.

"It was simply an exhibition of nerve and quick wit," said the old banker who was dining at his club with a number of friends. "No one but the paying teller knew what was happening at the time, and what might have been a tragedy was turned into a comedy by his quick wit.

"During the noon hour one day an old man approached the paying teller and presented a check for $1,000,000. With it was a badly written letter to the effect that if the immediate payment of the check was not forthcoming the teller would have his head blown off. He was nothing but a crank, but he had come armed for business, and if the wit of the paying teller had failed him for an instant there might have been a tragedy. But the paying teller coolly took up the check, glanced at it and then handed it back with the remark that the crank had neglected to put a stamp upon it. In an instant the crank was full of apologies at his oversight and departed to get a stamp. It took but a moment to notify the police, and the crank was put where there is no danger of his demanding the payment of any more $1,000,000 checks at the point of a gun."—Detroit Free Press.

The "women, especially those of the upper classes, have a grace and fascination that is all their own." The writer adds: "I am tired of hearing English people say that this is all show and that if I knew them better I should be greatly disappointed. THE AFTER DINNER NAP.

A Custom Based on Sound Hygienic Principles.

One of the institutions—institutions is a good, all purpose word—that should be revived, maintained and, where necessary, established in the world is the after dinner nap. In a savage or noncivilized state of society man sleeps when he is sleepy and eats when he is hungry. As he becomes enlightened and artificial he limits and defines himself in such matters. He divides the days into mealtime and defers sleep until work is done and all the places are closed up. His health is supposed to be preserved by his eating at this hour and that and his sleeping at the other. It is worthy of remark that, with all this regulation, insomnia and indigestion are diseases of civilization.

Since the era of regulation began the most natural and sensible rule, and at one time almost universal in this country, is that dividing the hours of day by three meals, called respectively breakfast, dinner and supper, the first soon after rising in the morning, the second at noon and the third in the evening. Breakfast naturally follows sleep, dinner is the heaviest meal and comes after a half day's toil to repair damages and fortify for another half day, and supper comes when, in the evening, in more ways than one, the swallows homeward fly and is the social meal of the day. This is the old and proper order, which has been deviated from of late years by placing luncheon at midday and postponing dinner till dark or even later, a system for which no such philosophical reasons can be given as for the old plan.

When the world was older than it is now and more leisurely and less bent on driving itself into paralysis, locomotor ataxia, paresis, hypochondria, dyspepsia, softening of the brain and insanity, in the original plan of life the dinner, the midday meal, was followed by a sleep, commonly called a nap. Nature's gentle hint to sleep was followed, and from this the sleeper arose strengthened and refreshed to complete the labors of the day. The custom was found among the larger and important quadrupeds, and there are traces of it in the oldest historical records.

In warm countries and among Latin people the midday sleep has never been broken in upon. All the Spanish people and their derivations call it the siesta. It is observed in all their countries with more faithfulness than any of the articles of religon. After the family dinner, at which all eat, all sleep. The merchant shuts up his store, the lawyer his office, the gambler lays down his hand, whatever it is, and all lay them down to sleep. This is generally regarded, even by the northern people, as a good thing in a hot country and for the dark people. It may be added further that the siesta in any country where the sun shines and for any people is a good thing.

The sleep allowance which the most highly enlightened people crowd into the night alone is frequently a few hours, and that is not enough. It is not the allowance suggested by nature and must be increased. It is full of devils of blue and other tints and nightmares, and tires rather than refreshes. The sleep proposed by old fashioned nature after a good dinner was the real thing and should never have been abandoned. It helped tired nature in a good time and pieced out, as it were, the night.

As men and women grow old and are excused from active toil and are remanded to the summer porch or winter fireside, it is noticed that they slumber in their chairs even in broad day. It is the voice of Mother Nature saying to them, "Sleep, old friends, sleep on, and take the rest you should have taken long ago." When the world has wiser grown, less furiously energetic, less morbidly avaricious, less painfully and fantastically industrious, less intent on success or the madhouse, it may be that it will return to the older and simpler ways and the noonday sleep. Americans may learn its value and necessity in their wide tropical possessions, and sunstroke, now a great American specialty, will be known no more.—Kansas City Star.

Pariah Dogs Have Territorial Rules.

Perhaps the most interesting and curious fact concerning the Constantinople dogs is that they live in distinct quarters. All the streets in Constantinople are divided up into separate dog quarters, which are inhabited by sets of dogs varying from perhaps 10 or 20 in number. The frontiers of each quarter are known only to the dogs themselves, though one can get to know them by noticing how far a dog will follow one when enticed by some food. Each separate colony guards its territory with the utmost vigilance, and these same creatures, which seem so indifferent to all that goes on around them, will at once jump up and bark at any strange dog that encroaches upon their territory, and should the intruder persist they will set upon him and chase him out again. One wonders how the demarcation of these quarters was first arrived at.

The average man will pay 50 cents to see a show of fireworks and neglect to look at the sunset, which he can see almost every night for nothing.—Louisville Journal.

Mr and Mrs. Bitner, of Toledo, are guests of E. Ogden and wife.

Miss Myra Turner, of Monroe, was a guest of Mrs. Ed. Martin last week.

A bright baby girl came to the home of Cassius Fisk and wife Christmas day.

Miss Alice Cutting, of Tecumseh, was a Sunday visitor of Maude and Cora King.

Dr M C. Reeves and family spent New Years day with his mother at Ann Arbor.

Dr. and Mrs. S. Chandler, of Saline, were guests of Fred Koernig and wife Sunday.

The Missionary Guild met at the home of Christine Burton Monday evening.

Millard Hunter and wife, of Adrian, are moving into the Kies house on Washington street.

Miss Bertha Smeltzer, of Tecumseh, is a guest at the home of Mrs. Jennie Hall for a few days.

Mrs. Goodyear and daughter, of Manchester, were guests of Miss Esther Matthews Saturday.

Miss Belle Pennock, of Williamston, was a guest of Mrs. Chas. Silvers the latter part of the week.

Mrs. Abbie Fisher, of Tecumseh, and Mrs I. D. Loree, of Ann Arbor, came Monday for a few days' visit with Mrs. E. S. Tate.

Dr. M. C. Reeves expects to leave soon for Tuscan, Arizona, where he will remain until the first of June hoping to receive benefit of the change for catarrhal trouble.

The I. O. O. F. initiated members at at their rooms Monday evening. The Tecumseh brethren were present and a banquet was served sometime during the night. A pleasant time reported.

About 40 couple attended the mid-holiday party Friday night. The hall was appropriately decorated with holly, Japanese lanterns, etc., the ladies prettily gowned and the gentlemen thoroughly gallant. The music, furnished by Jackson's orchestra of Adrian, was excellent and that it was appreciated by the dancers was made evident by their hearty encores. Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Yocum, Abbie Chase and Marie Miller, of Manchester, and Sam McClure, of Tecumseh.

GAIN FLESH

An Absolute Necessity in Many Cases.

A DECREASE IN WEIGHT FREQUENTLY INDICATES A DECLINE.

Our Modern Rebuilder, Vinol, Will Help You Do It.

THE WAY IT ACTS ON A DEPLETED CONSTITUTION IS SIMPLY MARVELOUS.

Are you getting thin? If you are you had better watch yourself. Take Vinol. It will build you up quickly and surely.

A healthy man does not vary much from year to year in his weight. This is as it should be. Vinol enables the organs of the body to renew flesh, muscle tissue, bone structure, and attends to purifying the great vital current of the human system, the blood.

Vinol contains the active curative properties of Cod-Liver Oil in a highly concentrated state, and is the most wonderful tonic that we have ever had anything to do with.

Vinol acts upon the stomach in a beneficial way, enabling it to obtain for itself the necessary ingredients from the food that is taken into it to build up the pure healthy body and increase the weight.

Mr. H. M. Stufell, who is a well-known passenger trainman on the Boston and Maine Railroad, suffered, as many railroad men do, with kidney and other troubles. He writes as follows:

"My kidneys troubled me a great deal, my bowels were very irregular, I had great distress in my stomach, suffered with bilious headaches, had no appetite, could not sleep nights, and was losing flesh rapidly. I began to take Vinol, I am now on my third bottle, and it is doing wonders for me. My kidneys are better, my bowels are again regular, my stomach no longer troubles me, and no more headaches, and as for appetite, don't speak of it; I sleep like a top and have gained thirteen pounds. You can count on me always to recommend Vinol as the king of medicines."

With many such testimonials as the above coming before us, it is not strange that we endorse Vinol as strongly as we do. We unhesitatingly agree to return to any one who has taken Vinol and is not satisfied that it has accomplished all that we claim for it every cent that they have paid us for this remedy.

Michigan's New Governor Sends Inaugural Message to the Legislature.

ADVISES PRACTICE OF ECONOMY.

What He Has to Say Concerning Reform in the Tax Laws of the State.

MONEY FOR STATE INSTITUTIONS.

Short Session of the Legislature Suggested—Other Subjects of Special Interest.

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives:

Michigan enters upon the long highway of the twentieth century in the van of the procession of the states of this great republic. Yours, gentlemen of the Forty-first legislature, is the distinction of being the first legislative assembly of this century. I trust your record will commend you each and all to the good graces of the people whom you serve and in whose behalf you legislate. It is my privilege, as governor, to address you on this occasion, and as we read the glorious history of this peninsular state we know there has been put upon us a burden of responsibility by reason of the position to which we have been elected. I believe we shall acquit ourselves as men; that we shall bear in mind at all times that every officer and employe of the state is a public servant.

The problems of state management presenting themselves to the Forty-first legislature being chiefly non-political, require in their solution the same kind of common sense used in the ordinary dispatch of business. Michigan is prosperous, its people well employed, and the great strides taken in development point to a future of diversified industries. In the way of legislation nothing should be done tending in the least to impede the progress or to hinder the welfare of the state. Reason and not prejudice should be the guide.

Standing upon its record of progress and prosperity, Michigan, at the beginning of the twentieth century, faces the most splendid decade in its history. The state expects at your hands an honest and decisive settlement of the taxation question, so that the people, assured justice has triumphed, may devote themselves in security to the pursuits of business and the earning of a livelihood.

Reform in Tax Laws.

I ask the legislature to give its careful attention to the tax laws, so that every dollar's worth of property shall bear its fair and equal proportion of the public burdens. If there are wrongs in taxation, they should be corrected. As a Republican governor, I urge that the party pledges be carried out, to the end that all property may be taxed equally, believing that under perfected state supervision of taxation there will come an end to the inequalities that have prevailed. There is no better way to secure the interests of the people than by legislation which does equal and exact justice to all.

Believing that the people desire that all property now paying specific taxes shall be assesssed in like manner with other property, I recomend that the legislature provide the necessary machinery for the assessment and collection of taxes on this property upon an ad valorem basis. There should be no hasty consideration of this important question, however, for the interest of hundreds of millions of property is no slight one. It is not necessary to rehearse the steps that have been taken in legislation of this kind, for the duty devolving upon us is plain, and we should discharge it and properly acquit ourselves of our obligations.

At the hands of the Fortieth legislature certain railroad charters were repealed, and I recommend that this legislature satisfy itself before adjournment that no further legislation is needed to make absolutely sure that these special charters have disappeared from Michigan.

One of the most important problems in the administration of the state government is the increasing cost of the state institutions and the growing demand for the multiplying of these great public works. There are two horns to the dilemma, either greater appropriations or the paternal and philanthropic work of the state must come to a partial halt. Under the system of taxation in vogue, only real estate and personal property are assessed to meet the expenses of the state. The proceeds of taxation from what are now known as "specific tax properties" are distributed through the primary school fund and applied for school purposes. The use of primary school interest money is prohibited for other purposes than the payment of teachers' wages. Information collected by the retiring auditor general shows that in many districts the one mill tax added to the primary school money disbursed was in excess of the amount paid for teachers' wages all the way from 25 to 50 per cent. Should there be increased taxation of all the classes of property now paying specific taxes, the condition above stated will be made worse instead of better, and there will be no relief for the inequality now prevailing, the hands of the legislature being tied just as firmly as before. Why will it not be better to set aside a per capita income for the primary school fund, devoting the excess of tax collected from the so-called "specific tax properties" to the general fund, and thereby relieve the property which alone contributes to the general fund at this time. If this proposition meets the view of the legislature, a constitutional amendment should be submitted limiting the amount the state is required to pay to the primary schools to some certain portion of the tax collected from the corporations now paying specific taxes, the remainder to be covered into the general fund of the state.

Economy.

In calling your attention to economy in the conduct of public affairs, I advise the practice of an economy of the kind which appeals to every business man, farmer and householder. It is of no value to secure fair and equal assessments if the expenses of the state are not brought to an economical basis, and it should be borne in mind that appropriations regulate the tax rate. The appropriations should be such as will commend themselves to the people as necessary, and if the affairs of the comonwealth are conducted along this line the people will congratulate themselves upon having a wise government.

As a step in the direction of true economy, all my appointees are requested to remember Lansing is the established seat of government and that their offices must be maintained here as contemplated by law.

Short Session of the Legislature.

While not attempting in the least to interfere with the legislature, the advisability of a short session is suggested. There is apt to be too much instead of not enough legislation, and the longer the session the greater the tendency to add to the bulk of the statutes. A short session is in the interests of economy and the members of both house and senate will feel better satisfied with their records in a short session than in a long one. To the end that a business-like session may result, the abolishment of the so-called "general junket" is urged, substituting, when necessary, separate visits of the committees to the institutions they have in charge, making these visits during the fifty-day period for the introduction of bills. Experience has shown this can be done without interfering with the public business. There should be early consideration of the appropriation bills, and I appeal to the legislature to see that every effort, consistent with a wise regard for the interest of the institutions and of the taxpayers, is made to hasten final action on these bills. The executive will be found willing to confer with the committees of both houses, co-operating in every way possible to make these recommendations of practical benefit. Let every endeavor be made to see that legislation is framed so it will stand the test of the courts. Use the judiciary committees freely.

The Pan-American Exposition.

The Pan-American exposition will be held in Buffalo from May 1 to Nov. 1 this year. The social and trade relations of Michigan with the Empire state are of a very close and important character, and the daily interchange of products and general acquaintance among their business men, call for co-operation in making the exposition a success. Its scope is the progress of the countries of the western hemisphere and the new possessions of the United States. Its object is to bring about closer relationship, commercial and social, between the governments and dependencies of the western hemisphere, that the well-being of their people may be improved.

The exposition appeals to the commercial spirit of the nation, and for this reason will be notable in its history. It will put in close touch peoples who have hitherto been comparative strangers, and will be in line with the paramount commercial welfare of the United States. In all this Michigan has a vital concern because of her great manufacturing, agricultural and mining interests, and anything tending to increase her contact with the world must be of benefit. Leaving to the wisdom of the legislature the question of the amount which may be voted in aid of Michigan's exhibit, it is suggested that whatever action may be taken, should be with due regard to the importance of the state. In view of the brief time remaining, it is necessary immediate attention should be given.

Appropriations for State Institutions.

It is not intended at this time to get exhaustively into the matter of state institutions, reserving that subject for future consideration. The total of the appropriations deemed necessary for the maintenance and improvement of these institutions is sufficiently large to invite careful scrutiny. The following shows the aggregate of the proposed appropriations for 1901-1902, asked by the state institutions which report to the state board of corrections and charities, and the recommendations of the board thereon:

Michigan Asylum for the Insane at Kalamazoo, specials, $40,643.12; total, $40,643.12; approved, $40,643.12.

Eastern Michigan Asylum for the Insane at Pontiac, specials, $15,000.00; total, $15,000.00; approved, $15,000.00.

School for the Blind at Lansing, current expenses (for two years), $61,400.00; specials, $2,000.00; total, $63,400.00; approved, $63,400.00.

Home for the Feeble Minded and Epileptic at Lapeer, current expenses (for two years), $180,000.00; specials, $109,435.00; total, $289,435.00; approved $240,435.00; not approved, $49,000.00.

Michigan Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids, current expenses (for two years, $248,000.00; specials, $24,550.00; total, $272,550.00; approved, 272,550.00.

Totals, current expenses (for two years), $983,054.50; specials, $799,889.29; total, $1,782,943.79; approved, $1,621,576.79; not approved, $151,367.00.

Excepting the statement from the University of Michigan, that no special appropriations will be needed, and the explanation given elsewhere of the situation at the Agricultural college, the budgets for the state educational institutions are not available. The appropriations for the two-year term, ending June 30, 1901, show that these institutions received for all purposes from all sources $1,358,896.99, itemized as follows:

University of Michigan, $645,228.57; State Normal College, $170,469.54; Central Michigan Normal School, $93,000.00; Northern Michigan Normal School, $35,001.00; Agricultural College, $305,197.88; Michigan College of Mines, $110,000.00. Totals, $1,358,896.99.

I recommend that all state institutions, in addition to those now designated, be required to submit their budgets to the state board of corrections and charities for its opinion thereon.

Michigan Agricultural College.

The Michigan Agricultural college has become the right hand of the University of Michigan, being a people's college in every sense of the word. The state board of Agriculture claims the time has come when the college income should be no longer dependent upon the biennial session of the legislature. It claims that the college has proved its value and the people will be satisfied to have its support provided for by a system similar to that employed in behalf of the university. The object sought is a fixed income, so that the board may know year by year just what it may depend upon. During the last few years the college has made a phenomenal growth, having increased the number of its students threefold. Naturally this has resulted in outgrowing the original accommodations provided for by a maximum attendance of two hundred. The board feels in strict justice there should be an ample appropriation to place the college in line with the large demands made upon it, but hesitates to ask for a sum equal to its necessities. The plan of a fixed income is recommended by the board, which asks for one-fifteenth of a mill, but if the legislature does not deem it advisable to make the change it ought, in justice to the institution, to examine with great care the situation presented, and consider the question with a view to the future of the college.

Asylums for the Insane.

The crowded condition of the asylums for the insane should receive careful consideration. Additional provision ought to be made at once for caring for the afflicted people who are seeking admission in such numbers. It has been suggested relief might be obtained by creating a new institution where the hopelessly insane could be cared for. The authorities do not agree upon this plan, however, and pending investigation of the results of such a system in other states, it may not be wise at this time to provide for an additional asylum. The present institutions are doing excellent work, and the advice of the state board of Corrections and charities is that additional provision be made at the asylums already established. It certainly is not advisable to long detain people in jails and almhouses awaiting admission to the asylums, when if promptly given attention they might be restored to health.

The state asylum, situated in Ionia, presents a problem for your consideration. One section of the asylum building is located on the north side of the river and the other on the south side. The question is, shall they be consolidated. Because of this division of the buildings, it is stated there is entailed a larger cost of maintenance, estimated at about $4,000 a year, and surveillance and general care of the inmates are rendered more difficult. Carrying out the consolidation project will require an appropriation estimated at $109,583.22, the chief item being the cost of a branch building for patients which is placed at $79,974.34. [illegible]ould the legislature decide against removal, the appropriation for buildings and furnishings actually needed is placed at $62,130.94.

State Public School.

The state public school for dependent and neglected children deserves well of the state. Provision ought to be made for the care of crippled dependent children, who, if admitted to the Coldwater institution, might stand a chance in life, while under the present law they are left to the demoralizing influences of the county house.

The Common School System.

In the common schools a large majority of the children are trained for life's service. There are 700,[illegible] pupils enumerated, and over one-half million of them receive instruction in the schools each year. The facilities for giving to this generation the best teachers possible should be strengthened. The state normal schools, which are now doing so much for the preparation of teachers, have not as yet been able to supply all the demands made upon them. Out of the 16,000 persons annually employed as teachers, fully one-fifth leave the ranks each year to engage in other pursuits, and the demand thus created is not as yet sufficiently met by the normal training facilities already provided. The legislature should carefully consider such recommendations made by the state board of education as are intended to aid school district officers to place in the school rooms of the state, teachers who are worthy to shape the destinies of the youth.

Prison for Women.

Your attention is called to the subject of a state prison for women. There is need of a prison or reformatory for the care of the incorrigibles whose presence in the industrial home for girls exerts an injurious influence upon others not so far advanced in the ways of wickedness. If the incorrigibles could be cared for elsewhere, there is ground for belief that the influence of the home in a reformatory way would be materially improved. Additional argument for the establishment of the proposed institution may be found in the fact that the state now farms out the care of women sentenced for violation of the criminal laws. The proposition to establish a prison for women is worthy of attention, because through favorable action the state will be taking a step in the direction of further coping with crime.

Supplies for State Institutions.

All things being equal, state institutions should be required to purchase their supplies in Michigan.

Supervising Architect.

The advisability of creating the office of supervising architect is submitted in the belief that it will be a business investment on the part of the state which the circumstances will warrant. This officer should have control of the preparation of plans for new state buildings and for all repairs and improvements. The state is growing, and the needs of its public institutions are keeping pace with the increase in population.

Fire Warden System.

There is great merit in the proposition that the legislature should enact a law creating a state fire warden system, seeking through such legislation to prevent in part at least the enormous destruction of property annually recorded for Michigan. If there is merit in the saying that a penny saved is a penny earned, then there is reason for legislation which is intended to prevent the loss of wealth to the state. It is argued that an efficient system of state supervision will aid in keeping fire insurance rates at the minimum.

The Forestry Problem.

Believing that Michigan cannot afford to lose its lumbering industry, I advise the legislature to give careful attention to the work of the forestry commission, and enact whatever legislation may be needed to bring about the most beneficial results. The general idea has been to take steps for growing timber on abandoned tax lands, now relatively worthless. It is of the utmost importance, before Michigan takes hold of the problem of reforestation upon her lands, that she have unquestionable title to them. New York seems to have solved this part of the problem effectually and satisfactorily. The commission will recommend similar action with regard to Michigan state tax lands. It will also suggest methods of strengthening fire and trespass laws, and will ask for more authority in connection with these two last important features of the forest problem. The state is in need of a distinct forest policy, and this means the providing of the necessary funds for initiating and carrying it out. There is no more important problem before the state today, looking toward the future of the commonwealth, than the one the Michigan forestry commission has been asked to assist in solving.

Changes in Penal Laws.

The report of the state board of corrections and charities, dealing with recommendations for changes in the penal laws, is worthy of especial consideration. The conclusion is inevitable that under the present laws scores of convicts are annually discharged from prison before there is any reasonable evidence they are again fitted to mingle in society. Under the supreme court ruling it is unconstitutional to impose indeterminate sentences, as was attempted under a law enacted by the legislature of 1889. The constitution should be amended to permit the re-enactment of that law. The legislature may profitably give its attention to the question of providing for what may properly be called "parole before sentence," a system in use in some states, whereby first offenders are released on probation. Experience has shown that the parole system has done great good in this state, and if after sentence, why not before? The system of probation cost Massachusetts about $60,000 a year, and it is estimated that the lowest possible saving to the taxpayers over the cost had the probationers been imprisoned was about $70,000 a year. If adopted in this state, the supervision of probationers might be left with the county agents of the state board of corrections and charities.

The law should be amended so that the state house of correction and reformatory of Ionia will be a place for the detention of first offenders only.

Measures should be taken to compel the absolute separation of prisoners in jails, and the abandonment of the practice of using county jails as city lock-ups.

Regulation of Transportation Service.

Your attention is called to the recommendation of the commissioner of railroads that electric railroads should be brought under the full jurisdiction of that department, a course he deems especially advisable in the cases of suburban and interurban companies. The argument is that, inasmuch as they are assuming full railroad functions, it is necessary the state should have the same control over them it has over the steam roads. His suggestion is that the best way to bring about this result will be by a thorough revision of the train-railway act. The [illegible] of the regulation of freight [illegible] safety appliances, of depot an[illegible] facilities and the abandon[illegible] road stations, of high[illegible] with particular [illegible] separation of [illegible] the fullest pub[illegible] should have the careful attention of the legislature.

Anti-Trust Law.

The Fortieth legislature placed upon the statute books a measure designed to destroy all combinations of capital which tend to restrict competition in business, to create monopolies, to limit production or to control prices. Believing in the spirit of this law, if there are any amendments needed to make it fit more exactly the conditions, I recommend that they be incorporated in the law.

Pure Food Laws.

The pure food laws of Michigan have resulted in largely guarding the people against adulterated food, and if this legislature, in its wisdom, deems best to still further strengthen those statutes, it should be done. People are entitled to know they are getting what it is represented to them they are buying, and any legislation tending to make this more certain is a step in the right direction.

Treasury Department.

It is of practical interest to note that whereas the retiring state treasurer, on the occasion of his inauguration to office Jan. 1, 1897, found practically a depleted treasury, yesterday he turned over to his successor something over one and a quarter millions of dollars. The existence of this large fund, as far as available, ought to bring some relief in the way of decreased taxation for state purposes.

Co-operation with Departments.

The suggestion has been made, and it seems a very good one, that the legislature and the departments of the state government should keep in touch with each other, so that all proposed legislation requiring for its execution the co-operation of one or more state departments should not reach the stage of third reading until the department or departments which will be required to execute the law have been consulted concerning the administrative features of the bill.

Expenses of State Officers.

Your attention is directed to the recommendation of the retiring auditor general that a change be made in the laws for the payment of expenses of the various state officers, agents, boards and commissioners from "actual and necessary expenses" to a per diem and mileage account to cover all expenses, under proper certification that the travel is necessary. It is believed this will be a saving to the state and will place the auditing of this class of accounts upon a much more definite and satisfactory basis.

Insurance Department.

It seems advisable that the question of salaries in the insurance department should be brought to a business basis. The people have the right to know the exact compensation their public servants receive, and for this reason compensation in this department should be fully stipulated by law, providing a fair wage for services performed. All fees collected in pursuance of the administration of the insurance laws should be covered into the state treasury.

The plan thus recommended should be the general policy in the administration of all departments of the state; specified salaries should be paid, and all fees collected in due course of law should be credited to the state.

Records of Michigan Soldiers.

Michigan is very proud of the heroic part its soldiery has played whenever the interests of the nation have required of them any sacrifice. So that the state may possess a complete record of the service of all its soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion and in the war with Spain, the legislature should make ample provision for the completion of this work now under way. The bill ought to be framed in such a way that the compilation may be completed during the ensuing two years.

Michigan Chickamauga Commission.

The Michigan Chickamauga commission desires to continue its work, and if that is done, an appropriation is necessary. Many of the states have completed both regimental and state monuments on this battlefield and other states are preparing to erect monuments the coming year. The Michigan commission has given its time, money and best energies to this work for the past six years so the state may be properly represented. Memorials like the one proposed are an incentive to patriotism, and the state should do all in its power to aid in marking for all time the battlefields on which Michigan valor was so conspicuously displayed.

Dairying.

Attention is being called forcibly to the fact that the farm lands of Michigan are not holding their own in acreage return with those of states like Wisconsin. The lack of attention which the state pays to dairying may be responsible, and there are well informed men who say they can prove the affirmative of this proposition. It is significant at least that while Michigan has only eighty creameries, Wisconsin has 954; while Michigan has sixty cheese factories, Wisconsin has 1,461. The state, through its institute work—a work which should be liberally supported—is preforming a grand service in behalf of the farmer, and in line with this the suggestion is advanced that the department of dairy and food be charged with the duty of imparting information and supplying instruction in improved methods in the manufacture of butter and cheese, the care of milk, the right methods of feeding and breeding. In this way the dairy interests of the state can be materially advanced, to the general public good.

Good Roads.

To keep abreast of the times and up to the standard of other progressive states, it behooves us to carefully consider the good roads problem, so that some commercial and equitable plan may be devised which will result in better roads. Good roads are a business proposition and Michigan should take a business interest in their development.

The State and Naval Militia.

Michigan is very proud of the military arm of the state government, and the legislature should make wise provision encouraging the maintenance of the present effective organization.

Cigarettes.

Firmly believing that the growing use of cigarettes is a menace to the youth of Michigan, I call the attention of the legislature to the evil, and advise the most stringent legislation possible, in order that the sale of cigarettes may be discouraged if not prohibited.

Enlargement of State Board of Corrections and Charities.

Because of the greater responsibil[illegible] ties imposed upon and the addition[illegible] work required of the state board [illegible] corrections and charities, and beca[illegible] there is need of the services of [illegible] woman in this important part of [illegible] state machinery, the enlargem[illegible] [illegible] of this boa[illegible]

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

"be gentle," I advised, "or when we meet again I shall feel it my duty to dull the luster of your other eye."

"Bah!" he ejaculated. "We are indebted to the French for the word 'canaille,' which applies to all Americans and Englishmen."

"Now," said I, climbing off the pallet. "I shall certainly do it."

"I warn you not to approach me!" he cried, his fingers closing over the pistol.

"Well, I promise not to do it now," I declared, going over to the window. I found some satisfaction in his nervousness. It told me that he feared me. "What place is this—a palace?"

"Answer this question, sir: Why did you cross the frontier when you were expressly forbidden to do so?"

"I forbidden to cross the frontier!" My astonishment was indescribable. "Young man, you have made a blunder of some sort. I am not a socialist or an anarchist. I have never been forbidden to cross the frontier of any country. Your chancellor is one of the best friends I have in the world. I went to school with his son."

He rocked to and fro on the table, laughing honestly and heartily. "You do not lack impudence. Are you or are you not the London correspondent of the New York ——?"

"I certainly am."

"You admit it?" eagerly.

"I see no earthly reason why I should not."

"When did you last visit this city?"

"Several years ago."

"Several years ago?" incredulously.

"Exactly. Have you ever seen me before?"

"No. But it was a little less than two years ago when you were here."

"It is scarcely polite," said I, "to question the veracity of a man you never saw before and of whom you know positively nothing." Suddenly my head began to throb again, and I grew dizzy. "You hit me rather soundly with that pistol. Still your eye ought to be a recompense."

He replied with a scowl. "Perhaps your name is"—

"Winthrop, John Winthrop, if that will throw any light on the subject."

"One name is as good as another," with a smile of unbelief.

"That is true. What's in a name? There is little difference, after all, between the names of the nobility and the rabble."

"You are determined to irritate me beyond measure," said he. "A German is the most sensitive man in the world as regards his title."

"Grant that I have some cause. And perhaps," observing him from the corner of my eye, "it is because you smoke such vile tobacco."

Remembering the incident in the railway carriage, he smiled in spite of the gravity of the situation. "It was the best I had," he said, "and then it was done in self defense. I'll give you credit for being a fearless individual. But you haven't answered my question."

"What question?"

"Why you returned to this country when you were expressly forbidden to do so."

"I answered that," said I. "And now let me tell you that you may go on asking questions till the crack of doom, but no answer will I give you till you have told me why I am here—I, who do not know you or what your business is or what I am supposed to have done."

He began to look doubtful. He thumped the table with the butt of his pistol.

"Do you persist in affirming that your name is Winthrop?"

"These gardens are very fine. I could see them better," said I, "if the window was larger."

"Perhaps," he cried impatiently, "you do not know where she is?"

"She?" I looked him over carefully. There was a perfectly sane light in his eyes. "Am I crazy, or is it you? She? I know nothing about any she!"

"Do you dare deny that you know of the whereabouts of her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde and that you did not come here with the purpose to aid her to escape the will of his majesty? And do you mean—oh, here, read this!" flinging me a cablegram.

The veil of mystery fell away from my eyes. I had been mistaken for Hillars. Truly, things were growing interesting. I bent and picked up the cablegram and read:

Count von Walden—He has left London and is on his way to the capital. Your idea to allow him to cross the frontier is a good one. Undoubtedly he knows where the princess is in hiding. In trapping him you will ultimately trap her. Keep me informed.

The name signed was that of a well known military attache at the embassy in London. I tossed back the cablegram.

"Well?" triumphantly.

"No, it is not well. It is all very bad, and particularly for you. Your London informant is decidedly off the track. The man you are looking for is in Vienna."

"I do not believe you. It is a trick!"

"Yes, it is a trick, and I am taking it, and you have lost a point, to say nothing of the time and labor and a black eye. If you had asked all these questions yesterday, I should have told you that Mr. Hillars"—

"Yes, that's the name!" he interrupted.

"I should have told you that he is no longer the London representative of my paper. It is true that the description of Hillars and myself tallies somewhat, only my hair is dark, while his is light, what there is left of it, and he is a handsomer man than I. All this I should have told you with pleasure, and you would have been saved no end of trouble. I presume that there is nothing left for you to do but to carry me back to the city. To quell any further doubt, here are my passports, and if these are not satisfactory, why, take me before Prince O——, your chancellor."

He was irresolute and half inclined to believe me. "I do not know what to do. ou know, then, the gentleman I am eeking?"

"Yes."

"Would he enter this country under an assumed name?"

"No. He is a man who loves excitement. Whatever he does is done openly. Had it been he instead of me he ld have thrown you out of the car- the first sign on your part that ching him. He is a very onger than you. I am half glad that I got the wrong man. You strike a pretty hard blow. But whether you are the man I want or not you will have to remain till this afternoon, when the count will put in appearance. I dare say it is possible that I have made a mistake. But I could not do otherwise in face of my instructions."

"The princess seems to me more trouble than she is worth."

"It is possible that you have never seen her highness?" he said, hinting a smile. "She is worth all the trouble in the world."

"If a man loved her," I suggested.

"And what man does not who has seen her and talked to her?" he replied, pacing.

"The interest, then, you take in her discovery is not all due to that imposed upon you by Count von Walden?" I could not resist this thrust.

"The subject is one that does not admit discussion," squaring his shoulders.

"Suppose we talk of something that does not concern her. All this is a blunder for which you are partly to blame. I have a bad lump on my head, and you have a black eye; but, as you did what you believed to be your duty and as I did what every man does when self preservation becomes his first thought, let us cry quits. Come, what do you say to a game of cards? Let us play ecarte, or I will teach you the noble game of poker. To tell you the truth, I am becoming dreadfully bored."

"Believe me, I bear you no ill will," he said, "and I am inclined to your side of the story. Whoever you are, you have the bearing of a gentleman, and now that we have come to an understanding I shall treat you as such. I have a pack of cards down stairs. I'll go and get them. This is not my house or I should have placed you in better quarters. I shall leave the door unlocked," a question in his eyes.

"Rest assured that I shall return to the city as I came—in a carriage—and, to be honest, I am anxious to see the Count von Walden, who poses as the princess' watchdog."

And when he came back and found me still sitting on the pallet his face cleared. We played for small sums, and the morning passed away rather pleasantly than otherwise. The young officer explained to me that he held an important position at court and that he was entitled to prefix baron to his name.

"The king is getting out of all patience with her highness," he said. "This makes the second time the marriage has been postponed. Such occurrences are extremely annoying to his majesty, who does not relish having his commands so flagrantly disregarded. I shouldn't be surprised if he forced her into the marriage."

"When he knows how distasteful this marriage is to her, why does he not let the matter go?"

"It is too late now. Royalty, having given its word, never retracts it. Events which the king wills must come to pass or he loses a part of his royal dignity. And then a king cannot very well be subservient to the will of a subject."

"But has she no rights as a petty sovereign?" I asked.

"Only those which the king is kind enough to give her. She is but a tenant—the rulers of Hohenphalia are but guests of his majesty. It is to be regretted, but it cannot be helped."

That afternoon, as I lay on my pallet, it seemed to me that in some unaccountable way I was destined to become concerned in the affairs of her serene highness. I had never seen the woman, not even a picture of her. Certainly she must be worth loving, inasmuch as she was worth trouble. I have always found it to be the troublesome woman who has the largest train of lovers. Troublesome, they are interesting; interesting, they are lovable.

It was more than a year since last I saw Phyllis. Yet my love for her knew no diminution. I began to understand why Hillars traveled all over the continent to get a glimpse of the woman he loved. With the pleasant thought that I should see Phyllis again I dozed. I was half asleep when I was aroused by loud voices in the corridor.

"But I do not believe him to be the man," I heard my jailer declare.

"Bah! I know there is no mistake," roared a voice which was accustomed to command. "He's been trying to hoodwink you. Watch the surprise in his face when he sees me, the cursed meddler and scribbler. It would be a pleasure to witness his hanging. Come, show him to me."

"Yes; come along, my dear old war-horse," I murmured, turning my face toward the wall. "There is a nice little surprise party in here waiting for you." The door opened.

"Unlocked!" bawled the count. "What does this mean, baron?"

"He gave his word as a gentleman," was the quiet reply.

"Gentleman? Ach! I'll take a look at the gentleman," said the count, stepping up to the pallet and shaking me roughly by the shoulder. "Wake up!"

I sat up so as not to miss the comedy which was about to set its scenes upon the grim visage of the count. As his eyes met mine his jaw fell.

"A thousand devils! Who are you?"

"I couldn't swear," said I meekly. "Everybody hereabout insists that I am some one else. The situation warrants a complete explanation. Perhaps you can give it." I should have laughed but for those flashing eyes.

"You are a blockhead!" he said to his subaltern.

"He is the man, according to your London correspondent," responded the other, with some show of temper. "I cannot see that the fault lies at my door. You told me that he would enter the country under an assumed name."

"I presume the affair is ended so far as I am concerned," I said, shaking the lameness from my legs.

"Of course, of course!" replied the count, pulling at his gray mustache, which flared out on either side like the whiskers of a cat.

"I should like to return to the city at once," I added.

"Certainly. I regret that you have been the victim of a blunder for which some one shall suffer. Your compatriot has caused me a deal of trouble."

"I assure you that he is in nowise connected with the present matter. According to his latest advices, he is at Vienna."

"I should be most happy to believe that," was the count's rejoinder, which inferred that he didn't believe it.

"My friend seems to be a dangerous person."

"All men of brains, coupled with impudence, are dangerous, and I give your friend credit for being as brave as he is impudent. But, come; my carriage is at your service. You are a journalist, but you will promise not to make public this unfortunate mistake."

I acquiesced. When the count and I parted company, I had not the vaguest idea that we should ever hold conversation again. The result of the adventure was I sent a very interesting story to New York, omitting my part in it. This done, I wired my assistant in London not to expect me for some time yet. The truth was I determined to hunt for Hillars and incidentally for her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia.

CHAPTER VIII.

As I came along the road, the dust of which had been laid that afternoon by an odorous summer rain, the principal thing which struck my eyes was the quaintness and unquestioned age of the old inn. It was a relic of the days when feudal lords still warred with one another and the united kingdom was undreamed of. It looked to be 300 years old and might have been more. From time to time it had undergone various repairs, as shown by the new stone and signs of modern masonry, the slate peeping out among the moss covered tiles. It sat back from the highway and was surrounded by thick rows of untrimmed hedges and was partly concealed from view by oaks and chestnuts. The gardens were full of roses all in bloom, and their perfume hung heavy on the moist air. And within a stone's throw of the rear the Danube noiselessly slid along its green banks. All I knew about the inn was that it had been by a whim of nature the birthplace of that beautiful, erratic and irresponsible young person, her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde. It was here I thought to find Hillars, though it was idle curiosity as much as anything which led me to the place.

The village was five miles below. I could see the turrets of the castle which belonged to the princess. She was very wealthy and owned as many as three strongholds in the petty principality of Hohenphalia. Capricious indeed must have been the woman who was ready to relinquish them for freedom.

The innkeeper was a pleasant, ruddy cheeked old man who had seen service. He greeted me with some surprise. Tourists, he said, seldom made this forgotten, out of the way village an objective point. I received a room which commanded a fine view of the river and a stretch of the broad highway. I was the only guest. This very loneliness pleased me. My travel stained suit I exchanged for knickerbockers and a belted jacket. I went down to supper. It was a simple affair, and I was made to feel at home. From the dining room I caught a momentary flash of white skirts in the barroom.

"Ah," I thought, "a barmaid! If she is pretty, it will be a diversion."

In the course of my wanderings I had seen few barmaids worth looking at twice. When the table was cleared, I lit a cigar and strolled into the gardens. The evening air was delicious with the smell of flowers still wet with rain. The spirit of the breeze softly whispered among the branches above me. Far up in the darkening blues a hawk circled. The west was a thread of yellow flame; the moon rose over the hills in the east; Diana on the heels of Apollo! And the river! It was as though nature had suddenly become lavish in her bounty and had sent a stream of melting silver trailing over all the land. There is nothing more beautiful to see than placid water as it reflects a summer's twilight. The blue Danube! Who has heard that magic name without the remembrance of a face close to your own, an arm, bare, white, dazzling, resting and gleaming like marble on your broadcloth sleeve and, above all, the dreamy, swinging strains of Strauss? There was a face once which had rested near mine. Heigho! I lingered with my cigar and watched the night reveal itself.

And then, right in the midst of my dreams, a small foot planted itself. I turned my head and saw a woman. On seeing the bright end of my cigar, she stopped. She stood so that the light of the moon fell full upon her face. My cigar trembled and fell.

"Phyllis!" I cried, springing to my feet, almost dumfounded, my heart nigh suffocating me in its desire to leap forth. "Phyllis!—and here? What does this mean?"

The woman looked at me with a puzzled frown, but did not answer. Then as I started toward her with outstretched arms she turned and fled into the shadows, leaving with me nothing but the echo of her laughter, the softest, sweetest laughter! I made no effort to follow her, because I was not quite sure that I had seen anything.

"Moonlight!" I laughed discordantly. Phyllis in this deserted place? I saw how impossible that was. I had been dreaming. The spirit of some wood nymph had visited me and for a brief space had borrowed the features of the woman I loved. In vain I searched the grove. The vision was nowhere to be found. I went back to the inn somewhat shaken up. Several old veterans were seated in the barroom, smoking bad tobacco and drinking a final bout. Their jargon was unintelligible to me.

"Where's your barmaid?" I asked of the innkeeper.

His faded blue eyes scanned me sharply. I read a question in them and wondered. "She went into the garden to get a breath of fresh air," he said. "She does not like the smoke."

Charged With Bribery.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 4.—Edward J. Coleman, common councilman, and John J. McAndrew and Thomas J. O'Boyle, select councilmen, were arrested Thursday on warrants sworn out by the Municipal league accusing them of bribery and solicitation of bribes, in connection with the granting of city franchises to telephone and street railway companies, and in the license tax ordinance. Twelve of the city councilmen have already resigned their seats to avoid prosecution and four others are under arrest.

Blew Himself to Pieces.

Lisbon, Me., Jan. 4.—H. E. Webber, a well-to-do farmer of Lisbon village, near here, blew himself to pieces Wednesday night. Parts of his lower limbs were scattered about the premises. The head and arms and upper part of the trunk were found on top of the barn. Notes left by Webber said that the writer had decided to kill himself by exploding dynamite cartridges. He had been acting strangely for several weeks.

BILL [illegible] RUSHED

The First Act Ready for the Signature of the Governor.

Appointments in the Senate and House—Belief That Tax Commissioner Oakman's Appointment Was Not Confirmed.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 4.—At the forenoon session of the senate Thursday, Senator "Pop" Goodell, of Wayne, gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill "to protect the dairy products of the state and to establish a state dairy bureau."

At the afternoon session the senate passed the Charlevoix bridge bonding bill, which passed the house in the forenoon, and which failed to pass in the last legislature. It is unusual to pass a bill so early in the session.

Rule 16 on senate committees was taken up on motion of Senator Kelly. The special committee's recommendations for changes in the committees, cutting out some and adding others, were adopted. This was done to give President Robinson a chance to appoint his committees by Wednesday, when both branches of the legislature will reconvene. The rest of the proposed change in the rules remain a special order for Wednesday.

Adjournment was taken to 7:30 in the evening to hear a report from the special mileage committee, it was stated.

Lieut.-Gov. Robinson announced the following senate appointments:

Document doorkeeper—Chas. Smith, of Belle Branch.

Mailing clerk and assistant document roomkeeper—Thomas S. Dorsey, of Clare.

Janitors—Chief, D. J. McNaughton, of Chapel; assistants, Clarence Brown of Schoolcraft, W. Lee Salter of Three Oaks, John Morgan of Coral, Henry Steinbour of Wyandotte.

Janitress, Mary Rossiter, Lansing; cloak room keeper, Wm. J. Black, Hancock.

Committee room keepers, W. Oscar Baker, Bay City; Frank I. Moore, Lansing.

Floor messengers, Hal. P. Brown, Deerfield; Louis Wirtheimer, Cheboygan; S. B. Cannon, Washington; Donald De May, Jackson; Albert A. Town, Detroit; Harry Wines, Howell.

Sergeant-at-arms' messenger, Arthur Jenkens, Grand Rapids.

Secretary's messenger, Jacob Hewmark, Newberry.

Chas. S. Pierce, ex-clerk of the senate, contends that the last senate did not confirm the appointment of Robert Oakman, of Detroit, as tax commissioner.

"After the resolution to confirm Oakman had been adopted," said Pierce, "the senate reconsidered its action before the doors of the executive session were opened. According to precedents established in the United States senate, this proceeding was authorized and no confirmation was really and finally made. Neither Oakman nor Freeman were confirmed."

Geo. Bussey contends that the senate, having once confirmed an appointment of the head of a state department or commission, it has no authorized power to reconsider such action.

It was learned that Lieut.-Gov. Robinson intends to appoint on the senate judiciary committee these senators: Nichols of Ionia, chairman; High of Ovid, Atwood of Caro, Gad Smith of Marquette, Murfin of Detroit.

THE HOUSE.

When the house session was resumed Thursday afternoon, Rep. Chandler gave notice that he intended at some future time to introduce a bill erecting a commission and making an appropriation for an exhibit of Michigan products at the Buffalo Pan-American exposition. Mr. Chandler says his bill will provide for an appropriation of $100,000.

The rules of 1899 governing joint sessions of the house and senate were adopted.

Clerk Miller announced the appointment of Clayton Busby, of Hastings, as messenger in the house proofroom.

Gallery janitor, John W. Kincaid.

Gallery janitress, Mrs. Della Zing.

Messengers for the floor of the house—Jas. P. Rudnicke, Clarence Macklem, Charles W. Byrns, Max Yost, Russell A. Murdock, Clayton Busby, Everett W. Cochrane, Ray Reed, Harold Steel, Edward Schremser, Julius Bloomberg.

Sergeant-at-arms, messenger, Mr. Shisler.

Speaker's clerk, Lillian A. Wells.

Louis Herschberg, selected for press messenger, is well known in the state as a former Detroit newsboy and a trustworthy employe.

Speaker Carton announced the following appointments for house positions:

Document room keeper, Lafayette Sigel.

Assistant document room keeper, A. F. Kerr.

Cloak room keeper, Thomas Kelley.

Assistant cloak room keeper, John Fairfax.

Chief janitor, John Sebert.

First assistant janitor, George N. Chidester.

Third assistant janitor, Nicholas Weys.

Fourth assistant janitor, Orlando C. Nash.

Fifth assistant janitor, C. H. Surridge.

Sixth assistant janitor, Michael Cronin.

Seventh assistant janitor, Oliver J. Watkins.

Committee room keeper, Thomas S. Weter.

Ex-Gov. Pingree informed the house that the commission appointed by the last legislature to arrange for a Michigan exhibit at the Ohio centennial exposition, which was to have been held in 1903 at Toledo, had reported that they had done nothing, and spent only Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1 00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

Exit freckle lotions, enter cough mixtures.

It Girdles the Globe.

Charge of Ill Treatment.

Washington, Jan. 4.—The navy department has called upon the superintendent of the naval academy for a report upon a charge submitted by Representative Rixey, of Virginia, to the effect that a marine named Hobart Green, of Virginia, had died at Annapolis from ill-treatment while sick. It was alleged that Green was obliged to march while ill from pneumonia, and that the decks were washed beneath him while he lay in his hammock on the Santee. The medical record shows that Green died Dec. 14th from quick pneumonia. His father is a special pension examiner credited to Sandusky, O.

Arms and the Woman

"Be gentle," I advised, "or when we meet again I shall feel it my duty to dull the luster of your other eye."

"Bah!" he ejaculated. "We are indebted to the French for the word 'canaille,' which applies to all Americans and Englishmen."

"Now," said I, climbing off the pallet, "I shall certainly do it."

"I warn you not to approach me!" he cried, his fingers closing over the pistol.

"Well, I promise not to do it now," I declared, going over to the window. I found some satisfaction in his nervousness. It told me that he feared me. "What place is this—a palace?"

"Answer this question, sir: Why did you cross the frontier when you were expressly forbidden to do so?"

"I forbidden to cross the frontier!" My astonishment was indescribable. "Young man, you have made a blunder of some sort. I am not a socialist or an anarchist. I have never been forbidden to cross the frontier of any country. Your chancellor is one of the best friends I have in the world. I went to school with his son."

He rocked to and fro on the table, laughing honestly and heartily. "You do not lack impudence. Are you or are you not the London correspondent of the New York ——?"

"I certainly am."

"You admit it?" eagerly.

"I see no earthly reason why I should not."

"When did you last visit this city?"

"Several years ago."

"Several years ago?" incredulously.

"Exactly. Have you ever seen me before?"

"No. But it was a little less than two years ago when you were here."

"It is scarcely polite," said I, "to question the veracity of a man you never saw before and of whom you know positively nothing." Suddenly my head began to throb again, and I grew dizzy. "You hit me rather soundly with that pistol. Still your eye ought to be a recompense."

He replied with a scowl. "Perhaps your name is"—

"Winthrop, John Winthrop, if that will throw any light on the subject."

"One name is as good as another," with a smile of unbelief.

"That is true. What's in a name? There is little difference, after all, between the names of the nobility and the rabble."

"You are determined to irritate me beyond measure," said he. A German is the most sensitive man in the world as regards his title.

"Grant that I have some cause. And perhaps," observing him from the corner of my eye, "it is because you smoke such vile tobacco."

Remembering the incident in the railway carriage, he smiled in spite of the gravity of the situation. "It was the best I had," he said, "and then it was done in self defense. I'll give you credit for being a fearless individual. But you haven't answered my question."

"What question?"

"Why you returned to this country when you were expressly forbidden to do so."

"I answered that," said I. "And now let me tell you that you may go on asking questions till the crack of doom, but no answer will I give you till you have told me why I am here—I, who do not know you or what your business is or what I am supposed to have done."

He began to look doubtful. He thumped the table with the butt of his pistol.

"Do you persist in affirming that your name is Winthrop?"

"These gardens are very fine. I could see them better," said I, "if the window was larger."

"Perhaps," he cried impatiently, "you do not know where she is?"

"She?" I looked him over carefully. There was a perfectly sane light in his eyes. "Am I crazy, or is it you? She? I know nothing about any she!"

"Do you dare deny that you know of the whereabouts of her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde and that you did not come here with the purpose to aid her to escape the will of his majesty? And do you mean—oh, here, read this!" flinging me a cablegram.

The veil of mystery fell away from my eyes. I had been mistaken for Hillars. Truly, things were growing interesting. I bent and picked up the cablegram and read:

> Count von Walden—He has left London and is on his way to the capital. Your idea to allow him to cross the frontier is a good one. Undoubtedly he knows where the princess is in hiding. In trapping him you will ultimately trap her. Keep me informed.

The name signed was that of a well known military attache at the embassy in London. I tossed back the cablegram.

"Well?" triumphantly.

"No, it is not well. It is all very bad, and particularly for you. Your London informant is decidedly off the track. The man you are looking for is in Vienna."

"I do not believe you. It is a trick!"

"Yes, it is a trick, and I am taking it, and you have lost a point, to say nothing of the time and labor and a black eye. If you had asked all these questions yesterday, I should have told you that Mr. Hillars"—

"Yes, that's the name!" he interrupted.

"I should have told you that he is no longer the London representative of my paper. It is true that the description of Hillars and myself tallies somewhat, only my hair is dark, while his is light, what there is left of it, and he is a handsomer man than I. All this I should have told you with pleasure, and you would have been saved no end of trouble. I presume that there is nothing left for you to do but to carry me back to the city. To quell any further doubt, here are my passports, and if these are not satisfactory, why, take me before Prince O——, your chancellor."

He was irresolute and half inclined to believe me. "I do not know what to do. You know, then, the gentleman I am seeking?"

"Yes."

"Would he enter this country under an assumed name?"

"No. He is a man who loves excitement. Whatever he does is done openly. Had it been he instead of me he would have thrown you out of the car at the first sign on your part that [illegible] watching him. He is a very [illegible] stronger than you. I am half glad that I got the wrong man. You strike a pretty hard blow. But whether you are the man I want or not you will have to remain till this afternoon, when the count will put in appearance. I dare say it is possible that I have made a mistake. But I could not do otherwise in face of my instructions."

"The princess seems to me more trouble than she is worth."

"It is possible that you have never seen her highness?" he said, hinting a smile. "She is worth all the trouble in the world."

"If a man loved her," I suggested.

"And what man does not who has seen her and talked to her?" he replied, pacing.

"The interest, then, you take in her discovery is not all due to that imposed upon you by Count von Walden?" I could not resist this thrust.

"The subject is one that does not admit discussion," squaring his shoulders.

"Suppose we talk of something that does not concern her. All this is a blunder for which you are partly to blame. I have a bad lump on my head, and you have a black eye; but, as you did what you believed to be your duty and as I did what every man does when self preservation becomes his first thought, let us cry quits. Come, what do you say to a game of cards? Let us play ecarte, or I will teach you the noble game of poker. To tell you the truth, I am becoming dreadfully bored."

"Believe me, I bear you no ill will," he said, "and I am inclined to your side of the story. Whoever you are, you have the bearing of a gentleman, and now that we have come to an understanding I shall treat you as such. I have a pack of cards down stairs. I'll go and get them. This is not my house or I should have placed you in better quarters. I shall leave the door unlocked," a question in his eyes.

"Rest assured that I shall return to the city as I came—in a carriage—and, to be honest, I am anxious to see the Count von Walden, who poses as the princess' watchdog."

And when he came back and found me still sitting on the pallet his face cleared. We played for small sums, and the morning passed away rather pleasantly than otherwise. The young officer explained to me that he held an important position at court and that he was entitled to prefix baron to his name.

"The king is getting out of all patience with her highness," he said. "This makes the second time the marriage has been postponed. Such occurrences are extremely annoying to his majesty, who does not relish having his commands so flagrantly disregarded. I shouldn't be surprised if he forced her into the marriage."

"When he knows how distasteful this marriage is to her, why does he not let the matter go?"

"It is too late now. Royalty, having given its word, never retracts it. Events which the king wills must come to pass or he loses a part of his royal dignity. And then a king cannot very well be subservient to the will of a subject."

"But has she no rights as a petty sovereign?" I asked.

"Only those which the king is kind enough to give her. She is but a tenant—the rulers of Hohenphalia are but guests of his majesty. It is to be regretted, but it cannot be helped."

That afternoon, as I lay on my pallet, it seemed to me that in some unaccountable way I was destined to become concerned in the affairs of her serene highness. I had never seen the woman, not even a picture of her. Certainly she must be worth loving, inasmuch as she was worth trouble. I have always found it to be the troublesome woman who has the largest train of lovers. Troublesome, they are interesting; interesting, they are lovable.

It was more than a year since last I saw Phyllis. Yet my love for her knew no diminution. I began to understand why Hillars traveled all over the continent to get a glimpse of the woman he loved. With the pleasant thought that I should see Phyllis again I dozed. I was half asleep when I was aroused by loud voices in the corridor.

"But I do not believe him to be the man," I heard my jailer declare.

"Bah! I know there is no mistake," roared a voice which was accustomed to command. "He's been trying to hoodwink you. Watch the surprise in his face when he sees me, the cursed meddler and scribbler. It would be a pleasure to witness his hanging. Come, show him to me."

"Yes; come along, my dear old war-horse," I murmured, turning my face toward the wall. "There is a nice little surprise party in here waiting for you." The door opened.

"Unlocked!" bawled the count. "What does this mean, baron?"

"He gave his word as a gentleman," was the quiet reply.

"Gentleman? Ach! I'll take a look at the gentleman," said the count, stepping up to the pallet and shaking me roughly by the shoulder. "Wake up!"

I sat up so as not to miss the comedy which was about to set its scenes upon the grim visage of the count. As his eyes met mine his jaw fell.

"A thousand devils! Who are you?"

"I couldn't swear," said I meekly. "Everybody hereabout insists that I am some one else. The situation warrants a complete explanation. Perhaps you can give it." I should have laughed but for those flashing eyes.

"You are a blockhead!" he said to his subaltern.

"He is the man, according to your London correspondent," responded the other, with some show of temper. "I cannot see that the fault lies at my door. You told me that he would enter the country under an assumed name."

"I presume the affair is ended so far as I am concerned," I said, shaking the lameness from my legs.

"Of course, of course!" replied the count, pulling at his gray mustache, which flared out on either side like the whiskers of a cat.

"I should like to return to the city at once," I added.

"Certainly. I regret that you have been the victim of a blunder for which some one shall suffer. Your compatriot has caused me a deal of trouble."

"I assure you that he is in nowise connected with the present matter. According to his latest advices, he is at Vienna."

"I should be most happy to believe that," was the count's rejoinder, which inferred that he didn't believe it.

"My friend seems to be a dangerous person."

"All men of brains, coupled with impudence, are dangerous, and I give your friend credit for being as brave as he is impudent. But, come; my carriage is at your service. You are a journalist, but you will promise not to make public this unfortunate mistake."

I acquiesced. When the count and I parted company I had not the vaguest idea that we should ever hold conversation again. The result of the adventure was I sent a very interesting story to New York, omitting my part in it. This done, I wired my assistant in London not to expect me for some time yet. The truth was I determined to hunt for Hillars and incidentally for her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia.

CHAPTER VIII.

As I came along the road, the dust of which had been laid that afternoon by an odorous summer rain, the principal thing which struck my eyes was the quaintness and unquestioned age of the old inn. It was a relic of the days when feudal lords still warred with one another and the united kingdom was undreamed of. It looked to be 300 years old and might have been more. From time to time it had undergone various repairs, as shown by the new stone and signs of modern masonry, the slate peeping out among the moss covered tiles. It sat back from the highway and was surrounded by thick rows of untrimmed hedges and was partly concealed from view by oaks and chestnuts. The gardens were full of roses—all in bloom, and their perfume hung heavy on the moist air. And within a stone's throw of the rear the Danube noiselessly slid along its green banks. All I knew about the inn was that it had been by a whim of nature the birthplace of that beautiful, erratic and irresponsible young person, her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde. It was here I thought to find Hillars, though it was idle curiosity as much as anything which led me to the place.

The village was five miles below. I could see the turrets of the castle which belonged to the princess. She was very wealthy and owned as many as three strongholds in the petty principality of Hohenphalia. Capricious indeed must have been the woman who was ready to relinquish them for freedom.

The innkeeper was a pleasant, ruddy cheeked old man who had seen service. He greeted me with some surprise. Tourists, he said, seldom made this forgotten, out of the way village an objective point. I received a room which commanded a fine view of the river and a stretch of the broad highway. I was the only guest. This very loneliness pleased me. My travel stained suit I exchanged for knickerbockers and a belted jacket. I went down to supper. It was a simple affair, and I was made to feel at home. From the dining room I caught a momentary flash of white skirts in the barroom.

"Ah," I thought, "a barmaid! If she is pretty, it will be a diversion."

In the course of my wanderings I had seen few barmaids worth looking at twice. When the table was cleared, I lit a cigar and strolled into the gardens. The evening air was delicious with the smell of flowers still wet with rain. The spirit of the breeze softly whispered among the branches above me. Far up in the darkening blues a hawk circled. The west was a thread of yellow flame; the moon rose over the hills in the east; Diana on the heels of Apollo! And the river! It was as though nature had suddenly become lavish in her bounty and had sent a stream of melting silver trailing over all the land. There is nothing more beautiful to see than placid water as it reflects a summer's twilight. The blue Danube! Who has heard that magic name without the remembrance of a face close to your own, an arm, bare, white, dazzling, resting and gleaming like marble on your broadcloth sleeve and, above all, the dreamy, swinging strains of Strauss? There was a face once which had rested near mine. Heigho! I lingered with my cigar and watched the night reveal itself.

And then, right in the midst of my dreams, a small foot planted itself. I turned my head and saw a woman. On seeing the bright end of my cigar, she stopped. She stood so that the light of the moon fell full upon her face. My cigar trembled and fell.

"Phyllis!" I cried, springing to my feet, almost dumfounded, my heart nigh suffocating me in its desire to leap forth. "Phyllis!—and here? What does this mean?"

The woman looked at me with a puzzled frown, but did not answer. Then as I started toward her with outstretched arms she turned and fled into the shadows, leaving with me nothing but the echo of her laughter, the softest, sweetest laughter! I made no effort to follow her, because I was not quite sure that I had seen anything.

"Moonlight!" I laughed discordantly. Phyllis in this deserted place? I saw how impossible that was. I had been dreaming. The spirit of some wood nymph had visited me and for a brief space had borrowed the features of the woman I loved. In vain I searched the grove. The vision was nowhere to be found. I went back to the inn somewhat shaken up. Several old veterans were seated in the barroom, smoking bad tobacco and drinking a final bout. Their jargon was unintelligible to me.

"Where's your barmaid?" I asked of the innkeeper.

His faded blue eyes scanned me sharply. I read a question in them and wondered. "She went into the garden to get a breath of fresh air," he said. "She does not like the smoke."

Charged With Bribery.

Scranton, Pa., Jan. 4.—Edward J. Coleman, common councilman, and John J. McAndrew and Thomas J. O'Boyle, select councilmen, were arrested Thursday on warrants sworn out by the Municipal league accusing them of bribery and solicitation of bribes, in connection with the granting of city franchises to telephone and street railway companies, and in the license tax ordinance. Twelve of the city councilmen have already resigned their seats to avoid prosecution and four others are under arrest.

Blew Himself to Pieces.

Lisbon, Me., Jan. 4.—H. E. Webber, a well-to-do farmer of Lisbon village, near here, blew himself to pieces Wednesday night. Parts of his lower limbs were scattered about the premises. The head and arms and upper part of the trunk were found on top of the barn. Notes left by Webber said that the writer had decided to kill himself by exploding dynamite cartridges. He had been acting strangely for several weeks.

Appointments in the Senate and House —Belief That Tax Commissioner Oakman's Appointment Was Not Confirmed.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 4.—At the forenoon session of the senate Thursday, Senator "Pop" Goodell, of Wayne, gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill "to protect the dairy products of the state and to establish a state dairy bureau."

At the afternoon session the senate passed the Charlevoix bridge bonding bill, which passed the house in the forenoon, and which failed to pass in the last legislature. It is unusual to pass a bill so early in the session.

Rule 16 on senate committees was taken up on motion of Senator Kelly. The special committee's recommendations for changes in the committees, cutting out some and adding others, were adopted. This was done to give President Robinson a chance to appoint his committees by Wednesday, when both branches of the legislature will reconvene. The rest of the proposed change in the rules remain a special order for Wednesday.

Adjournment was taken to 7:30 in the evening to hear a report from the special mileage committee, it was stated.

Lieut.-Gov. Robinson announced the following senate appointments:

Document doorkeeper—Chas. Smith, of Belle Branch.

Mailing clerk and assistant document roomkeeper—Thomas S. Dorsey, of Clare.

Janitors—Chief, D. J. McNaughton, of Chapel; assistants, Clarence Brown of Schoolcraft, W. Lee Salter of Three Oaks, John Morgan of Coral, Henry Steinbour of Wyandotte.

Janitress, Mary Rossiter, Lansing; cloak room keeper, Wm. J. Black, Hancock.

Committee room keepers, W. Oscar Baker, Bay City; Frank I. Moore, Lansing.

Floor messengers, Hal. P. Brown, Deerfield; Louis Wirtheimer, Cheboygan; S. B. Cannon, Washington; Donald De May, Jackson; Albert A. Town, Detroit; Harry Wines, Howell.

Sergeant-at-arms messenger, Arthur Jenkens, Grand Rapids.

Secretary's messenger, Jacob Hewmark, Newberry.

Chas. S. Pierce, ex-clerk of the senate, contends that the last senate did not confirm the appointment of Robert Oakman, of Detroit, as tax commissioner.

"After the resolution to confirm Oakman had been adopted," said Pierce, "the senate reconsidered its action before the doors of the executive session were opened. According to precedents established in the United States senate, this proceeding was authorized and no confirmation was really and finally made. Neither Oakman nor Freeman were confirmed."

Geo. Bussey contends that the senate, having once confirmed an appointment of the head of a state department or commission, it has no authorized power to reconsider such action.

It was learned that Lieut.-Gov. Robinson intends to appoint on the senate judiciary committee these senators: Nichols of Ionia, chairman; High of Ovid, Atwood of Caro, Gad Smith of Marquette, Murfin of Detroit.

THE HOUSE.

When the house session was resumed Thursday afternoon, Rep. Chandler gave notice that he intended at some future time to introduce a bill erecting a commission and making an appropriation for an exhibit of Michigan products at the Buffalo Pan-American exposition. Mr. Chandler says his bill will provide for an appropriation of $100,000.

The rules of 1899 governing joint sessions of the house and senate were adopted.

Clerk Miller announced the appointment of Clayton Busby, of Hastings, as messenger in the house proofroom.

Gallery janitor, John W. Kincaid.

Gallery janitress, Mrs. Della Zing.

Messengers for the floor of the house—Jas. P. Rudnicke, Clarence Macklem, Charles W. Byrns, Max Yost, Russell A. Murdock, Clayton Busby, Everett W. Cochrane, Ray Reed, Harold Steel, Edward Schremser, Julius Bloomberg.

Sergeant-at-arms, messenger, Mr. Shisler.

Speaker's clerk, Lillian A. Wells.

Louis Herschberg, selected for press messenger, is well known in the state as a former Detroit newsboy and a trustworthy employe.

Speaker Carton announced the following appointments for house positions:

Document room keeper, Lafayette Sigel.

Assistant document room keeper, A. F. Kerr.

Cloak room keeper, Thomas Kelley.

Assistant cloak room keeper, John Fairfax.

Chief janitor, John Sebert.

First assistant janitor, George N. Chidester.

Third assistant janitor, Nicholas Weys.

Fourth assistant janitor, Orlando C. Nash.

Fifth assistant janitor, C. H. Surridge.

Sixth assistant janitor, Michael Cronin.

Seventh assistant janitor, Oliver J. Watkins.

Committee room keeper, Thomas S. Weter.

Ex-Gov. Pingree informed the house that the commission appointed by the last legislature to arrange for a Michigan exhibit at the Ohio centennial exposition, which was to have been held in 1903 at Toledo, had reported that they had done nothing, and spent only

The large general store of Wm L. Hinman, of Bentl-, was destroyed by fire Thursday morning, together with two other buildings. Loss, $7,500; partially insured.

The residents of Diamondale are indignant over the pardon by Gov. Pingree of James H. Brumm, murderer of Mollie Flagler, and all sorts of wild talk has been indulged in.

Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1 00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

The Pennington Reunion.

The last Christmas of the nineteenth century will be long remembered by each member of the Pennington family. Early on the morning of that day the large pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs Willis Fowler, of Saline, was crowded with a happy bevy of young and old, eager to exchange the greetings of the Yuletide. Games were in abundance and the merry lighthearted laughter of the young mingled with the busy hum of older voices. The dinner hour saw 35 hungry individuals ready to do ample justice to the well laden tables.

After dinner each one who desired was given a ride in a horseless carriage and the street was for a time converted into a city boulevard. The hours all too soon told the approach of coming darkness and soon each tired but happy member drove the homeward way with heart gladdened for many a day to come by this glad reunion.

At the close of the meeting, T. A. Lowry, the retiring superintendent, tendered a little banquet to the teachers and officers of the Sunday-school.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

Week of Prayer services will be held in the Presbyterian church each evening of next week. There will be a song service, prayers and a short sermon each evening. The suggested subjects for prayer are as follows:

Monday—Prayer for a better realization of spiritual truth and a better estimate of spiritual realities; a clearer vision of the redeeming Christ, and of the actual need and the divinely intended glory of the world which He redeemed.

Tuesday—Prayer for a Church which, through faith in Christ, and by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, shall be wholly Christian, doing God's will and winning the world to Christ.

Wednesday—Prayer for such Christian character and life as shall be pleasant in the home, honored in business relations, welcomed in the neighborhood, helpful in the church—personal religion being thus manifested in its rightful attractiveness.

Thursday—Prayer for all missionaries and all missionary organizations, that being wholly inspired by Christian devotion and wholly guided by Christian wisdom, they may speedily and triumphantly fulfill the Savior's last command.

Friday—Preparatory service and session meeting for the reception of members.

RAILROAD NEWS.

The Cincinnati Northern train this morning had a new coupler, a patient device made by a Marshall man for the steam and signal hose. If the device works as it should, it will save from 10 to 15 minutes in coupling cars.

Mrs A. George, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs Burl Fletcher, during the holidays, returned yesterday to her home in Morenci. Her little grand-daughter Georgia returned with her to remain several weeks.

Capt. G. B. Grubb.

Capt. G. B. Grubb is lying at the point of death at his home, 34 East Goodale street. At noon on Tuesday his death was expected within the hour. Capt. Grubb has been ill of lung fever for several weeks. He is well known in local Grand Army circles, being commander-elect of McCoy post and for many years captain of the drill corps of the post. He served through the war with the Thirty-sixth Ohio. The captain is 61 years of age and has been a resident of Columbus for 16 years.—Columbus Dispatch.

LATER: Captain Grubb died at 1:30 this morning. He was the father of Mrs. C. R. Wilson, of this place, and was well known here among the G. A. R.s, having lived here for several months while the railroad restaurant was being built.

The Dry Goods

House of A. B. Park of Adrian are making special prices on cloaks and furs to close out the balance of the stock. Mr. Park made large purchases early in the season and has too many of the finer grades of garments on hand which he proposes to give big bargains for the next 30 days. When in Adrian you should visit this store as the stock is one of the largest in Lenawee county.

THE SCHOOLS.

Our school year is almost half gone.

Algebra II have begun final review.

Rhetoric classes are interested in scasion.

Pysiology and grammar classes have begun review.

Henry Smith, who has been ill, is now back at work.

Charlie Waring called on Miss Hartbeck's room Thursday.

Mr. Hendershot, of Ann Arbor, called on Miss Hartbeck Wednesday morning.

Harry Deuel has entered school and occupies a place in the 9th grade room.

Miss Pierce, of Detroit, was a guest of Miss Richardson in the West Branch Wednesday.

Hazel Howe, Amoretta VanEtten and Bayard Case are all back after a several weeks' absence.

Louis McClure is absent from the A room this week. Guess his New-Year's resolutions were too much for him.

General History class are studying Roman literature and architecture which ends the volume devoted to ancient history.

Change of Date.

The next entertainment on the Tecumseh Star Course will be on Friday, January 11th, instead of Thursday, the 10th, as previously stated. Lecture by Dr. P. S. Henson, D. D., LL. D. Dr. Henson is one of the most popular speakers of the present time. An effort has been made several times to secure him for a lecture here, but this is the first time the committee have been able to get him and it is expected the opera house will be crowded to hear him. Subject, "Fools."

On A Bet.

Last Tuesday evening Tom Lowry entertained about thirty five of his young lady and gentlemen friends with an oyster supper to pay a bet made with Miss Ella Primrose. The party were entertained in the reading room until supper was served in Mrs. Look's studio. After the repast a number of toasts to the ladies were given by the host, Will Ingersoll, Will Caldwell, of Toledo, and Ben Pulver. Mrs. Ella Hodges and Miss Mary Mills rendered several selections on the piano and Miss Mary Bates, of Mason, and Miss Anna McClure sang. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly passed in the reading room with numerous games.

Mr. Lowry, like Pingree, has been receiving many calls within the past week from friends who wish to bet, but he declines with thanks.

Mrs. M. J. Bigelow.

Mrs. M. J. Bigelow, aged 66, died of paralysis last Friday at the home of her daughter, Mrs Geo H. Saxton, in Delevan, Wis. Mrs. Bigelow was well known in Tecumseh, having lived here many years of her life, but has lived for 15 years with her daughter in Delevan. She was a member of the Episcopal church of Tecumseh and Rev. Burleson conducted the services at the grave. She leaves only one daughter, Mrs Saxton, who has the sympathy of all their friends in this community.

Farmers' Union.

THE BOER INVADERS

Carry Off Everything Eatable in Their Cape Colony Raid.

MEN AND GUNS WEER LANDED

From Battleship Monarch to Reinforce the British—Six Thousand South African Irregulars Recruited in Eight Weeks.

Cape Town, Jan. 4.—The military authorities are preparing for all contingencies. It has been decided to transfer the Boer prisoners from the camps to transports.

Farmers coming in to Carnarven describe the Boers as traveling in parallel columns, with numerous flanking parties sweeping the country of horses, plundering loyalists and carrying off everything eatable. It appears that they are accompanied by strings of pack horses lightly loaded.

Colesberg telegraphs that Kritzinger's commando is crossing the Middleburg district, but is getting few if any recruits.

The British battleship Monarch Thursday landed men and guns to relieve the troops for service northward. It is believed that the guns will be sent up the country.

Five hundred citizens enlisted Thursday, the enrollment being very active. It is hoped that the first batch of mounted men will leave within three days for Worcester. They are to hold the passes of the Hex river mountains and to protect the railway tunnel. The organization is rough and ready and not troubled much with drill or special uniform. Horses are scarce.

Six thousand five hundred South African irregulars have been recruited during the last eight weeks.

The Boers in the Transvaal have been exceedingly active for the last week or so attacking convoys and isolated posts. In most instances they have been repulsed and the railways are now working more regularly.

A commando is supposed to be in the mountains dividing Middleburg and Graaf Reinet, but cannot be exactly located. The invaders in the west, who were expected at Frazerburg Thursday, have altered their course and are now moving in the direction of Williston to the northwest. The British have occupied Frazerburg.

The Boers in Bechuanaland have been again joined by the inhabitants who once before rebelled.

Commandoes are reported to be at Blikfontein, Boetsap and Daniels Kuil. Their objective is believed to be Griquatown, which is occupied by the British.

Lack of Fire Drills.

Fredonia, N. Y., Jan. 4.—Testimony of students in the inquest into the cause of the deaths in the recent state normal and training school fire shows lack of fire drills and instruction relative to the use of the fire escapes. Principal Francis Palmer stated that, in his opinion, had Janitor Morris, who perished, used the fire extinguisher tube he could have extinguished the blaze before it gained headway.

Given a Hearty Reception.

Boston, Jan. 4.—At the meeting of the executive council Thursday the governor introduced Hon. George S. Boutwell to the councillors, reminding them that it was just 50 years ago that the latter was inaugurated as governor of Massachusetts. He was given a very hearty reception. Later ex-Gov. Boutwell was escorted to the house chamber by Gen. H. S. Dewey of the governor's staff, where he was very cordially received.

Held to Grand Jury.

New York, Jan. 4.—Morton L. Mortimer, actuary of the Provident Savings & Life Assurance society, and John M. Van Vleck, assistant actuary of the same concern, who were arrested last week on a charge of grand larceny, were held for the grand jury Thursday.

The Statement Untrue.

Omaha, Jan. 4.—Referring to a dispatch to the effect that all banks had been notified that the gold coin given to the Cudahy abductors was marked, Gen. John C. Corwin, Mr. Cudahy's counsel, said the statement was untrue. There were no important developments in the Cudahy case during the day.

Killed at Chesaning.

Chesaning, Mich., Jan. 4.—Charles W. Crooks, aged 32 years, of West Bay City, while coupling on the northbound freight at this station at 5 o'clock Thursday evening, was killed. He slipped and fell between the cars. His left arm and hip were crushed. He died in 15 minutes. He leaves a widow and three children.

DID NOT PARTICIPATE.

Gen. Chaffee Clears Himself of Any Part in Looting.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Gen. Chaffee has cleared himself of any suspicion of participating in any of the looting expeditions which are said in some quarters to be going on in China under the disguise of punitive expeditions.

His report of the conditions under which he took his last excursion from Pekin has been received at the war department by cable from Pekin. The officials here were surprised when they saw the press reports stating that the American troops in Pekin, which were distinctly designated as legation guards and as such were to have no part in ordinary military operations, had gone out into the country to co-operate with a German expeditionary force. From the nature of Gen. Chaffee's cablegram it would appear that the officials had communicated with him on this subject and invited the explanation which is afforded in the following cablegram:

"Pekin. Adjutant General, Washington:

"January 2.—Col. Theo. J. Wint returned. Movement simply to verify report that Christians had been murdered and secure arrest of guilty parties if allegation found true. Germans from Tien Tsin had been in the country. Take no part in offensive operations; patrol country between Pekin, Hoshi Wu and Chang Kiawan occasionally for the purpose of order.

(Signed) "CHAFFEE."

MORE THAN DOUBLED.

Money of the World Has Done So Within a Generation.

Washington, Jan. 4.—An increase of more than 100 per cent in the money of the world within less than a generation will be one of the most interesting exhibits of the annual report of the director of the mint, which is now going through the press. Nearly the whole of this increase is in metallic money, and much the larger proportion is in gold. The total stock reported in 1873 was about $4,600,000,000, of which more than half was in paper money not fully covered by metallic reserves. The situation at the beginning of 1900 showed a total monetary stock of about $11,600,000,000, of which only little more than one-fourth was in uncovered paper money. Director Roberts finds that, while the total money supply of the world has increased about $7,000,000,000, the increase in gold money since 1873 has been about $3,600,000,000, in silver about $2,750,000,000, and in uncovered paper only about $650,000,000. A large proportion of the increase in gold has taken place within the short space of seven years, while the quantity of silver money, which was at its maximum of about $4,250,000,000 at the beginning of 1896, has since been somewhat reduced by the sale of silver by Germany and its retirement in other countries. The conditions of 1893 showed a total monetary supply of about $10,500,000,000, which has since been increased by about $1,100,000,000. About $940,000,000 of this increase has been in gold money. The great outburst of activity in the mining of gold which followed the suspension of the coinage of silver in India and the United States, involving the rapid development of the mines of South Africa and the Klondike region, with the increased output of Australia and California, it will be stated, has resulted, therefore, in supplying nearly the entire monetary needs of the world, without resort to any material increase in the net supply of paper money in circulation.

Will Contest Decision.

New York, Jan. 4.—The Metropolitan Street Railway Co. will appeal to the appellate division of the supreme court from the decision of Justice Bischoff invalidating its franchise on Lexington avenue from Forty-second street north. The injunction restraining the company from running cars on the avenue will, in all probability, be stayed for 30 days, in order to let the company prepare its appeal. The railway people will make a fight for the reversal of the decision because if it stands it would necessitate another sale of the franchises on Lexington avenue or the abandonment of the line. Furthermare, it is said that the validity of other and even more important franchises held by the Metropolitan company would be exposed to attack.

Waterlogged Vessel.

Boston, Jan. 4.—Capt. Gjertsen of the steamer Guernsey, which arrived here Thursday, reports that on Dec. 19, in the evening, the wreck of a vessel was sighted and it was found to be a waterlogged and abandoned barque, evidently Norwegian, with all her masts standing. It is a very dangerous obstruction to navigation, especially in the night and during thick weather. The position of the derelict was about latitude 52 degrees north, longitude 11 degrees west. Capt. Gjertsen stated that the first two letters of the name appeared to be "Co" or "Go," the remainder of the name having been obliterated by the seas. It is possibly the abandoned Norwegian bark Gudrun.

Struck by a Board.

Pontiac, Mich., Jan. 4.—Alfred Berrinan was a victim of an accident at Beaudette's body works, this city, Wednesday afternoon. While trying to repair a machine he was struck in the stomach by a flying board and knocked insensible. His condition is considered very serious.

Injuries Will Prove Fatal.

Allegan, Mich., Jan. 4.—Andrew Phillips, living in the township of Heath, was accidentally shot while hunting near Dunningville. The contents of one barrel of his shotgun went through the body. He will die. Phillips is married, and has a wife and two children.

An Unusual Distinction.

West Point, N. Y., Jan. 4.—Cadet Edward N. Johnston, of the first class, appeared before the examining board in the semi-annual examination as first man in all the subjects of his class, engineering, ordnance and gunnery, law and history, an unusual distinction. Johnston was appointed from Oregon.

IN OLDEN TIMES

Many Things were Different—Now-a-days the Public Profit by Experience.

When the striped pole or sign which now indicates a barber shop was employed to let the public know where cupping or blood-letting was professionally performed, close shaves were of daily occurrence, not the easy removal of the hirsute or hairy adornment of the head and face, but close shaves from entering eternity. More than one unfortunate entered the barber surgeon's doorway to leave it a corpse or so weak that weeks were required to get the victim of malpractice on his feet. Blood-letting was used for everything from a heartache to a corn, and a pain in the loins was invariably treated with two incisions, one on each side of the spine. Like plasters and liniments, these helped from the counter irritation they created, and we may presume that had Mr. Calvin Wilson, proprietor of the leading shaving parlor of Niles, Mich., lived in the time of George III of England, in place of taking the course he did a short time ago with his back, blood-letting would have been resorted to. Read how he treated his trouble:

Mr. Wilson says: "My occupation has very likely much to do with the cause of my backache from which I have suffered considerably for a number of years. Standing on one's feet some days 18 hours is hard on the best of backs, but when you have pain across the loins, with lameness and soreness, everytime you move the muscles of the arm, long, long, before your daily task is over you often wish you could go to sleep. I tried everything to better my condition but was unsuccessful until I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought to a man who has worked hard all his life and is now past the three score and ten is much easier to appreciate than to describe in words. Doan's Kidney Pills perform what they promise."

It's Easy To Take

Thin, pale, anæmic girls need a fatty food to enrich their blood, give color to their cheeks and restore their health and strength. It is safe to say that they nearly all reject fat with their food.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

is exactly what they require; it not only gives them the important element (cod-liver oil) in a palatable and easily digested form, but also the hypophosphites which are so valuable in nervous disorders that usually accompany anæmia.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is a fatty food that is more easily digested than any other form of fat. A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health. You can get it in this way.

We have known persons to gain a pound a day while taking it.

Gold and Silver Production.

Washington, Jan. 4.—George E. Roberts, the director of the mint, Thursday made public his preliminary estimate of the production of gold and silver in the United States during the calendar year 1900. The aggregate of gold is given as 3,837,213 fine ounces, valued at $79,322,281, and of silver 59,610,543 fine ounces, which at the approximate average price of 61 cents for the year makes the value $36,362,431. During the calendar year 1899 the gold production was $71,053,400, and the silver production 54,764,500 fine ounces.

Was Convicted.

Mansfield, O., Jan. 4.—The jury in the case of Allen Andrews, indicted in connection with the Dowieite riots last fall, returned a verdict of guilty late Thursday afternoon. CONGRESSIONAL Shipping Subsidy Bill Displaced by the Army Measure.

WITHOUT A WORD OF DISSENT

Opponents of Army Bill Will Attack Any Effort to Create a Large Standing Army—A Scheme to Reduce Southern Representation in House.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Without a murmur of dissent and without a word of comment, the senate Thursday displaced the shipping subsidy bill from its privileged position as "unfinished business" and substituted for it the army reorganization bill. Since the second day of the present session the shipping bill had been the unfinished business, with the understanding that it would not interfere with the consideration of the army reorganization bill or of appropriation bills.

When the senate convened Thursday in its first session of the twentieth century, the army bill was taken up with a view to pressing it to a final vote as soon as possible. Its consideration proceeded until 2 o'clock—the end of the morning hour—when the subsidy bill was laid before the senate. Mr. Pettigrew then objected to a request for unanimous consent to continue the discussion of the army bill. By a vote of the senate the military measure was continued for consideration, thus making it the unfinished business and sending the subsidy bill back to the calendar.

During the discussion of the army measure the opposition senators indicated that their line of attack upon the bill would be against the creation of a large, permanent standing army. There was intimation that objection would not be offered to a temporary measure to provide an adequate force to maintain the authority of the United States in the Philippines. Beyond this point Thursday's proceedings developed nothing.

After some routine business had been transacted, Mr. Daniel called up and had read the resolutions adopted by the house upon the death of the late Rep. R. A. Wise, of Virginia. He then offered a resolution expressing the sorrow of the senate at the intelligence of Dr. Wise's death, and at 4:18 p. m., as a further mark of respect, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

The radical element among the house Republicans who favor cutting down the representation from the southern states in which franchise is abridged, suffered defeat Thursday because a number of their colleagues refused to act with them. The issue was precipitated quite unexpectedly. The leaders had decreed that the reapportionment bill should be taken up, but before it could be called Mr. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, offered as a matter of privilege a resolution reciting the alleged abridgement of the suffrage in Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, North Carolina, and directing the committee on census to investigate and report the facts to the house in order that a constitutional basis of representation could be established for those states.

The resolution created a sensation. It was a surprise even to several of the Republican leaders. The leaders on the Democratic side sought in vain to head off the resolution with points of order, but the speaker ruled against them. They then began a filibuster, openly avowing that they would fight every proposition looking to the reduction of representation from the southern states to the bitter end.

Several of the Republicans were secretly in sympathy with them, and their indifference to the fate of the Olmsted resolution in the end gave the opposition the victory. Many of them quietly paired with absent Democrats, leaving their absent colleagues unpaired. As a result, when the question of consideration was raised against the resolution it was defeated 81 to 83. The vote was a strict party one. Two Republicans, Landes (Ind.) and Mann (Ills.), answered present but did not vote.

The situation with reference to the apportionment bill is greatly complicated as a result of the injection of the Olmsted resolution. Chairman Hopkins, however, is confident of victory for his bill. He thinks the Olmsted resolution may pass in a full house and that the investigation may be made, but that the matter will end there. Irrespective of the fate of the resolution, however, he will press the reapportionment bill and thinks it will pass on Monday. If possible, he will displace private bill day to-day with his measure

May be Postponed.

Washington, Jan. 4.—There are indications that the navy department may defer the award of contracts for the three sheathed battleships yet undisposed of until the 1st of February, at which time there will be opened the bids for constructing three protected cruisers. The reason that is being advanced for postponing the allotment is that it will be possible to secure a more equitable and more satisfactory distribution of this naval work among the various bidders by having six ships to distribute at one time than by trying to parcel them off in two instalments.

Highly Efficient.

Washington, Jan. 4.—The report of Inspector General Knox on the inspection of national soldiers' homes, sent to congress Thursday, shows those institutions to be in a high state of efficiency. Spanish war veterans are now admitted temporarily and conditionally, and in order that the old men of the civil war shall not be crowded out the younger Spanish war veterans are discharged as soon as their condition will permit.

Another Investigation.

Philadelphia, Jan. 4.—The congressional investigation committee recently appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the case of Oscar L. Booz, the former West Point cadet, whose relatives believe came to his death as a result of hazing at the military academy two years ago, assembled at the Lafayette hotel in this city Thursday night. The committee, which consists of Charles Dick, Ohio, chairman; Edmund N. Driggs, New York; Irving P. Wanger, Pennsylvania; Walter I. Smith, Iowa, and Bertram L. Clayton, New York, held an executive session at which the preliminary arrangements for the taking of testimony were made. The committee will leave here at 8:20 a. m. Friday for Bristol, Pa., the home of the Booz family, and will immediately begin the taking of testimony. After hearing the Bristol witnesses the committee will return to this city to hear Philadelphia physicians who are connected with the case, after which the investigators will sit at West Point. Night sessions will probably be held in order to expedite the inquiry. A copy of the testimony taken by the military board of inquiry has been sent to the congressional committee for reference.

OFTEN ARE THE BEGINNING OF CONSUMPTION.

Stop Your Cough and Avoid Future Trouble.

We Will Guarantee That We Can Do It For You.

Our Vinol is the Remedy for all Pulmonary Affections

Vinol is a preparation that is delicious to take.

It consists of a delicate table wine in which has been dissolved the active curative principles that are found in the liver of the live cod, and to which cod-liver oil owes its reputation as a remedy for coughs, colds and all wasting diseases.

If there is any one who has a cough, a tendency to take cold easily, or a dread of consumption, we would like to have them call and permit us to explain what we know about Vinol and why we believe it will cure all such troubles more surely and quickly than any other remedy ever given to the public.

Following is a letter which has just come to hand and which shows how beneficially Vinol acted in one instance:

"I had a severe cough of long standing. I was advised by friends to give your Vinol a trial, which I did. Before taking it I had tried many other remedies for coughs without obtaining any relief. With Vinol it was different. I have now used four bottles of it, and am pleased to say my cough has almost entirely left me. I have been decidedly benefited by its use in every way. Very truly yours."—H. E. SMALL, Boston, Mass.

Vinol acts beneficially upon the digestive organs, enabling them to obtain for themselves the elements from which are made firm healthy flesh tissue, sound muscle, strong bone structure and pure blood.

We recommend Vinol unreservedly.

If you will call on us at our store, we will tell you why we have such faith in this new wine of cod-liver oil.

We guarantee that if you suffer from any symptoms that indicate troubles for which we know Vinol is intended, we will refund to you your money if you don't find Vinol helps you.

If a Woman

wants to put out a fire she doesn't heap on oil and wood. She throws on water, knowing that water quenches fire. When a woman wants to get well from diseases peculiar to her sex, she should not add fuel to the fire already burning her life away. She should not take worthless drugs and potions composed of harmful narcotics and opiates. They do not check the disease—they do not cure it—they simply add fuel to the fire.

Bradfield's Female Regulator should be taken by every woman or girl who has the slightest suspicion of any of the ailments which afflict women. They will simply be wasting time until they take it. The Regulator is a purifying, strengthening tonic, which gets at the roots of the disease and cures the cause. It does not drug the pain, it eradicates it. It stops falling of the womb, leucorrhea, inflammation and periodical suffering, irregular, scanty or painful menstruation; and by doing all this drives away the hundred and one aches and pains which drain health and beauty, happiness and good temper from many a woman's life. It is the one remedy above all others which every woman should know about and use.

DON'T KNOW WHO.

Somebody Paid for Protecting Vice in New York.

New York, Jan. 8.—Judge Cowing, in the court of general sessions, swore in the January grand jury Monday. The foreman is Maynard Hollister, a linen merchant. This is the body that will hear charges made by the committee of five and the committee of 15 as to vice in this city, and will also investigate many city departments. After referring at some length to the present condition of affairs, Judge Cowing said:

"I want to draw your attention to a class of cases which is generally believed in this community to go unwhipped of justice. Crimes such as you are expected to hear are crimes against the public morals. As to the higher crimes, there seems to be but little danger that they will not be brought to justice. It is the smaller crimes and misdemeanors that should be looked after."

The Tammany anti-vice committee of five has placed all its evidence in regard to gambling in the hands of Assistant District Attorney Schurman. This testimony will be laid before the January grand jury, and it will lead, the committee says, to a number of indictments of keepers of resorts. But no police official or Tammany leader will be indicted.

M. Warley Platzek said:

"The committee has found no legal evidence incriminating any police official or any political leader. It is one thing to feel morally certain that vice is protected, it is quite another thing to get into a position to prove who is receiving the tribute. We find that we cannot get that sort of evidence at all. The people who are profiting by granting immunity to vice have kept their tracks absolutely covered up from view. We know that vice has paid for protection, but we don't know who has received the money."

Causes General Satisfaction.

Santiago de Cuba, Jan. 8, via Hayti an cable.—The announcement Monday of the appointment of Col. Samuel M. Whiteside to be a brigadier general of volunteers caused widespread satisfaction owing to his popularity among Cubans, Americans and foreigners here. His staff prepared a surprise for him; and, when he entered the palace Monday morning he was greeted by the regimental band playing the "Colonel Whiteside March." All the military and civil officers, the civil governor and his staff and the government employes in a body heartily congratulated him upon his promotion. The Cubans are particularly gratified and all press comments are favorable.

Relations Much Strained.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 8.—Letters received here from Panama say the relations between Colombia and Venezuela are much strained in consequence of the latter's connivance with and the assistance being given to the revolutionists in the former country. The activity of the rebels, it is added, only restrains Colombia from taking warlike measures against Venezuela, and even now Colombian troops are being moved to the border. The rebels are still receiving large supplies of arms and ammunition through Venezuela.

Complainant Disappeared.

New York, Jan. 8.—Thomas J. Minnock, the newspaper man who made the original charges against Nurses Davis, Dean and Marshall, of Bellevue hospital, which led to their being held to await the action of the grand jury on the charge of having murdered a patient, has disappeared and all efforts of the authorities to locate him have been futile. It is said that Minnock bought a ticket for southern California on Friday last.

The latest freak of society women is to perfume themselves with scent tablets, which are distributed in the hems of skirts, in the coat pockets, in the corsets, in the palms of gloves, and even in the coiffure. MAKE READY TO GRIND

The State Lawmakers Will Soon Be Getting Down to Hard Work.

SOME PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Recommendations Made by Governor Bliss in His Inaugural Message To Be Carried Out.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 8.—Although the forty-first session of the Michigan legislature convened one week ago, it will not be fairly underway until the middle of this week, for the reason that the standing committees have not yet been appointed, and without them practically no business can be transacted. After hearing the messages of the incoming and retiring governors read last week, the legislature adjourned until tomorrow morning in order to give the presiding officers of the two houses an opportunity to arrange these committees. This is a comparatively easy task for the president of the senate, inasmuch as he has only thirty-two statesmen to satisfy and has known that the task would be his to perform ever since election day, when he was chosen. With the speaker of the house, however, it is altogether different. In the first place he has 100 names to chase around the checkerboard until all have been fairly dealt with, and it cannot be definitely known who will have this job to do until after the legislature convenes and the speaker is actually elected. Both presiding officers expect to be ready to announce their committees tomorrow. But one change has been made in the standing committees, the house having divided the committee of nine on fish and game and provided a separate committee of five on each subject. This will give the speaker one more chairmanship and thus make his task easier to perform.

Listened to Messages.

Michigan had the greatest thing in the way of governors' messages last week that it ever experienced and it is doubtful if any state in the union ever approached it. The two houses of the legislature sat in joint convention for more than five hours listening to words of advice and other things, and even then some thirty pages of tables which constituted a portion of Governor Pingree's message were omitted. Probably never before in the history of the country were two such vastly different state documents submitted to a legislature, either on the same day or on different days in different years. Considerably more than four hours were consumed in the reading of the Pingree message, while Governor Bliss' occupied only a little more than thirty minutes. The message of the retiring governor was decidedly the most Pingreesque document ever submitted, and at the numerous regular and special sessions during his four years as governor some characteristic messages have been sent to the legislature. He certainly went out of office in a blaze of Pingree glory, to which nothing in the line of luridness could be added. Inasmuch as he has since declared himself entirely satisfied with his finish, there is no occasion for anyone to find fault with it. The relative merits of the two messages will, of course, always be a matter of opinion. They represent two wholly different schools of statesmanship, and, therefore, will necessarily find both favor and condemnation.

As is always the case, both the incoming governor and the presiding officers of the two houses of the legislature recommended short, businesslike sessions, and, as usual, the result will be a session of about the average length. It is possible that the present may be a trifle shorter than some of its more recent predecessors for the reason that the utmost harmony is likely to prevail between the two houses, and there will be no delays due to factional quarrels.

Until Constitution Is Changed.

However, Michigan can never hope to cut the sessions of the legislature to a proper limit until the constitution is changed so that the legislature cannot be called upon to do a vast amount of work every two years that properly belongs to the various boards of supervisors to perform. As matters now stand a very large portion of each session of the legislature is consumed with the work of considering village and city charters, and bills extending the time for the collection of taxes in certain townships, and authorizing municipalities to bond, etc. An idea of the amount of time that is consumed during a regular session with this class of bills may be gained from the fact that at the last special session, which lasted less than ten days, no less than five special messages were submitted by Governor Pingree recommending the enactment of bonding bills in order to help municipalities out of pending difficulties. All five bills were passed by the house, but were promptly pigeonholed in the senate, and will now be the first fruits of the present legislature.

Legislative Junkets.

It is doubtful if the adoption of the recommendation made by both Governor Bliss and Speaker Carton that legislative junkets to state institutions be abolished, will tend to shorten the session any. Nevertheless, the abolition of the junket will be a mighty good thing, for it is a state secret that they have never accomplished the least particle of good, and have been apt to be somewhat of a disgrace to the state for obvious reasons. Those legislators who went on the junket placed themselves under obligations to the transportation companies as well as the communities they visited and by which they were lavishly entertained, thereby insuring, in many instances, the enactment or slaughter of bills which, under other circumstances would have met a different fate. Further than this these legislators were bent on having a good time, and they always had it. They visited, it is true, the cities in which state institutions were located, but gave the institutions little or no thought or attention. The standing committees having in charge the interests of these institutions will, of course, make visits to them, and while they are away bills in which members of these committees are interested will not be considered. This prolongs the session, and the only remedy for this condition lies in some rule that will require all of this visiting to be done at the same time and be over with. The go-as-you-please system that prevails lengthens the session many days.

Recommendations Noticed.

Already three measures recommended by Governor Bliss in his inaugural message have been noticed, and bills on the subjects will shortly be introduced. One of these provides for the appointment of a commission to arrange a Michigan exhibit at the Pan-American exposition to be held at Buffalo this year, and appropriates $10,000 for that purpose; the second seeks to encourage the dairy interests of the state, the object being to materially increase the number of dairies and the acreage devoted to dairy farming; and the third provides for the appointment of a state fire marshal, the object being to reduce fire waste and thus lessen insurance rates in the state. Just what the details of these proposed laws will be is not yet known, as none of the measures have been perfected. It is understood that the fire marshal bill will not seek to tax the insurance companies for the support of the bureau, for that would tend to increase rather than lower insurance rates, but will provide that these expenses be paid out of the retaliatory fees collected by the insurance commissioner and now turned into the general fund of the state.

There is already talk of a movement to relieve the supreme court. The necessisty for furnishing this relief has been apparent for a number of years, and strenuous efforts have been made in this direction.

Work Is Too Extensive.

That the work of the supreme court is altogether too extensive to permit of the present justices giving adequate consideration is generally conceded. Such concession is certainly made by all who are familiar with the situation. There is little reason to believe, however, that the plan of establishing an intermediate court will ever succeed. At the October special session of the legislature Governor Pingree recommended that it again be submitted to the people, but his message was given no consideration. For this reason another plan is suggested, and that is to have the legislature increase the number of supreme justices from five to seven. It is probable that this idea will be given attention during the present session.

The state board of corrections and charities is more than ever emphatic this year in its recommendations that the time-honored custom of exhibiting the convicts in the prisons of the state to visitors for an admission fee of 25 cents be abandoned, or at least be subjected to more discrimination. If not entirely abandoned as a decent respect of the proprieties would seem to suggest, then the board says that general visitors should be confined to those portions of the prisons not at the time occupied by the convicts. This recommendation is backed up by the action of the National Association of Wardens, which adopted resolutions condemning the practice, stating that the indiscriminate admission of women and children is especially objectionable for reasons that will suggest themselves to the reader.

In Compliance with Law.

The law makes it the duty of the board of corrections and charities to submit to the legislature its views concerning institutions with which it has to do. The above recommendation is made in compliance with this law, as is the further recomendation that there be enacted a law that will make provision whereby the inmates of the penal and reformatory institutions of the state can aid in the suport of their families, many of whom are now thrown on the counties for support during their imprisonment, or the families of persons wronged by them if they have no families of their own, and to provide a small amount to be paid the convicts themselves when they are discharged, so that they will not be compelled by proverty to seek out their old criminal companions for aid, and thus again start on a criminal career.

The Cooley commission appointed by the state tax commission to make appraisal of the property of corporations now paying specific taxes has found the value of the telephone property in Michigan to be $6,339,840.96, which is $4,068,497.72 greater than the valuation reported in 1899.

The commission has also found the value of property of the railway companies in Michigan to be $145,000,000. In this calculation the Michigan Central leads with a valuation of $25,000,000; Pere Marquette system, 24,794,549; Grand Trunk system $16,450,084; Grand Rapids and Indiana system, $8,098,147.

Will Cut a Large Figure.

The above valuations will cut a large figure in connection with the consideration of bills which will be introduced to tax this property at its cash value, it being readily seen that at the average tax rate of the state, the ad valorem system of taxation would bring the state a vastly greater revenue than it is receiving now under the specific tax system. There is little doubt that the demand for the people for the substitution of a property tax for these corporations will be complied with, although there are some legislators who deem the specific tax system the best and who favor the retention of this system to increase rates to a figure that will produce whatever revenue is desired. This question will be one of the first to be given consideration by the present legislature, although it may possibly be one of the last to be disposed of.

It is evident that the legislature will have plenty to do in the line of considering appropriation bills, the state board of corrections and charities having approved a total of $1,621,576.79 asked for by the various state institutions for current expenses and special purposes for the ensuing two years. The board disapproved of $151,367 asked for by the institutions, which, of course, will endeavor to have the legislature reinstate these items.

JAMES V. BARRY.

The New Cup Defender.

Bristol, R. I., Jan. 8.—The work of bending the frames for the new cup defender progressed rapidly Monday. The bulbed steel angles as soon as they were heated, were placed on tables and bent into the required shape. Afterwards they were taken to the construction shop. It is expected that by the end of the present week the form of the new boat will become quite prominent.

Will Aid in Arbitration.

Madrid, Jan. 8.—The federal republican party has introduced resolutions in the senate and the chamber of deputies declaring that Spain should adhere to the first proposal of arbitration between Great Briatin and the two Boer republics, whether coming from Holland or some other power and that, if no such proposal is forthcoming, Spain should take the initiative.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

Liverpool—Capt. J. D. Bulloch, a famous agent of the confederates during the American civil war, died in this city Monday.

Madrid—The Spanish government is projecting the establishment of wireless telegraphy in Spain, Morocco and Teneriffe and the other Canary islands.

Berlin—Christian Dewet, nephew of the Boer general, is making speeches in south Germany in behalf of the Boer cause and arousing great sympathy.

Budapest—M. Lukacs, former Hungarian minister of commerce, committed suicide Monday by drowning himself in the Danube. He had been suffering from a nervous trouble.

OBJECTIONS MADE

Chinese Court Advises Envoys not to Sign Preliminary Note.

BUT THEY SPOKE TOO LATE

Prince Ching Informs the Court—Draft of Commercial Treaty Submitted to the Powers by the British Minister to China.

Pekin, Jan. 8.—The report that the Chinese court has instructed the Chinese peace envoys to refuse to sign the joint note of the powers to China is confirmed. The court referred to the objections of the southern viceroys, which are the same as the court have. Prince Ching, however, informed the court that it was too late and a reply from the court is expected shortly.

Shanghai, Jan. 8.—Sir Ernest Mason Satow, British minister to China, has proposed to other foreign envoys the draft of a commercial treaty with China based upon the following conditions:

First—Freedom for all coasting vessels.

Second—Freedom for all vessels on inland waters, especially the Yang Tse Kiang.

Third—Permission to import foreign salt.

Fourth—Adoption of regulations encouraging Chinese investments in foreign concerns.

Fifth—Steps extending China's exports and imports.

Sixth—Protection of trade marks.

Seventh—The protection of treaty ports.

The draft has not been accepted by the powers, and discussion regarding it has been postponed.

Bigoted court officials, it is reported, still raise objections to signing an acceptance of the joint demands.

London, Jan. 8.—A sister of charity, writing from the Maison de Jesu Enfant, at Ning-Po, Nov. 20, describes the massacre at Nonking of 100 little boys. Some of them, she says, were roasted alive in the church. Others escaped to the orphanage, outside the city, but all were killed and the place burned. "Despite threats of torture and the frequency of most painful deaths," the sister declares, "apostacy was wonderfully rare."

The British foreign office considers the reported agreement between Russia and China regarding the Manchurian province of Feng Tien as probably referring to military measures of a temporary character.

There is nothing in the possession of the foreign office to show that any such agreement has the sanction of Russia and China.

In the opinion of the foreign offices, there is likely to be a great deal more discussion before the Chinese imperial personages finally agree to the penalties insisted upon by the powers.

Pekin, Jan. 8.—Count von Waldersee says that China's request, through her representatives at foreign courts that the expeditions should cease, cannot be complied with at present. No expeditions, he asserts, are sent out without adequate cause. Where there are scenes of bloodshed or disorder, troops are sent to interfere, this being the only means of preventing outrage. He declares that the expeditions are not intended for punitive purposes but merely for police purposes, with a view of giving the necessary protection to life and property.

Winter in Europe.

Paris, Jan. 8.—Snow was falling in Paris Monday evening for the first time this winter. The temperature, however, has risen somewhat. Elsewhere in France extremely severe weather is recorded, accompanied by heavy snowfalls. Bodies of tramps frozen to death have been found at a number of places on the country side.

Madrid, Jan. 8.—Heavy weather has set in throughout Spain. Snow is falling and the mail trains are delayed.

Berlin, Jan. 8.—The Rhine is frozen over and navigation is temporarily closed.

Nominations Confirmed.

Washington, Jan. 8.—The senate Monday confirmed a large number of army nominations of which the most important were Col. Samuel M. Whiteside, Tenth cavalry; Lieut.-Col. Jas. R. Campbell, Thirtieth infantry, and Maj. Chas. Bird, quartermaster, to be brigadier generals of volunteers.

A $50,000 Fire.

Princeton, Ind., Jan. 8.—The car department building of the Southern Railway shops was destroyed by fire early Monday. The loss is estimated at $50,000, the immense building and contents being a total loss. The cause of the fire is not known.

Gen. Bachelder's Funeral.

Washington, Jan. 8.—The remains of Brig.-Gen. G. N. Bachelder, retired, were interred at Arlington Monday with military honors. After the funeral services at All Souls' church the body was escorted to the cemetery by a squadron and the band of the Fifth cavalry from Fort Meyer. The Second Army Corps association, the military order of the Loyal Legion, the Society of Colonial Wars, and the Sons of the American Revolution, of which organizations Gen. Bachelder was a member, were represented. The following were the honorary pallbearers: Senator Jacob H. Gallinger, Gen. Geo. D. R. Ruggles, Gen. M. I. Ludington, Surgeon General Walter Wyman, of the marine hospital service, Gen. Chas. G. Sawtelle and Jos. McCammon.

DISEASE IN MICHIGAN.

Diphtheria, Typhoid and Scarlet Fever Increased.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 8.—Compared with the average in the corresponding quarters in the 10 years 1890-99, the reports to the state board of health from regular observers throughout the state indicate that cholera morbus, typhoid fever and scarlet fever were more prevalent, and erysipelas, intermittent fever, remittant fever, pneumonia and whooping cough were less than usually prevalent in Michigan in the fourth quarter of 1900.

During the last quarter, compared with the preceding quarter, reports from all sources show diphtheria to have increased by an average of 33 places per month, scarlet fever to have increased by an average of 56 places per month, typhoid fever to have increased by an average of 100 places per month, measles to have decreased by an average of 43 places per month, whooping cough to have decreased by an average of 17 places per month, consumption to have increased by an average of two places per month, smallpox to have increased by an average of 31 places per month, and cerebro spinal meningitis to have decreased by an average of four places per month.

Arrested on Suspicion.

Bay City, Mich., Jan. 8.—Henry Gunder, aged 39 years, and Thomas Edwards, aged 19, were arrested here Monday on suspicion of being concerned in the safe-blowing at Vassar Friday. They were there at the time and were arrested and released, but were rearrested on request of Vassar authorities. Gunder is a sailor and lives in West Bay City. The men deny any knowledge of the crime.

Lived in Three Centuries.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 8.—Mary Featherstone, a widow, who resides in this city, has lived in three centuries, having been born in Ireland 103 years ago on Oct. 24 last. She is in good health and bids fair to live for a number of years yet.

Saved His Grandson.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 8.—Wm. H. Hudson, an Argentine farmer, who was shot accidentally on Saturday while taking a loaded gun from his little grandson, died in a few hours. He was in his eightieth year, and was highly respected.

Alarmed at Smallpox.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 8.—Holton township, this county, is alarmed over the invasion of smallpox. Only one case exists, that being Wilson Kitchen, but a large number of people have been exposed.

Added to His Record.

New York, Jan. 8.—Ansley H. Fox, the well-known expert shot of Baltimore, added to his records by beating the live bird record of the Interstate park grounds on those grounds Monday, making 129 kills out of 130 birds shot at. Fox made 91 straight kills. The birds were shot at 30 yards rise. Fox holds the world's record on 96 out of 100 targets shooting at doubles.

Jury Disagreed.

New York, Jan. 8.—The coroner's jury in the inquest into the death of Geo. Price as a result of a barroom shooting affray in Harlem disagreed Monday. Eight voted to exonerate Macdonnell on the ground of self-defense, and four voted to hold Macdonnell for the killing of Price. The coroner fixed Macdonnell's bail at $5,000, which was promptly furnished by friends of the prisoner.

Cubans Satisfied.

Havana, Jan. 8.—R. B. Hawley, who has just returned here from the southern part of the island, reports that tranquility and prosperity exist there, that the people are satisfied with the American government of Cuba and that no desire is expressed for an experimental change. The crops of the section are large, the sugar crop now promising to reach 650,000 tons, the best known in many years.

Yankee Money Ready.

New York, Jan. 8.—Talk of the possibility of another British war loan to meet the expenses of the protracted campaign in South Africa was heard Monday in local banking circles. It was generally believed that the floatation of such loan would again find American bankers ready to take up a large share of it.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

Abraham Miller, of Petrolea, is in jail on a serious charge. It is thought he is insane.

A horse, harness and wagon were stolen from Richard Haigh, of Dearborn, and were found at Windsor, Ont., Monday morning.

Richard Kerwin, Jr., one of the alleged firebugs arrested at Port Huron lately, pleaded guilty in the police court Monday and was bound over to the circuit court for trial.

Burglars broke into the Lake Shore depot at Newport Sunday night, but as near as can be ascertained they only took an express package containing insurance almanacs.

Chester Walker, while loading stone near Alma slipped and fell on his back and was crushed by a large stone which rolled from the wagon. He extricated himself and drove two miles before getting assistance. There are little hopes of his recovery.

Emma Kubin, of Wayne county, has been arrested at Ann Arbor charged with theft. In her room was found $80 worth of goods belonging to Mrs. Henry Cornwell and $60 worth belonging to Mrs. Wm. Condon. She had been in the employ of both ladies as a domestic.

Michigan Central detectives have been making an investigation at Ann Arbor and as a result have a list of 30 families who have been getting their supply of coal from cars along the railroad track. It is not known whether or not prosecutions will follow.

Mrs. Bessie March of South Passadena, Cal., who has discovered a recipe for crystallizing flowers so as to preserve their natural color and, in a measure, their perfume, was granted a gold medal by the Paris exposition commissioners.

Mrs. Phebe Hearst will maintain a free kindergarten this winter in Lead, S. D. She owns stock in the Homestake Mining company and is already keeping up a free reading room and library for the people of Lead.

HAD A CLOSE CALL

A Grand Rapids Physician Had a Narrow Escape From Death.

OVERCOME IN A BATH ROOM

Only Revived After Hours of Hard Work—Wright, the Paroled Lumberman, is Feeling Well—Other Michigan Matters of Interest.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 8.—A year ago Prof. Asa LaFlamboy was found dead in a bath tub full of hot water, with the gas heater going full force and his brother George was dead on the floor beside the tub.

The tragedy was recalled Monday by the experience of Dr. E. L. Gardiner, who occupies the same offices. He lighted the gas heater to take a bath, and a few minutes later when he went into the bathroom he was overcome by carbon dioxide, and not until after several hours of hard work by physicians did he regain consciousness.

It is believed the LaFlamboy brothers must have been overcome by gas and were not discovered in time.

Feeling Well.

Jackson, Mich., Jan. 8.—Charles T. Wright, the paroled lumberman, came from Eaton Rapids to Jackson Monday to get some things left at the prison last Thursday, when he was released after a stay of over 10 years. He has improved wonderfully in physical appearance since his liberation. "I am feeling much better," he said, "eating with a ravenous appetite and getting fat."

"How about this warrant that is here in Jackson for your arrest for the murder of Neal Marshall?" was asked him.

"I don't know a thing about that, haven't heard a thing, and don't really know what will be done in regard to it," he replied.

"I haven't permitted myself to be disturbed by anything since I left here. I haven't read the Detroit papers and don't know what they have said about me. I do know that sentiment is changing in my favor. All that is needed to do that is to let the truth be known."

Fears Smallpox.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 8.—The fact that smallpox is prevalent in a mild form in 55 places in the state has inspired Senator Kelly with the fear that the disease may break out among the legislators and cause an adjournment. Monday the senator called on Secretary Baker, of the state board of health, and suggested that the legislators be officially advised to be vaccinated.

The board has frequently during the past three months urged all citizens of the state who have not been vaccinated successfully within five years to be vaccinated at once. A new outbreak of smallpox was reported Monday from Onekama township, Manistee county.

On a Strike.

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 8.—The cigarmakers in the city are out on a strike. They demand an increase of from $10 to $12 on clear Havana and mixed goods. The dealers have refused to accede to the demands and the result is a lockout of nearly all of the shops in the city. The manufacturers claim that they cannot meet the demands and make any money on the goods, and will hold out as long as the strikers. It is claimed that the cigarmakers are the best paid employes in the city, making from $12 to $16 a week for eight hours' work a day. Some of the cigarmakers are not in sympathy with the move and a meeting of the members of the union will be held to settle the question.

Coal Piles Burning.

Escanaba, Mich., Jan. 8.—Fire was discovered in the coal dock of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Co here and a large force of men was at once put to work removing the coal and preparing to fight the smoldering fire. The docks contain between 35,000 and 40,000 tons of coal belonging to the Northwestern company and the Reiss Coal Co., of Sheboygan. The Reiss company's dock at Sheboygan, containing 40,000 tons, has been on fire for the past week and is still burning.

New Michigan Postmasters.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Michigan postmasters were appointed Monday as follows: Bay Springs, Charlevoix county, L. R. Chase, Jr., vice Erwin E. Hall resigned; Farnsworth, Wexford county, S. D. Casler, vice O. J. Labatt, resigned; Goodland, Lapeer county, Wm. H. Manning, vice A. Furstenan, resigned; Kinny, Kent county, Joseph W. Monroe, vice John Kinney, resigned; Milnes, Hillsdale county, Willard M. Stone, vice Wilson Houseknecht, resigned; Verne, Saginaw county, O. L. Bennett, vice N. E. Bennett, resigned.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Michigan pensions were granted Monday as follows: Original—Robert H. Brown Detroit, $12. Restoration and increase—Morris O'Connell, dead, Carleton, $12. Widows—Sarah O'Connell, Carleton, $8; Lucy F. Wolf, Constantine, $8; Lucy Gurnee, Corunna, $8; Valina L. Summers, Berrien Springs, $8.

Killed in Illinois.

Niles, Mich., Jan. 8.—Ralph Power, a well-known young man of this place, was killed by a freight train on the Illinois Central at Kempton, Ill., Monday afternoon. E. H. Power, father of the deceased, is in the plumbing business here and is widely known. The remains will be brought here for burial.

No Longer Threatening.

Washington, Jan. 8.—After having communicated to the state department relative to the condition of affairs in Venezuela connected with the asphalt controversy, the navy department this afternoon sent orders to Commander Hawley, of the Hartford, authorizing him to leave La Guira and resume his training cruise. The departure of the Hartford will leave only one vessel, the Scorpion, in Venezuelan waters an indication of the belief of the state department that conditions there no longer threaten American interests.

Armour's Funeral.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—The funeral of the late Philip D. Armour will be held at 1 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at the home, No. 2115 Prairie avenue. Those who desire to look upon the face of Mr. Armour will be given the opportunity prior to the funeral. The body will lie in state at the Armour home from 9 o'clock in the morning until noon

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

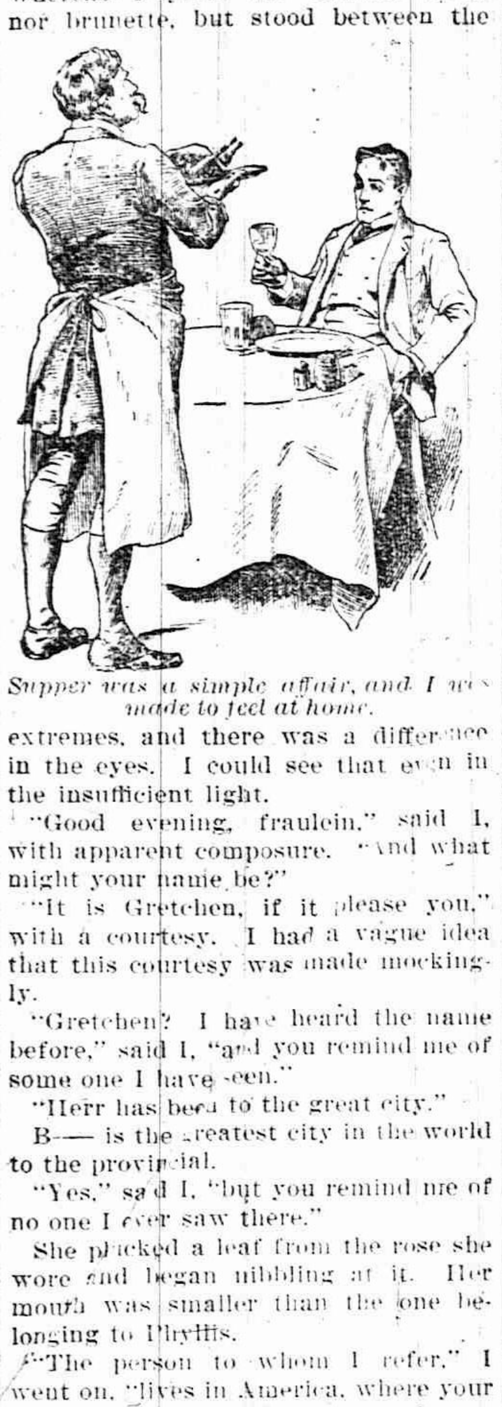
It annoyed me. I had seen some one, then. What would Phyllis, proud Phyllis, say, I mused, when she heard that a barmaid was her prototype? This thought had scarcely left me when the door in the rear of the bar opened and in came the barmaid herself. No, it was not Phyllis, but the resemblance was so startling that I caught my breath and stared at her with a persistency which bordered on rudeness. The barmaid was blond whereas Phyllis was neither blond nor brunette, but stood between the extremes, and there was a difference in the eyes. I could see that even in the insufficient light.



Supper was a simple affair, and I was made to feel at home.

"Good evening, fraulein," said I, with apparent composure. "And what might your name be?"

"It is Gretchen, if it please you," with a courtesy. I had a vague idea that this courtesy was made mockingly.

"Gretchen? I have heard the name before," said I, "and you remind me of some one I have seen."

"Herr has been to the great city."

B—— is the greatest city in the world to the provincial.

"Yes," said I, "but you remind me of no one I ever saw there."

She plucked a leaf from the rose she wore and began nibbling at it. Her mouth was smaller than the one belonging to Phyllis.

"The person to whom I refer," I went on, "lives in America, where your compatriots brew fine beer and wax rich."

"Ah, herr is an American! I like Americans," archly. "They are so liberal."

I laughed, but I did not tell her why. All foreigners have a great love of Americans, "they are so liberal."

"So you find Americans liberal? Is it with money or with compliments?"

Said Gretchen, "The one when they haven't the other." A very bright barmaid, thought I. Then I said, "Is this your home?"

"Yes," said Gretchen; "I was born here, and I have tended the roses for ever so long."

"I have heard of Gretchen of the steins, but I never before heard of a Gretchen of the roses.

"Herr must have a large store of compliments on hand to begin thus early."

"It is a part of my capital," said I. "Once in Switzerland I complimented an innkeeper, and when my bill was presented I found that all extras had been crossed off."

Gretchen laughed. It was a low laugh—a laugh which appeared to me as having been aroused not at what I had said, but at something which had recurred to her. I wanted to hear it again, so I said: "I suppose you have a stein here from which the king has drunk. All taverns and inns have them."

Gretchen only smiled, but the smile was worth something. "No; the king has never been within five miles of this inn."

"So much the worse for the king."

"And why that?"

"The king has missed seeing Gretchen."

It was then Gretchen laughed.

"I have never heard compliments like herr's before."

"Why, I have any amount of them. I'll drink half a liter to your health."

She filled one of the old blue earthen steins.

"I haven't seen your roses in the gardens, but I'll drink to those in your cheeks," said I, and I drew back the pewter lid.

"How long does herr intend to stay?" asked Gretchen.

"To the day is the evil thereof."

"Ah, one must be happy with nothing to do."

"Then you have the ambition common to all; to sit around and let others wait upon you?"

"No, that is not my ambition. I wish only to wait upon my own desires and not those of the—the others."

"It is all the same," said I. "Some must serve, others must be served."

When I went up stairs to my room, it was my belief that a week or so at the inn would not hang heavy on my hands. I had forgotten for the moment the princess or that I was hunting for Hillars. It is strange how a face may upset one's plans. Gretchen's likeness to Phyllis, whom I loved, upset mine for many days to come.

As I gazed from my window the next morning I beheld the old innkeeper and Gretchen engaged in earnest conversation. He appeared to be pleading—nay, entreating—while she merely shook her head and laughed. Finally the old man lifted his hands to heaven and disappeared around the wing. When I came down, Gretchen was in the gardens culling roses. She said they were for the table.

"Very well," said I. "Give me one now."

"You may have them all at the table."

"But I shall not want them then."

She gave me an enigmatical glance, then cut a rose for me which was withered and worm eaten.

"Gretchen is unkind," I observed.

"What matters it whether the rose be fresh or withered? It dies sooner or later. Nothing lasts, not even the world itself. You wish a rose not because it is a rose, fresh, and fragrant, but because I give it to you."

"You wrong me, Gretchen. I love a rose better than I love a woman. It never smiles falsely, the rose, or plays with the hearts of men. I love a rose because it is sweet and because it was made for man's pleasure and not for his pain."

"That sounds like a copy book," laughed Gretchen. "The withered rose should teach you a lesson."

"What lesson?"

"That whatever a woman gives to man withers in the exchange—a rose, a woman's love."

Said I reproachfully: "You are spoiling a very pretty picture. What do you know about philosophy?"

"What does herr know about roses?" defiantly.

"Much. One cannot pick too many fresh ones. And let me tell you a lesson which you should have learned among these roses. Nature teaches us to love all things fresh and beautiful—a rose, a face, a woman's love."

"Here," holding forth a great red rose.

"No," said I; "I'll keep this one."

She said nothing, but went on snipping a red rose here, a white one there. She wore gloves several sizes too large for her, so I judged that her hands were small and tender, perhaps white. And there was a grace in her movements, despite the ungainly dress and shoes, which suggested a more intimate knowledge of velvets and silks than of calico. In my mind's eye I placed her at the side of Phyllis. Phyllis reminded me of a Venus whom nature had whimsically left unfinished. Then she had turned from Venus to Diana, and Gretchen became evolved, a Diana slim and willowy. A sculptor would have said that Phyllis might have been a goddess and Gretchen a wood nymph had not nature suddenly changed her plans. What I admired in Phyllis was her imperfect beauties. What I admired in Gretchen was her beautiful perfections. And they were so alike and yet so different. Have you ever seen a body of fresh water ruffled by a sudden gust of wind, the cool blue green tint which follows? Then you have seen the color of Gretchen's eyes. Have you ever seen ripe wheat in a sun shower? Then you have seen the color of Gretchen's hair. All in all, I was forced to admit that, from an impartial and artistic view, Gretchen the barmaid was far more beautiful than Phyllis. From the standpoint of a lover it was altogether a different matter.

"Gretchen," said I, "you are very good looking."

"It would not be difficult to tell herr's nationality."

"Which means"—

"That the American says in one sentence what it would take a German or a Frenchman several hundred sentences to say." Gretchen was growing more interesting every minute.

"Then your mirror and I are not the only ones who have told you that you are as beautiful as Hebe herself?"

"I am not Hebe," coldly. "I am a poor barmaid, and I never spill any wine."

"So you understand mythology?" I cried in wonder.

"Does herr think that all barmaids are as ignorant as fiction and ill meaning novelists depict them? I have had a fair education."

"If I ever was guilty of thinking so," said I, answering her question, "I promise never to think so again."

"And now will herr go to his breakfast and let me attend to my duties?"

"Not without regret," I said gallantly. I bowed to her as they bowed in the days of the beaus, while she looked on suspiciously. At the breakfast table I proceeded to bombard the innkeeper. I wanted to know more about Gretchen. "Is Gretchen your daughter?" I began.

"No; I am only her godfather," he said. "Does herr wish another egg?"

"Thanks. She is very well educated for a barmaid."

"Yes. Does herr wish Rhine wine?"

"Coffee is plenty. Has Gretchen seen many Americans?"

"Few. Perhaps herr would like a knoblauch with salt and vinegar?"

It occurred to me that Gretchen was not to be discussed, so I made for another channel. "I have heard," said I, "that once upon a time a princess was born in this inn."

The old fellow elevated both eyebrows and shoulders—a deprecating movement. "They say that of every inn. It has become a trade." If I had known the old man, I might have said that he was sarcastic.

"Then there is no truth in it?" disappointedly.

"Oh, I do not say there is no truth in the statement. If herr will pardon me, it is something I do not like to talk about."

"Ah, then there is a mystery!" I cried, with lively interest, pushing back my chair. But the innkeeper shook his head determinedly.

"Very well," I laughed; "I shall ask Gretchen."

He smiled. The smile said, "Much good it will do you." Gretchen was in the barroom arranging some roses over the fireplace. Her hands were bare; they were small and white and surprisingly well kept.

"Gretchen," said I, "I want you to tell me the legend of the inn."

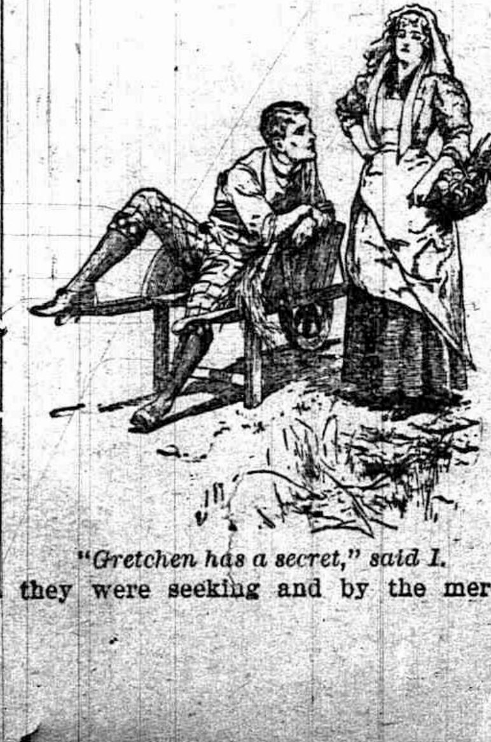
"The legend?"

"Yes; about the princess who was born here."

Gretchen laughed a merry laugh. The laugh said, "You are an amusing person!"

"Ah, the American is always after legends when he has tired of collecting antiquities. Was there a princess born here? Perhaps. At any rate it is not a legend. History nor peasantry makes mention of it. Will herr be so kind as to carry the ladder to the mantel so I may wind the clock?"

I do so. Even at this early stage I could see that Gretchen had the faculty of making persons forget what they were seeking and by the mere sound of her voice. And it was I who wound the clock.



"Gretchen has a secret," said I.

"Gretchen," said I, "time lags. Make a servant out of me this morning."

"Herr does the barmaid too much honor," with lowered eyes.

"I am in the habit of doing anything I please."

"Ah, herr is one of those millionaires I have read about!"

"Yes, I am very rich." I laughed, but Gretchen did not see the point.

"Come, then, with me, and you shall weed the knoblauch patch." She was laughing at me, but I was not to be abashed.

"To the patch be it, then!" I cried. "An onion would smell as sweet under any other name."

So Gretchen and I went into the onion patch, and I weeded and hoed and hoed and weeded till my back ached and my hands were the color of the soil. Nothing was done satisfactorily to Gretchen. It was "There, you have ruined the row back of you!" or "Pull the weeds more gently!" and sometimes, "Ach, could your friends see you now!" I suppose that I did not make a pretty picture. The perspiration would run down my face. I would forget the condition of my hands and push back my hair, which fell like a mop over my brow, whereat she would laugh. Once I took her hand and helped her to jump over a row. I was surprised at the strength of her grasp.

"What does herr do for a living? He works so badly as a gardener."

"I am a journalist," I answered, leaning on my hoe and breathing heavily.

"Ach, one of those men who tell such dreadful stories about kings and princes, who cause men to go to war with each other, who rouse the ignorant to deeds of violence—one of those men who are more powerful than a king because they can undo him!" She drew away from me.

"Hold on!" I cried, dropping the hoe. "What do you know about it?"

"Enough," sadly. "I read the papers. I always look with fear upon one of those men who can do so much good and yet who would do so much evil."

I had never looked at it in that light before.

"It seems to me, Gretchen," I said quietly, "that you are about as much a barmaid as I am a weeder of knoblauches." The color of excitement fled from Gretchen's cheeks, her eyes grew troubled, and she looked away.

"Gretchen has a secret," said I. "It is nothing to me what Gretchen's secret is. I shall respect it and continue to think of her only as a barmaid with—with a superior education." I shouldered the hoe. "Come, let us go back. I'm thirsty."

"Thank you, herr," was the soft reply. Then Gretchen became as dumb, and our return to the inn was made in silence. Once there, however, she recovered. "I am sorry to have put you at such a disadvantage," glancing at my clothes, which were covered with brown earth.

"Let that be the least of your troubles!" I cried gayly. Then I hummed in English:

"So, ho, dear Gretchen, winsome lass,
I want no tricky wine,
But amber nectar bring to me,
Whose rich bouquet will cling to me,
Whose spirit voice will sing to me
From out the mug divine!
So, here's your toll—a kiss—away,
You Hebe of the Rhine!
No goblet's gold means cheer to me;
Let no cut glass get near to me;
Go, Gretchen, haste the beer to me
And put it in the stein!"

I thought I saw a smile on her lips, but it was gone before I was certain.

"Gott im himmel!" gasped the astonished innkeeper as I went into the barroom. I still had the hoe over my shoulder.

"Never mind, mein host. I've been weeding your knoblauch patch as a method of killing time."

"But"— He looked at Gretchen in dismay.

"It was I who led him there," said Gretchen in answer to his inquiring eyes.

A significant glance passed between them. There was a question in his, a command in hers. I pretended to be examining the faded tints in the stein I held in my hand. I was thinking, "Since when has an innkeeper waited on the wishes of his barmaid?"

There was a mystery after all.

An Eloquent Answer.

A colored citizen gave a justice of the peace a big, fat possum as a wedding fee.

Meeting the justice a year after his marriage, the former said:

"Well, Jim, how do you like married life?"

"Well, suh," was the reply, "all I kin say is I wish I'd eat dat possum!"—Atlanta Constitution.

An Outrage.

"What makes you so late?" asked his mother.

"The teacher kept me in because I couldn't find Moscow on the map of Europe," replied Johnny.

"And no wonder you couldn't find Moscow! It was burned down in 1812. It's an outrage to treat a child that way!"

Brown For Autumn.

From Paris comes the announcement that brown is to be a prevailing autumn color. A rather strong tobacco shade it will be, with a suggestion of red in its composition. But of all neutral tints brown is the one that requires the greatest care in selection. When it suits the wearer, it is "horrid." Brown and burned orange, by the way, are a delightful alliance when carefully combined. Just a touch of orange in velvet or soft satin and provided the brown is sufficiently strong a relieving note of black is effective.

Mosquito Remedy.

One of the best methods of clearing the room of mosquitoes is likewise efficacious with regard to moth millers, and this is it: Put a piece of gum camphor on a fire shovel and hold it over the lighted gas until it smokes. It should not blaze up, but blaze slowly enough to form a good smudge. The doors of closets and the bureau drawers should be opened if one fears that the moth millers have found their way in.

Palmer and Douglas.

General John M. Palmer was fond of telling the amusing circumstances under which he first met Stephen A. Douglas. During the summer of 1838, with a desire to see more of the world, he started out to peddle clocks in western Illinois. One evening Palmer and a friend stopped at a little inn at Carthage and were awakened at night with the explanation that they would have to take two men into their beds.

One of the newcomers asked the politics of Palmer and his companion.

"My friend is a Whig," said Palmer, "and I am a Democrat."

"Well, you take the Whig," said the stranger to his companion, "and I'll turn in with the Democrat."

In the morning Palmer learned that his bedfellow was Douglas.

CHILDREN PERISHED

Fire in the Hospital of the Rochester Orphan Asylum.

HEAVY LOSS OF LIFE FEARED

Nineteen Children and Two Nurses Known to be Dead, and it is Feared Many More Victims May be Reported Later.

Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 8.—Fire broke out in the hospital section of the Rochester orphan asylum at 1 o'clock Tuesday morning, on Hubbell Park, and the flames spread rapidly to other sections of the institution. It is known that 19 of the children perished, and it is feared that many more victims may be reported later.

The fire was first discovered by two men passing the asylum. They hastily sent in an alarm and then turned their attention toward arousing the nurses and the children. A terrific explosion was then heard and in a moment the entire hospital section was in flames. On the arrival of the fire apparatus a general alarm was sent in, calling out the entire department. The smoke began to pour out of every window in the main building, and the screams and frantic cries of the children could be heard. The work of rescue began with a will. Children and nurses were carried from the building all in an unconscious condition, some dead. Ambulances from the city, St. Mary's, homeopathic and Hahnemann hospitals were summoned and the victims were removed to the several institutions.

There were 109 children at the hospital and a corps of about 30 nurses and attendants. Two of the women attendants are among the dead.

The origin of the fire is not known at this time. The property loss will probably exceed $20,000.

London Wool Auctions.

London, Jan. 8.—The arrivals of wool for the first series of 1901 auction sales closed Monday with the following lists: New South Wales, 62,837; Queensland, 31,032; Victoria, 45,000; South Australia, 26,802; West Australia, 6,539; Tasmania, 333; New Zealand, 38,483; Cape of Good Hope and Natal, 39,023. The amount available for the sales, 338,959, includes 130,000 bales of old stock.

Gold Export to Europe.

New York, Jan. 8.—Students of the money market and foreign exchange figure after Monday's advance in sterling exchange that exports of gold to Europe are inevitable. In fact it was officially stated that some $50,000,000 gold had already been collected to meet the first call, but no engagements were announced and none will be made this week, it was believed.

Congressional Sick List.

Washington, Jan. 8.—The prevailing epidemic of grippe has caused quite a large congressional sick list. Speaker Henderson is progressing well and is out of bed, but it was not deemed advisable to have him resume the duties of the speakership Monday. Chairman Davis, of the ways and means committee, was also affected.

TELEGRAPHIC TICKS.

Tim Callahan, of Philadelphia, knocked out Oscar Gardner, of Omaha, in the 15th round at the Iserotic club, Boston, Monday night.

Dr. Geo. Taylor Stewart, superintendent of the Metropolitan hospital, was Monday appointed superintendent of Bellevue hospital, New York, with power to discharge, suspend or remove any doctor, nurse or employe.

Tenpin knights from all over the country have assembled at Chicago to participate in the annual meeting and championships of the American Bowling Congress, which commences there Tuesday afternoon.

The directors of the Reading company, at a meeting held at Philadelphia Monday, decided to accept the proposition from J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York, for the sale of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

All records were broken on the stock exchange in New York Monday. Up to the close of the exchange about 2,150,000 shares had been dealt in, the greatest number of transactions recorded in the history of the exchange.

The Indiana Portland Cement Co., which was incorporated some time ago in New Jersey, Monday filed a certificate increasing its capital from $1,500,000 to $5,000,000. The certificate is signed by R. H. Evans, president, and V. O. Faulk, secretary.

The Most Beautiful Queen.

Queen Helen of Italy since her marriage has been considered the most beautiful princess of Europe, as she is now the most beautiful queen. It was her beauty that won for her the love of the prince imperial, through whom she is now the first lady of Italy. Her father, the king of no more important a realm than Montenegro, could hardly have expected of her so great a distinction, although her sister is married to Grand Duke Peter of Russia. The present king's unpopularity in court circles dates from his marriage to this dowerless bride. The jealousy with which he guards her has added to the personal dislike for the young king so common among those in high places. Whenever at court functions or during their travels etiquette demands that the beautiful Helen should be escorted by a minister or dignitary of the town Prince Victor has invariably refused the honor, permitting no one to "usurp the privilege." It is needless to say that these tactics have made him thoroughly unpopular.

Answered the General.

"The old sappers were admirable fellows," says a writer in Cassier's Magazine, "as brave as lions, though sometimes rather stupid. A certain peninsular general rode down to some sappers who were digging trenches and commenced to cross question one on his duties. You must know that a gabion is a basket which can be filled with earth and so made to stop a bullet, and a fascine is a bundle of fagots.

"'Now, supposing the first sapper in the trench you were driving were killed,' said the general, 'what would you do with him?'

"'Stuff him in a gabion, sir,' said the stolid sapper.

"'And what would you do with the second if he were killed?' said the officer in surprise.

"'Make a fascine of him, sir.'

"The general rode off without another word."

The average man will pay 50 cents to see a show of fireworks and neglect to look at the sunset, which he can see almost every night for nothing.—Louisville Journal.

A STRENGTHENER

Vinol Promptly Overcomes Weakness.

DEBILITY OFTEN PRECEDES COMPLETE COLLAPSE.

We Want Every One to Know How to Get Strong.

OUR VINOL IS A STRENGTH CREATOR.

The saddest sight on earth is a broken-down man or woman.

We see such people every day right here in our city.

It is pitiful to see a man that should be in his prime dragging himself through life dejected, discouraged and broken down, due to some premature weakness. It does not make any difference whether this weakness is the result of dissipation, indiscreet living or disease; it can be overcome.

We have known of many very serious cases of debility quickly overcome by Vinol.

Vinol is a scientific rebuilder and strength creator. It contains the active curative principles of Cod-Liver Oil in a highly concentrated form. The benefit that can be derived from the use of these properties is so well known that there is no need for us to enter into that subject.

We could quote many instances where Vinol has done good; as an example, here is one coming from Jane S. Fenfren, a prominent member of the W. C. T. U., and a resident of Suncook, N. H. She writes:

"I was run down, was in bed from May to March. Was so nervous and sickly that every one thought I was in a most precarious condition. My weight was reduced to 120 pounds. I was advised to take Vinol, which I did, and am now very much better, and am able to be about again. As a rebuilder and a strength giver nothing can equal it. Vinol is a God-blessing to anybody."

Because Vinol is delicious, and because it does contain these much-sought-after medicinal properties we endorse it, and we unhesitatingly proclaim that it is better than any preparation of cod-liver oil or tonic rebuilder we have ever had in our store.

THE BOOZ INQUIRY.

The Tentmate of Booz the Star Witness Before Committee.

Philadelphia, Jan. 8.—According to the testimony adduced before the congressional investigation committee, which is inquiring into the charges of hazing at the West Point military academy Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol, Pa., and John E. Breth, of Altoona, Pa., had a rough time of it during their "pleb" year at that institution. The star witness of the day was Cadet Anthony J. Burnam, Jr., son of Judge Burnam, of the court of appeals of the state of Kentucky, who was Booz's tentmate while in camp. The committee also heard for the first time testimony in regard to the experiences of Breth from the lips of his father, brothers and sisters.

Tuesday the Breth family will submit further evidence in the way of letters from the cadet while he was at West Point.

The committee got into a legal tangle with Lucien Alexander, secretary of the board of examiners for the admission of law students to the bar. The committee wanted to learn what sort of an average Booz made in his examination, but Mr. Alexander refused to state except on an order from the courts of this city, believing that under a rule of the courts he would be in contempt for making such information public. He persisted in his refusal, although he said he would cheerfully give the information if the could would permit him, and the committee allowed him until 10 o'clock today to choose whether to be in contempt of courts of Philadelphia or the United States house of representatives.

The committee will probably conclude its work here to-day and will begin the taking of testimony of the cadets at West Point on Wednesday

Rate Cutting Prevalent.

Washington, Jan. 8.—Prof. Wm. Z. Ripley, of Boston, Mass., testified Monday before the industrial commission upon the subject of general transportation. He claimed that rate cutting and freight discriminations are very prevalent at present, especially in New England states. He said that it was of the utmost importance to manufacturers to have a uniform system of rates. In his opinion the corporation laws of the states are too lax except in Massachusetts, where the railroad commissioners are empowered to approve leases and reorganizations and pass upon all financial operations. He said that if the powers of the interstate commerce commission were increased so as to enable it to regulate the corporation laws uniformly similar to those of Massachusetts, it would have more power over the condition of rates and many existing abuses would be mitigated.

The Highest Art.

The word "artistic" has been so misapplied that the majority of people suppose it means something rather disorderly and haphazard. How often literature gives us the prim, precise maiden aunt, with her narrow, intense love of exact outline, and the art loving niece, all on fire with raptures over "color harmonies" and contempt for everything which is not picturesque! Let us give our sympathy, however, to the derided aunt. Craze for color is a lower degree of the sense of beauty than appreciation of symmetrical arrangement. Sculpture is a finer achievement of the intellect than painting. Savages and ignorant children can take pleasure in color display, but only an educated mind is moved through effects of form.—Florence Hull Winterburn in Woman's Home Companion.

The Japanese Minister's Wife.

Mme. Takahira, the wife of the new Japanese minister to this country, is a woman of many attractions and fine education. She has a beautiful complexion, large and expressive eyes and a quantity of glossy black hair. She dresses in American style, with perfect taste, and her jewelry is remarkably fine. She is a member of a noble family and was educated at one of the best schools for women in Japan. She was married in 1887 and has since accompanied her husband upon his various diplomatic missions, which have at different times taken him to China, The Hague, Rome, Vienna as well as to the United States.

Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1.00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

Her 92nd Birthday.

Wednesday, January 2nd, of the new year and new century, was Grandma Tilden's 92nd birthday, which was celebrated with a 5 o'clock tea, given her by the Misses McNeil at their home.

Grandma walked down from her home in the morning and passed a happy day without even lying down to rest.

The table was spread with a rich repast and decorated with smilax and carnations. Heartfelt thanks were offered to the Giver of all good things not only to invigorate the body but also for that spiritual food which gives life and strength to our inner natures.

While the company were in full enjoyment of the occasion, "Joe" dropped in to see what time his mother wished to be taken home Instead of waiting for him to get his horse, the old (young) lady insisted upon taking his arm and walking home, taking with her the good wishes of the company together with the flowers and gifts of love of her old friends and neighbors. Mrs. Stacy, 10 years younger than Grandma, was taken home by the politeness of "a Jim" that needed neither harness nor reins.

The guests were Rev. Miss Haight and mother, Mrs. Stacy and daughter, Mrs. Rundall and grand daughter, Miss Hyde, whose mother and aunt were unable to join the party, and Miss Hanford.

ROUND ABOUT US.

An Ann Arbor physician made $100 in a day lately, vaccinating people who had the small pox scare.

An exchange remarks that there are some papers that foolishly imagine because mistletoe is reported to be scarce and high in price this season that the holiday kissing game has received a body blow, but fortunately the practice of osculation—winter, summer, spring or fall—does not depend on the mistletoe crop—if all reports are true.

Dr. W. S. Mills removed a needle from the leg of a well known lady in this city Thursday, which had entered by way of the foot some 20 years ago. The needle had worked up just below the knee. It had been troubling her for some months. The doctor made a slight incision and removed the needle. —Washtenaw Times.

Amos [illegible]aker, a retired Clayton farmer, a[illegible] 75 years old, bet with Levi Bake[illegible] Sabin Hutchins $5 that he could stand on his head on the ice with skates on. After several attempts and much laughter from the crowd he succeeded in the job, won the bet and called for an oyster supper. All the parties are prominent men in town.—Ex.

"The Lounger," in the State Republican: Gov. Bliss was very nervous after he was sworn in. When he went upstairs to the executive offices he flitted hither and thither, apparently looking for some one. He seemed worried. After a while Mrs. Bliss appeared. The governor's face cleared and he went over to her They exchanged a few words with pleasant smiles. He looked worried no longer. Col. and Mrs. Bliss, it is said, are more like chums than husbands and wives usually are.—Ex.

A certain little girl of Hillsdale is very devout, and has a child's faith in prayer. She is accustomed to make all her wants known in that manner, and nothing within the limits of her desires fails to take the form of a petition of that kind. She has been praying for nice weather a short time ago and her grandmother suggested that she pray for warmer as well as finer weather. So the little girl promptly obeyed and this is the way she did it: "Oh, God," she said, "I want it to be real nice weather, God, please don't forget to make it hot for Grandma!"—Ex.

August Custer, of Dundee, was operated upon at Grace hospital, Detroit, for a bone cancer upon the thigh of his right leg. It was found imperative to amputate the leg at the hip and the method of injecting cocaine into the spinal column was used. From all appearances Custer, while conscious, did not suffer at all during the operation. He did not heed the pricking of a needle or the cutting of the knife. He lay there with his eyes open much more unconcerned than the witnesses to the operation, who were somewhat anxious relative to the success of the up-to-date use of the powerful drug. Last night Custer was resting easily.

History repeats. A certain man made a great supper and bade many Then they began to make excuse! One had bought a piece of ground; another five yoke of oxen, while another had a new wife. Then the master was angry and he sent his servant into the streets and lanes to bring hither the poor, the main, the halt and blind. Even then there was room, and again he sent his servant out into the highways and hedges and compelled them to come in that his house might be full. If not the Supreme Court, the Senate and the railroad officials, the bon ton, surely the lame, the halt and the blind shall not be too swift to escape. So the feast went on.—Blissfield Advance.

Old newspapers form an important item in domestic economy, and are useful for polishing window glasses, for cleaning lamp chimneys, for testing and cleaning flatirons, and for a dozen other things: you will also need heaps of them when you come to pack away clothing. The clothes moth, like other evil doors, has an aversion to printers' ink. An excellent moth proof bag, second only to the expensive tar bag, and costing nothing, may be made of two edges folded as for an inch wide hem and securely pasted. Bags of the same kind are about the best thing you can use for keeping seeds and dried herbs. They are dust and insect-proof and can be labeled and hung in the storeroom until needed.

The cheery woman plays an important part every day that she lives. She is always needed. There is no time when she can be spared from the face of the earth, for there is this day, and another, and all other days when you and I will be glad to see her, and hear her say to us: "The darkest hour is always before the day," or something else quite as hopeful. The bravely optimistic woman, however, does not force her smiles upon you If you are grieved, she will weep with you. She will not insist that your trouble, which is a real one, else you would not weep, is as thin and light as air. That it worries you is enough to demand her sympathy, though it is her way to set about to see if she can't point out to you a way to clear up, and she is willing to put her shoulder to the wheel, too, to help you do so.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

With LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

For some years Japan has inundated the markets of the world with her squares of stuff called foukousas, which are used to wrap up the presents sent to friends in that country, and Europeans have not hesitated to make of them brilliant ornamental designs for modern furniture. In cushions, screens, etc., they introduce a charming freshness; a flight of birds, a swarm of butterflies amid brilliant flowers, giving the eye a vague dream of cheerful light, of fancies and summers that have no end.

But words can only faintly evoke an idea of what these poems in silk really are. It sometimes takes ten years to finish one of these pictures. It makes one think of the embroideries of the "King's House" in days of old, who styled themselves "embroiderers and painters." It is the same obscure and anonymous labor as that of the artisans of the middle ages, who have bequeathed to posterity marvelous liturgical embroideries and sublime cathedrals.

One would really say that embroidery had revived in the country of its origin, Asia. But in[illegible]ead of returning to the land of its cradle it has followed the general evolution toward the north and taken refuge in Japan. No matter where these silks are placed, they are a delight to the eye, a symphony in lines, a poem in colors, and our frail modern art furniture harmonizes splendidly with the mural hangings of an art so intense and so new.—Exchange.

The Latest Note Paper.

Tinted note paper is again in fashion. More than this, the smartest papetrie is elaborately decorated, and the quality of the paper itself has been radically changed for the autumn-winter trade. Cadet gray, French blue, Yale blue and gray green papers, that have always been popular, as well as the bank note, cream laid, kid and linen finishes, are all quite out of the running today. The correspondence supplies now come in pastel or the deeper autumn tones, having a cartridge and burlaps finish.

The pastel tinted sheets are cut quite small indeed. It is an evidence of good taste just now to use small sized paper for letters as well as notes, and all the stamping is done in very small script or old English lettering. Furiously as the black letter fashion raged, it has with unexpected suddenness been dropped from general use, and it is a prevailing notion to have the address stamped across the upper corners of the sheets and at the left hand side. The dating must be given at the conclusion of the missive; and monograms and crests are rarely or never seen on anything but engraved invitations.

James R. Lowell and Women.

In reply to assertions made about James Russell Lowell's attitude toward women, William Dean Howells, in a recent paper, says:

"He loved chiefly the companionship of books and of men who loved books, but for women generally he had an amusing diffidence. He revered them and honored them, but he would rather not have them about. This is oversaying it, of course, but the truth is in what I say. There was never a more devoted husband, and he was content to let his devotion to the sex end with that. He especially could not abide difference of opinion in women. He

The Other Way.

A pale and disheveled Frenchman who had not found "a life on the ocean wave" all that could be expected, was sinking into his steamer chair, when a passenger asked cheerily: "Ah, good morning, monsieur; have you breakfasted?"

"No, monsieur," answered the pallid Frenchman, "I have not breakfasted; on the contrary!"

A part of the curious list of Lady Littleton's wedding outfit 200 years ago is as follows: "A black paddysway gown and coat, a pink unwatered pabby sute of cloaths, a gold stuff sute of cloaths, a white worked with sneal sute of cloaths."

Window Plants.

When selecting your plants for the window garden, you must take into consideration the light, heating and ventilation of the room in which they are to spend the winter, for all these help to make your work a success or a failure. There are plants that will thrive under one set of conditions which would die under another, but I have yet to see the window where plants of some sort might not be raised. When one can go direct to a florist and explain the conditions, the matter is easily settled. When that is not possible, one must learn by reading and experience. The otaheite orange is easily grown and is most interesting. When but a few inches high, one may see oranges, blossoms and buds on the same plant. I have seen one seven inches in circumference upon which the ripe fruit hung for a year. Dwarf cannas are also quite easily grown and give a tropical effect to the room that is most cheering in cold weather.—N. B. H. in Housekeeper.

Lord and Lady Hopetoun.

When in Melbourne, Lord and Lady Hopetoun gained a great popularity. They entertained lavishly and were full of young life and spirits. Their doings were the talk of every one—the menagerie of animals they kept, the original parties they gave and the picturesque attire which they made their servants adopt when waiting at table. They were juvenile enough to be up to pranks, but their pranks were always innocent ones, and they enjoyed them together like children. In appearance Lady Hopetoun is particularly attractive, her face has gained in soft, gentle expression, and her carriage is full of dignity. Like her husband, she has a real love for animals and keeps a good many pets at Hopetoun House. Of Shetland ponies she is particularly fond and enjoys driving her pair for miles over her estate. The countess has many accomplishments, but driving is her favorite hobby.

A Word About Glycerin.

Since so many people use pure glycerin for the skin a word of caution seems necessary. If you apply a little glycerin to the tip of the tongue, you will find that, although it has a pleasant, sweet taste, the first sensation that is felt is one of pain and burning. This is caused by the fact that glycerin has a strong affinity for water and that it absorbs all the moisture from the surface which it touches, thus drying up and parching the nerves. Ignorant of this fact, nurses and mothers have applied pure glycerin to the chafed skin of infants, producing often great pain. The glycerin ought to have been first mixed with an equal bulk of water. This being done, it may be applied to the most tender surfaces without producing injury, and, as [illegible] does not dry up, it virtually maintains [illegible]art in a constantly moist condition, [illegible]cluding the air and promoting the healing process.

Continuing Family Names.

Passing family names along from generation to generation is a well established custom in the large and ever increasing family circle of the royal house of England. Queen Victoria has no less than seven namesakes among her living descendants. These are a daughter, the Princess Victoria, who married Frederick of Prussia; three granddaughters and three great-granddaughters. It is not at all probable, therefore, that English royalty will lack a Victoria for a long time to come.

May Dispense With Chaperon.

This year's social history marks an important date, for it was the first season in which young girls in England have been officially permitted to go out without a chaperon. This is certainly one of the greatest social changes of recent date, and, though Lady Jeune hopes that the innovation is only temporary, there is every reason to believe that the days for the chaperon are gone and that they will not return until another social revolution is upon us.

His Free Library.

A Main street secondhand bookstore was the scene of an amusing little comedy the other day. A ragged urchin, who had crept in unnoticed, pulled a dog eared book with a gilded title of love and adventure from the rack and, after fingering it for a moment, became immediately absorbed in the thrilling tale.

When the bookseller caught sight of his impecunious visitor, his first impulse was to chase the boy away. On second thought, however, he left the youthful reader to his pleasure. At length the time for closing came around, and the old man set about bolting the shutters.

The noise awoke the urchin from his dream. He lingeringly closed the book and, sidling up to the proprietor, asked with all the assurance of his gutter training, "Say, mister, what time d'yer open termorrer?"—Hartford Telegram.

At a luncheon recently held by a Brooklyn woman the salad course consisted of chopped celery with mayonnaise dressing served in a basket formed by deftly scooping out the pulp from a large, firm tomato. In the center of each basket was a tiny sprig of celery top.

White has not been so popular in years as now. It takes the lead in evening gowns, and much jeweled net and brilliant passementerie are used for its decoration. Green spangles on white are among the newest decorative devices.

The demand for fancy stockings, especially lace ones, has brought to the market a great variety of those dainty articles which are very reasonable in price. This grade of goods is also found with silk inserted in the instep.

The New Disease—"Petticoat Wrist."

We have all heard of writers' cramp, which is brought on by a cramped position of the hand, but the disease known as "petticoat wrist" is new. It threatens, however, to become common. The guilt lies at the door of the trained skirt, for the new disease is contracted by constantly holding up the dress. The symptoms are a stiffening of the wrist. Probably every article of dress has its appropriate disease, from tight shoes upward.

A LONG FELT WANT.

It is Supplied in this Vicinity at Last.

It is hard to always be pleasant.

Good-natured people are often irritable.

If you knew the reason you would not be surprised.

Ever have itching piles?

Not sick enough to go to bed or not well enough to be content.

Nothing will annoy you so.

The constant itching sensation.

Hard to bear, harder to get relief.

Keeps you awake nights.

Spoils your temper—nearly drives you crazy.

Isn't relief and cure a long felt want?

It is to be had for everyone in Doan's Ointment.

Doan's Ointment never fails to cure itching piles, eczema or any itching of the skin.

Here is proof of it in the testimony of an Ann Arbor citizen:

Mr. C. C. Church, of 520 South 7th street, Ann Arbor, now retired from the active duties of life, says: "I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Ointment. To anyone requiring a healing and soothing preparation it will prove invaluable. I suffered for years from itching hemmorhoids and though I tried everything I could hear of and used remedies prescribed by scores of friends I was unable to obtain permanent relief until my attention was called to Doan's Ointment. I was somewhat surprised after the second application to notice what a different effect it had from anything I had hitherto used. Encouraged I used it strictly according to directions and in a surprisingly short length of time when you take into account the number of years I was afflicted, the irritation ceased and the inflammation was allayed. When Doan's Ointment cured me it will cure others."

Saved His Dog.

A boy about 10 years old went to the central police station in Kansas City, Kan., one day recently, leading a fine shepherd dog by a short piece of rope tied to his collar, relates the Kansas City Star. The boy's face was red and swollen, and he was crying.

"Well, well, well, what's the matter here?" asked a big policeman, stooping down and looking into the boy's face.

"Please, sir," he sobbed, "my mother is too poor to pay for a license for Shep, and I brought him here to have you kill him."

Then he broke out with another wail that was heard all through the city building. Shep stood there mute and motionless, looking up into the face of his young master. A policeman took out his handkerchief to blow his nose, and the desk sergeant went out into the hall, absentmindedly whistling a tune which nobody ever heard before, while the captain remembered that he must telephone somebody. Then Chief McFarland led the boy to the door and, patting him on the head, said kindly:

"There, little fellow, don't cry any more. Run home with your dog. I wouldn't kill a dog like Shep for a thousand dollars."

"Oh, thank you, sir!" They were tears of joy now. He bounded out into the street and ran off toward his home, with Shep prancing along and jumping up and trying to kiss the boy's face. It was hard to tell which was the happier, the boy or the dog.

Tableaux, or Story Pictures.

This game can be played by any number of persons. It is played in the following manner: Pencils and papers are supplied the guests and the conditions (given below) stated to them. They are told to draw a quick sketch of some well known scene from history or fiction, such as the "Babes In the Wood," "Romeo and Juliet," "Bruce and the Spider," etc. An allotted time is then given them to choose their subject and finish their sketch. When this time is up, the papers are collected and placed, face downward, in a hat and well shuffled. Each of the players must now draw a paper, and a short time is given them to name the subject. They must, of course, not be named by the person who has sketched them. Those who succeed in giving the subjects of their pictures are now obliged to repeat the process, while those who do not succeed must drop out. This must be repeated again and again until there is only one person left. He is the winner and receives the prize. The "booby" prize is awarded to the person who first drops out of the game. The object is to keep "in the game" the longest.

Help... Nature

Babies and children need proper food, rarely ever medicine. If they do not thrive on their food something is wrong. They need a little help to get their digestive machinery working properly.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

will generally correct this difficulty.

If you will put from one-fourth to half a teaspoonful in baby's bottle three or four times a day you will soon see a marked improvement. For larger children, from half to a teaspoonful, according to age, dissolved in their milk, if you so desire, will very soon show its great nourishing power. If the mother's milk does not nourish the baby, she needs the emulsion. It will show an effect at once both upon mother and child.

AN OLD MAN'S DARLING.

The hair is white that sweeps across
His deeply furrowed brow;
The head that once was proudly poised
Droops forward feebly now!
He swings no jaunty cane, but leans
Upon a heavy stick,
And as I watch him come and go
I notice that the step is slow
Which once was light and quick.

Her hand is laid upon his arm,
And love lights up her face,
When he, with trembling gallantry,
Still helps her o'er the place
Where small obstruction chance to lie,
Assists her up the stair,
And, after fifty years have run
Their course, still looks on her as one
Who needs his aid and care.

A smile oft plays around her lips
When she accepts his aid,
For only loving, gentle hands
Has Time upon her laid;
Her eyes are bright, her step is light,
But he, with ancient pride,
Must guard her and assist her still—
Must be her knight—as down the hill
He totters at her side.

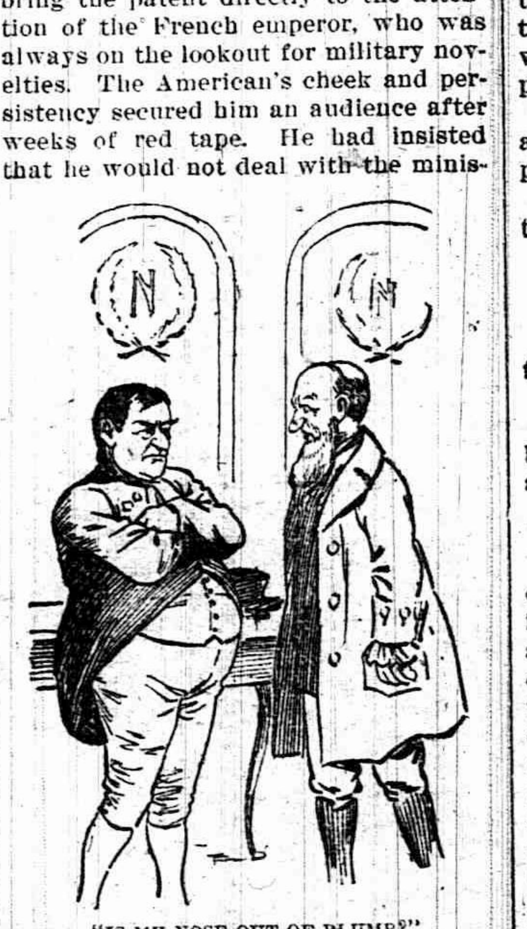
AN EMPEROR'S NOSE.

BY M. QUAD.

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY C. B. LEWIS.

Two years before the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war and the downfall of the last Napoleon an American named James Birney landed in Paris from New York. He was what might be called a general utility man. He had been a small merchant in Michigan, a bookkeeper in Ohio, a manufacturer in Indiana and an editor in Iowa. He was a good natured, easy going man, taking life as he found it and making no kicks. If he got a dollar ahead, he would find some new excuse to get rid of it; if he was behind the game, his creditors would have to extend his account. Nobody called him smart, but everybody said he had a strong fund of humor and philosophy.

When a man in Cincinnati invented a bullet proof vest, Mr. Birney somehow got hold of the European agency—that is, he went to Paris at least to bring the patent directly to the attention of the French emperor, who was always on the lookout for military novelties. The American's cheek and persistency secured him an audience after weeks of red tape. He had insisted that he would not deal with the minister of war or any other official and was at last granted an audience with the emperor. It was in the war office, and several cabinet officials were present. A musket was lying on a table, and Napoleon greeted the agent with:



"IS MY NOSE OUT OF PLUMB?"

"Well, sir, what about this bullet proof vest?"

"I have it here, your majesty," was the reply as the vest was held up to view.

"Put it on."

"With pleasure."

"Now go to the farther end of the room."

"Certainly, your majesty."

"Now, sir," continued the emperor as he lifted up the musket, "I am going to fire at your breast. Are you willing to take the chances?"

"Fire away!" was the reply.

The emperor fired, and although the bullet did not penetrate the shield the force of it knocked Birney head over heels and put him out of it for the next ten minutes. While it was decided that the vest was not a success, the American's nerve excited such admiration that he was given a handsome present in cash and graciously dismissed. He seemed to want to say something to the emperor before he left the room, but did not have opportunity. Early the next day, however, he bobbed up at the war office for an interview with the minister.

"It is no use," said that official as he gave him a minute. "The emperor has decided that he will not buy the vest."

"I knew that yesterday, of course," replied Birney. "I am not here about the vest, but altogether another thing. The fact is I do not like Napoleon's nose, and I want to improve it."

"Mon Dieu, man, but what do you say!" exclaimed the minister as he sprang to his feet.

"I say that the emperor's nose is off and that I can improve it. I wanted to tell him so the other day, but he hustled me out too quick. Can you bring about another interview?"

"The emperor's nose? You say it is wrong? You say you can fix it? Man, what mean you?"

"I mean just what I say," calmly replied Birney. "I am not a surgeon, but several years ago I invented a little attachment to cure a badly shaped nose. It has been tried in half a dozen cases and proved itself a big success. I brought one along with me, not knowing what I might run up against, and if you will give the emperor a hint"—

"Mon Dieu! Mon Dieu!" gasped the minister as he looked at the American with wonder and terror in his eyes. "Then you have gone crazy! You are out of your mind. You know not what you say."

"I am all right from head to heel, my dear sir, and I can't understand your agitation. What's the matter with my scheme for improving Napoleon's nose?"

The minister rang his bell with nervous hand, and a minute later Birney was out on the sidewalk with a flea in his ear—that is, he was told to take himself off or he would be locked up as an insane person. It was rather a setback for him, and it took him a day or two to get over it, but he finally came up smiling. If the minister would not help him out, there were other officials who would. He tried two or three of them, with the result that he was eventually haled before the chief of police. That official probably sized him up correctly, for he said to him:

"You do not realize what you are doing. Don't you understand that you can be sent to prison for this? You do not appear to have lost your mind, and you are no fool, and the best thing you can do is to get out of Paris at once."

"But what is the crime?" argued Birney. "All I have done is to say that I can improve on the emperor's nose. Can a man be sent to prison in France for that?"

"He can, sir, as I wish to make you understand. You must not talk this way. You have made trouble for yourself, and you had best get away as soon as possible. Should the emperor himself hear of your insulting words you would be sent to some fortress for five or ten years."

"Shoo! You don't say! But you Frenchmen are queer people! Well, I don't want to leave Paris for a few days yet, but I'll keep still about Napoleon's nose. I had no idea he was so techy about it. Not another word from me if that's the way things are."

The chief added another warning, though he saw the humor of the thing and smiled behind his mask. Birney might stay on for a few days, but he must keep that nose attachment of his in the background and his tongue between his teeth. He went out of the police office meaning to do it, but scarcely 24 hours had passed away when he accidentally met a French doctor who could speak English fairly well. Birney was naturally asked why he had visited Paris, and of course he told of the bullet proof vest. Having got started, he couldn't stop there.

"Say, do you know I could fix the emperor's nose in less than a month?" he remarked in a burst of confidence. "Yes, sir. I could improve that smeller of his at least 50 per cent in three or four weeks, and I wouldn't charge a cent either."

"The emperor's nose!" gasped the doctor. "But what ails the emperor's nose?"

"Out of plumb, sir, and no excuse for it. All I want is three weeks' time. Can't you get me an audience with him?"

"The devil! Why, man, you are insulting the emperor! You ought to be locked up!"

"Oh, come now!" laughed Birney in a protesting way. "I never saw such people before. Can't the emperor's nose be out of plumb as well as any other man's?"

The doctor left him without even a cold bow and probably went to the police, as Birney was arrested an hour later. According to his story, he was sent to prison without a trial and detained for a full year. Then he was taken out one day and conveyed to the war office and into the presence of Napoleon.

"Sir," said the emperor after glaring at him for awhile, "is my nose out of plumb?"

"It is as plumb as a plumbet," was the ready reply.

"Does it need any fixing over?"

"Not a fix."

"And how is it with yours?"

"It's out of joint, your majesty, but I think I could follow it out of France."

"Then you may try."

And try he did, and his nose led him back to the land of the free without any lingering on the road.

Japanese and Chinese Symbols.

The many symbols which decorate ceramic ware in Japan and China are interesting to those familiar with them, and by means of them a test is furnished which distinguishes the ware of the two countries. For instance, a three clawed dragon is Japanese, while a five clawed dragon indicates Chinese art. In Japan the crane, turtle, pine and bamboo are emblems of longevity and do not appear in Chinese decoration. The sacred symbols of Japan—the mirror, the sword, the jewel—appear only in Japanese art. The chrysanthemum, the iris and the lotus are sacred flowers. The gods are different, and a little study will make it impossible for one to mistake the pottery or decoration of one country for that of another if a sacred subject is painted. Happiness is symbolized by a white stag; strength by the pine; the stork is indicative of long life; the tortoise stands for riches; a hawk for courage; a bear in the snow endurance, and a carp swimming upward is the emblem of perseverance.

Improving the Opportunity.

My small nephew was ready to start on a long promised week's visit to his grandfather's in the country. There was an exasperating delay in the appearance of the carriage to take us to the station. The young man worked off his impatience in various annoying ways for half an hour. Then suddenly he was seen to kneel beside a chair in the corner and bury his face in his hands. After a few minutes his mother said:

"Well, Kenneth, what are you doing?"

"Just getting my prayers said up for while I'm going to be out at grandpa's. There's nothing to do here, and I 'spect to be pretty busy while I'm there."—Harper's Magazine.

Easy Way to Fish.

There is a fish that frequents in large numbers the shallow seas off the shores of northwest America from San Francisco to Sitka that loses its life through leaping too readily. Whenever it is alarmed it bounds out of the water. Now, there are few better students of nature than the Indians of the Pacific coast, who take advantage of this foolish habit to get food without working hard for it. When they see the great shoals of fishes swimming near the surface of the water, they get out their canoes and beat the water with the paddles, uttering hideous yells the while. Terrified out of their small wits, the fishes jump up into the air and fall into the canoes by the hundred. The Indians also capture them by the net and spear.

Swinging Dolly.

Swinging dolly in her hammock,
Underneath the cherry tree,
Where a robin redbreast nestles,
Peeping down at her and me!
Swinging dolly o'er the daisies
Growing all around the grass,
Where the butterflies are playing
And the golden sunbeams pass.

Swinging dolly in her hammock
Till the Sandman creeps around
From the drowsy land to make her
Cuddle up and slumber sound.
Swinging dolly in the sunshine,
My, but ain't it lots of fun?
Till mamma comes out to bid us
In to supper quickly run!

Its Use.

"What is bread chiefly used for, Tommy?" asked the teacher of a small pupil in the juvenile class.

"To spread butter on," was the logical but unexpected reply.

An Unpromising Answer.

Mother (to small boy just beginning school)—Well, what work have you enjoyed best this morning, dear?

Small Boy—Oh, I liked looking out of the window best.

Decorating the State House.

There is nobody quite so busy as the editor who tries to publish a ten page newspaper in a four page town.—Washington Post.

ATTRACTIVE EXHIBIT.

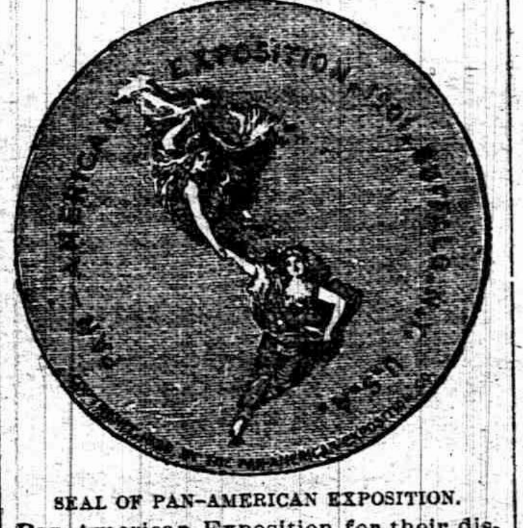
That of Foods and Their Accessories, Including Pan-American Spices.

A very dainty pamphlet has been issued by the Division of Foods and Their Accessories of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. The food work at the Pan-American comes under the general department of Horticulture, Forestry and Food Products, of which Mr. Frederic W. Taylor is superintendent. Mr. G. Edward Fuller, as assistant superintendent, has entire charge of the Division of Foods and Their Accessories, and he has prepared himself for unusual work in this line by special travel and study such as no one else probably ever undertook with the same object. This pamphlet calls the attention of jobbers of teas, coffees and spices and all dealers in food products generally and their accessories to the interesting, useful and educational work in their lines of business which is going on for the Pan-American Exposition of 1901.

The assistant superintendent, Mr. Fuller, says: "In the far east there are foods and condiments of which we are almost utterly ignorant here, and one of the aims of the food exhibit will be to educate the people of the western hemisphere to the cultivation of the products which flourish in the east. It will be my aim to show how simple and profitable it would be, for instance, to grow in the West Indies what is grown in the East Indies. The climate and soil conditions are remarkably similar, and the conditions are favorable.

"The best proof obtainable or desirable that the soil and the climate of the West Indies is as favorable as that of the East Indies for the production of spices is already available. The products now received from the West Indies are not equaled by those from any other section of the world. At the present time they grow better allspice, ginger and red pepper there than anywhere else on the globe, and the vanilla bean, which is queen of spices, as the nutmeg is king, is found nowhere in the world in such perfection as in Mexico. The coffee grown in Mexico has a flavor obtainable in no other coffee, not even the Mocha or Java surpassing it. Emperor William of Germany appreciates that fact, and all of the coffee used in the royal household is sent from our nearby republic. Venezuelan cacao, from which chocolate is made, is superior to the East Indian product.

"With the view of massing together in one effective, instructive and useful exhibit the economic plants, vines and trees of tropical Pan-America which produce teas, coffees, spices and kindred things, it has been decided to appropriate considerable space at the Pan-American Exposition for their display on a scale never before attempted. To show this interesting collection to the best advantage an attractive conservatory has been provided, while a museum, as an annex to this, will contain finished products as well as rare and curious articles to illustrate a variety of features under the head of 'Foods and Their Accessories.'



SEAL OF PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

"It is a fact well known to experts in exhibition matters that a scattered display of special articles loses force, while a condensed exhibit of a line of things pertaining to a specific subject becomes educational. Now, as the object is to increase the production and promote the consumption of the things called for, much trouble and expense is justified in making this collection unique and unparalleled.

"It is intended to make the exhibit of red peppers the finest and most extensive collection ever made, with the object of demonstrating by special exhibit connected with the 'accessories of food' that Pan-America can produce all the red peppers consumed in Pan-America. It is perhaps only known to experts that vast quantities of red peppers are imported from Europe, Asia and Africa every year because Pan-Americans are not actively alive to their own interest in this important matter."

One of Many Enthusiasts.

Joe Mitchell Chapple, editor of The National Magazine, published at Boston, was in Buffalo recently and became much interested in the Exposition. On his return to Boston he wrote to an official of the Exposition as follows: "I was indeed sorry not to have seen you when in Buffalo, but I did see the Exposition and was astonished beyond measure. I wish that you would send on anything that you think might be of interest to our readers and make it as attractive as possible, and I shall keep on hammering away at the Exposition editorially until it opens, because I am thoroughly enthused over the subject."

Brazil to Be Represented.

The Brazilian government early in the season sent out invitations to all agricultural and industrial societies to prepare articles for exhibition at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo in 1901. A large number of coffee producers have agreed to send a full line of samples of the best Brazilian grades of this commodity.

A Great Swimmer.

Another feather in the cap of athletic womanhood has been gained by Lady Agnes Townshend, who has recently won distinction by pluckily swimming a distance of more than two miles in a difficult stretch of water round St. Michael's mount, in Mount's bay, Cornwall, the swim occupying but two or three minutes over the hour. The performance was a fine one, and, though she was followed in a boat by Lord St. Levan, her uncle, Lady Agnes required no assistance and on landing showed no great fatigue.

Queen Margherita Retired.

Word comes from Europe that the widowed Queen Margherita has just completed the distribution of her personal effects and has finally retired from the world. Her 300 superb costumes have been apportioned among her friends. Immediately after King Humbert's funeral she sent to the museum at Florence the exquisite embroideries which were so much admired at the World's fair, and her jewelry has been given to her relatives. The young queen, Helen, has received her royal diamond.

Our Little Sticks.

Ages ago the Hindoo "medicine man" knew all about disease germs and microbes, although he was jeered at by western scientists because he called them "little worms." And after all when we moderns "discovered" what he had known all along we could find no better name for the new organisms than bacilli, which, being interpreted, is "little sticks."

WERE CONFIRMED

Gov. Bliss' Appointees Quickly Confirmed by the Senate.

PINGREE'S RECESS APPOINTEES

Not Reported Out By the Committee—The Bills Introduced and Passed In the Senate and House—The Pardon Power.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 11.—Gov. Bliss is faring much better than his predecessor, Hazen S. Pingree, did in having the state senate confirm the chief executive's appointments. The governor sent to the senate Thursday afternoon 19 appointments, and all of them were confirmed in executive session. Pingree's numerous recess appointments were not reported out by the committee on executive business, of which Senator Atwood, Bliss leader, is chairman.

Gov. Bliss' new appointments are: Dr. Edward W. Jenks, as member of the state board of corrections and charities to succeed Arthur L. Worden, also of Detroit, whose term would have expired Jan. 1, 1907, and F. W. Shumway, of Ingham county, as a member of the advisory board in the matter of pardons, for the unexpired portion of his term, expiring Nov. 29, 1901.

Other appointments were:

J. N. Cox, colonel and aide on staff of Calumet; Wm. M. Hatch, colonel and aide on staff, of Union City; Frank P. Graves, colonel and aide on staff, of Benton Harbor; Bernard S. Kauffman, colonel and aide on staff, of Detroit.

Herbert E. Johnson, major and military secretary, of Grand Rapids.

David B. Duffield, major and judge advocate, of Detroit.

J. H. Kidd, quartermaster-general, of Ionia.

Fred W. Green, inspector-general, of Ypsilanti.

Geo. H. Brown, adjutant-general, of Port Huron.

Frank P. Dunwell, state inspector of salt, of Ludington.

Chase S. Osborne, commissioner of railroads, of Sault Ste. Marie.

Tom A. Hanna, commissioner of mineral statistics, of Iron Mountain.

Scott Griswold, commissioner of labor, of Grand Rapids.

Wilber E. Snow, dairy and food commissioner, of Kalamazoo.

James V. Barry, commissioner of insurence, to fill vacancy and for full term, of Lansing.

Victor C. Vaughan, member state board of health, to fill vacancy and for the full term, of Ann Arbor.

Edward W. Jenks, member of the state board of corrections and charities, of Detroit.

George D. Gillespie, member of the state board of corrections and charities, of Grand Rapids.

Bills Introduced.

The following bills were introduced in the house:

Totten—Amending fish and game laws.

Totten — Authorizing South Arm township, Charlevoix county, to borrow money to build a bridge.

Totten—Protection of fish in Clam lake, Antrim county.

Ames—Fixing salary of Wayne county clerk at $5,000 a year.

Ames—Amending local acts relative to duties of election inspectors.

Rulison—Enabling supervisors of Houghton county to construct bridge across Sturgeon river.

Dingley—Incorporation of mutual cooperative employment insurance companies.

Hastings — Authorizing common council of Traverse City to issue bonds for $25,000 for improving water works plant.

McCall—Changing boundary of village of vermontville, Eaton county.

McCall—Fixing salaries of secretary of senate and clerk of the house at $2,000 a year each.

Chandler—Amending charter of the village of Mackinaw.

Chandler—Amending act relative to Mackinaw island park.

Adams—To provide a probate register for Van Buren county.

Bonser—Making president of village of Pinconning member of board of supervisors of Bay county.

Powell—Defining duties of justices of the peace in Ionia county relative to tramps.

French—Providing spec[illegible] county drain commissioners.

Henry—Providing for ex[illegible] of persons having charge of [illegible] engines and boilers.

The following bills were introduced in the senate:

Kelly—Establishing state normal school at Muskegon.

Kelly—Amending general tax law so as to define personal property.

Murfin—Amending law relative to chancery court practice.

Murfin—Abolishing notices of trial.

Murfin—Making invalid assignments and mortgages of indebtedness against garnishment proceedings in certain cases.

Murfin—Amending charter of city of Detroit to create new board of election canvassers.

Weeks—Amending an act providing for incorporation of villages.

Goodell—Establishing state dairy bureau.

Providing for registration of land titles.

Helme—Exempting mortgages from taxation where actual rate of interest charged and paid shall not exceed 4 per cent.

Helme—Taxing abstract records used in furnishing information concerning title to lands.

Atwood—Providing for assessment, levy and collection of taxes upon the property of railroad companies.

Nims—Providing for completion of two detached buildings for patients at eastern Michigan asylum, and making appropriation for same.

Chas. Smith—Providing for assessment of property of sleeping car companies, levy and collection of taxes thereon.

Bills Passed.

The following bills were passed by the house Thursday:

Authorizing Charlevoix township to issue bonds for construction of bridge across Pine river.

Authorizing Addison village trustees to call special election relative to building of schools.

Authorizing Houghton county supervisors to construct a bridge across Sturgeon river.

Authorizing Traverse City to issue $25,000 of bonds to improve water works.

Defining the duties of justices of the peace in Ionia county relative to tramps.

These bills were passed in the senate and given immediate effect:

A bill authorizing school district No. 1 of Ishpeming to borrow money.

A bill authorizing $25,000 of water works bonds issued by Petoskey.

A bill amending the law relative to justices of the peace in Ionia.

A bill authorizing supervisors of Houghton county to borrow money for a bridge across Sturgeon river in Portage township.

THE PARDON POWER.

Rep. Burns Would Invest It in the Pardon Board.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 11.—Rep. Burns of Kent county proposes to revolutionize the pardon board and the pardon system of the state as much as possible under the constitution. Thursday he gave notice in the house of the introduction of a bill which provides for the creation of a new pardon board of three instead of five members, one member to be a registered physician, another a practicing attorney-at-law, the clerk to be a member of the board. The terms of office is to be so arranged that one member shall hold office six years, or two years beyond the official term of any governor. The salary of each member shall be $2,500 a year. The members of the present pardon board are paid $5 a day for no longer than six months in two years. Bills of the board are to be audited by the board of state auditors instead of by the governor, as at present.

Rep. Burns expects a fight on a provision that all applications for clemency must be made in writing to the pardon board, as he says he has hewn close to the constitution line in this instance.

He says the same, too, of the following section, which reads:

"Section 8. The governor shall not grant any pardons, paroles, reprieves, commutations of sentence or licenses to be at large, except those that have filed their petitions with the board."

The bill also provides that no recommendation for clemency to prisoners shall be made except by the pardon board and that in "lifers" cases the board must unanimously recommend.

Instead of having the prison board authorize the transfer of convicts from one prison to another, as at present, the bill provides that the pardon board shall have this power.

Cut It to $50,000.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 11.—The house and senate committees held a joint meeting Thursday night on Rep. Chandler's resolution to appropriate $100,000 for a Michigan exhibit at the Buffalo Pan-American exposition. They practically decided to report in favor of having such an exhibit, but to cut the appropriation down to $50,000, of which $10,000 should be used for a building.

Amendments to Ship Bill.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The senate committee on commerce Thursday agreed to make several additional amendments to the ship subsidy bill. One of these, made on page 12, extends the benefits of the bill to ships engaged both in the foreign and the coastwise trade, such as those of the Panama railroad line. The amendment grants subsidy to the extent that the cargo is foreign. Another amendment is inserted on page 24 which permits a majority of the owners of a steamship to sign contracts with the secretary of the treasury instead of requiring all the owners to sign, and in lieu of a bond the secretary is authorized to retain 25 per cent of earned compensation as security for the performance of the contract.

Book Publishers Organized.

Albany, Jan. 11.—Articles of incorporation of the American Publishers' association, with principal offices in New York city, were filed with the secretary of state Thursday. It is proposed to advance the interests of the book publishing business. The directors are: Chas. Scribner, S. B. M. Harvey, Daniel Appleton and Frank H. Dodd, of New York city; Geo. H. Mifflin, of Boston; Geo. J. Brett, of Darien, Conn.; A. C. McClurg, of Chicago; Craig Lippincott, of Philadelphia, and Frank H. Scott, of Orange, N. J.

Not of Sufficient Capacity.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—The coroner's jury in a verdict delivered Thursday, declared that the boilers at the power house of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Co., one of which exploded Dec. 3, killing nine people, were not of sufficient capacity to furnish steam for the power required. The jury recommend that all steam boilers in Chicago should be inspected at least twice a year and asked that the city council pass an ordinance to that effect. Inspections are now required to be made yearly.

Gave a Bond.

Mobile, Ala., Jan. 11.—Capt. C. W. King, U. S. V., who was bound over Monday in the sum of $10,000 to answer to the charge of accepting a bribe from Contractor Hobson, gave a bond Thursday afternoon. Since his arrest he has been at the otel Bienville in the custody of a deputy marshal. Capt. Singer arrived from Washington to determine whether the accused shall be tried by the civil or military authorities.

Demand For Excelsior.

The present annual production in this country of excelsior is about 60,000 tons. Put to a great variety of uses, excelsior is most commonly used for packing purposes, and in such uses it is employed for many very different kinds of things. It is used, for example, in the packing of things so fragile as eggs and things so solid as iron toys. In the various uses to which it is put excelsior is most in demand where manufacturing is carried on, so that the larger part of the great quantity of this material now produced in this country is used east of the Mississippi river.—New York Sun.

The Pleasures of Old Age.

No sane man would like to live his life over again. It is astonishing how the ordinary affairs of life seem to adapt themselves to your added years. One's pleasures are quieter, but quite as enjoyable. To live in the lives of your children, to watch their progress, the development of their minds, is one great source of pleasure. Then one has music, reading, gardening, etc. May I also add that I took the advice of an old friend some years ago who said the two things most likely to give pleasure in declining life were to learn whist and to play the violoncello?—A Man of Sixty in Spectator.

The Worm Turned.

Mrs. Enpeck—You let people domineer over you too much, Henry. You should learn to say "no" occasionally.

Mr. Enpeck—Yes; that's right, and I wish to goodness you had said it on a certain occasion.—Chicago News.

ALLEGED SWINDLERS.

Gardiner and Lasell Arraigned in Court on Serious Charges.

New York, Jan. 11.—Chas. S. Gardiner, a note broker of 35 Nassau street, and J. D. Lasell, who were arrested Wednesday for an alleged swindle, were arraigned Thursday. Gardiner was accused of perjury. His counsel waived examination and Gardiner was held for the grand jury in $3,500 bail. To-day, it is said, unconditional charges will be preferred against him.

The charge against Lasell was impersonation in that he had represented himself as Edward Rafter. In that capacity, it is charged, he went to the office of T. F. Smith, where he signed checks as Edward Rafter, payable to Col. Thomas C. Moffat, of Chicago, who has an office here, each check being for $2,500 on the Mutual bank of this city. It is charged that seven notes for this amount were given on Nov. 20, six on Nov. 24, and seven on Nov. 27.

Besides these three others were given to Col. Moffat, one for $5,000 and two for $2,500 each.

In addition to these notes, detectives say that paper to the extent of $10,000 was turned into the Puritan Trust Co. of Boston, by a man named Turner, who, the police say, got them from Gardiner. Gardiner was introduced to Moffat by a friend of the latter. Lasell's wife was in court when he was arraigned and said that she would tell everything to the detectives.

To Keep Crooks In Check.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Chief of Police Sylvester, of Washington, chairman of the committee of public order for the presidential inauguration, was formally assured Thursday of active assistance of police authorities throughout the country. The chiefs of police in attendance at Thursday's session of the bureau of identification, adopted a resolution urgently invoking the assistance of all superintendents of police in the United States to the extent of informing Chief Sylvester, at Washington, of the movement of all criminals between now and March 4. Between 40 and 50 cities will send detectives to Washington to help keep the crooks in check during the week of inauguration.

For Commutation of Sentence.

Columbus, O., Jan. 11.—Col. Woodburn, attorney for Rosslyn Ferrell, made a formal application before a special session of the state board of pardons, called for that purpose Thursday, for the commutation of the sentence of Ferrell to life imprisonment. Ferrell is now in the Ohio penitentiary under sentence of electrocution for the murder of Express Messenger Charles Lane. Col. Woodburn occupied the entire morning with his argument. Voluminous protests were filed by the express company, including signatures from many prominent expressmen in different sections.

Naval Commander Dead.

Washington, Jan. 11.—Commander John W. Quackenbush, U. S. N., retired, died Thursday at his residence in this city. Commander Quackenbush was born in New York and was appointed to the navy Sept. 24, 1847. He served on the frigate Cumberland during the Mexican war and later saw service in the Pacific squadron. He was commissioned as lieutenant commander in July, 1863, and was actively employed during the entire period of the civil war. He was retired in 1869.

Blamed the Planets.

In the middle of the fourteenth century in Paris a new ordinance enjoining the cleansing of the streets and the shutting up of swine was carefully neglected, as usual, and a terrible plague was the consequence. The faculty of medicine, called upon for a remedy by the king, sent to inform him after long discussion that the plague was the result of a hostile conjunction of the planets Mars and Jupiter.

CHINESE SITUATION

Report That Joint Note Has Been Signed Reaches Paris

IT IS AN INSIGNIFICANT STEP

Compared to the Difficulties to Be Met With Between the Powers Themselves—Reasons Why Negotiations Will Not Be Shifted.

Paris, Jan. 11.—As the result of inquiries in authoritative quarters, the Associated Press is given the following statement in regard to the Chinese situation:

"The Chinese plenipotentiaries signed the joint note Wednesday, thus concluding the preliminary stage of the negotiations."

It was added that this important step was insignificant compared with the difficulties to be met with between the powers themselves, whose clashing interests will have full play in the coming discussions. The United States' proposal to shift the seat of the negotiations finds no favor in the European chancelleries. Three reasons are given for this opposition:

First—It is considered a great mistake to transfer the negotiations from China, where all the information is at hand respecting the situation and the feeling among the Chinese themselves, and more especially regarding the conditions of trade and commerce with which the negotiations will be chiefly concerned.

Second—The United States' commerce with China is comparatively small when compared with that of several other countries. Therefore the United States is not entitled to expect the negotiations to be carried on with Washington.

The third and most delicate reason advanced is that the European powers have not felt sufficient confidence that the United States government might not find itself influenced in the negotiations at Washington by the pressure of interests having an eye to the exploitation of China. The attitude of some of the powers, moreover, is swayed by other motives in opposing the United States proposal. Great Britain, for example, which seems to be the most strongly antagonistic, has probably taken into consideration the United States' attitude towards the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

The feeling here favors Shanghai, if any change is made, as it is pointed out that Shanghai is the most important trade center in China, and moreover, that the southern viceroys who are favorable to foreigners and anxious to further trade, could make their influence felt. Failing Shanghai, Berlin or Paris are more likely to be chosen. The enormous British interests are in favor of the choice of London, but it is improbable that other powers will agree to this. There is no reason to suppose that Russia will withdraw from the joint negotiations. The treaty she has concluded with China concerns her special interests in regions contiguous to her territories, but she has great political interests to defend, and further, in the joint conference, which will bristle with obstacles to a speedy settlement, Russia aims chiefly at a wide expansion of her political influence. Great Britain wants to, roughly, open the Chinese empire to her commerce, and at the same time strengthen her political foothold. The United States' efforts, apparently, will be devoted to securing commercial advantages, while France and Germany will desire to increase their trade generally and their political influences in certain provinces. The struggle between these conflicting designs will be bitter and, in any case, will greatly protract the negotiations.

One thing which Great Britain and the United States wish secured is the raising of the prohibition which now exists in China against foreigners acquiring landed interests, a considerable extension of commerce being thereby anticipated.

The ministers of the powers will be assisted in the negotiations by commercial advisers, while Prince Ching and Li Hung Chang will continue to act for the Chinese government.

Shanghai, Jan. 11.—A dispatch from Sian Fu (where the Chinese court is located) to a native newspaper says:

"Some of the clauses of the conditions for peace are impossible of acceptance, consequently the empress and emperor and the much troubled court have telegraphed to Liu Kun Yi, the viceroy of Nankin, and Chang Chih Tung, the viceroy of Hankow, to proceed to Pekin immediately and confer with the foreign ministers and Chinese commissioners in an attempt to secure a modification of the obstructive conditions. They have been instructed, if they are unable to proceed to Pekin to propose a suitable meeting place for the ministers elsewhere."

Berlin, Jan. 11.—A special dispatch from Pekin to the Lokal Anzeiger late Thursday evening says:

"The Chinese court has abandoned its objections to the joint demands of the powers, and it is believed that Prince Ching and Li Hung Chang will sign in a few days. It is expected that a telegraphic authorization will reach them from Sian-Fu to use the imperial seal, which is under guard in Pekin."

Will Turn State's Evidence.

New York, Jan. 11.—The World will to-day publish a story saying that it was informed late Thursday afternoon by one of the men closely connected with the prosecution of the four men charged with the murder of Jennie Bosschieter that George Kerr will turn state's evidence against his three companions at the trial at Paterson next Monday. The statement was not denied either by Prosecutor Eugene Emley or John F. Kerr, a brother of the prisoner.

A Woman Shoots Her H and Kicks His Boo

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 11.— Thursday afternoon, Mrs. Ke peared at the entrance of the the Merchants Dispatch Tran tion Co., and seeing her husband ip H. Kennedy, inside, requested to step into the hall. He had b passed through the door into the when his wife opened fire on him w a revolver, shooting four times and killing him instantly. The woman kicked the lifeless body of her husband as she exclaimed: "Now, you will never seduce another woman."

Mrs. Kennedy, who was formerly Lulu E. Prince, married Kennedy Dec. 4, 1900, and the groom's action during the ceremony indicated that he was not a willing party to the contract.

Kennedy brought suit last Tuesday to annul his marriage with Miss Prince. He alleged in his petition that he was forced into the marriage by threats against his life if he refused, and that the threats were made not only by the father and brother of the young woman, but by her also. The petitioner said he had never lived with her as his wife.

The girl's family claims that she and Kennedy were engaged to be married, when he met another young woman and fell in love with her. He broke the engagement with Miss Prince, they say, and the cards were out announcing his marriage with the other young woman when the father and brother of Miss Prince took a hand in the affair. Kennedy was about 30 years old, and his wife is 20 and prepossessing. Mrs. Kennedy is a sister of Burt Prince, a professional whistler.

Burnham Succeeds Chandler.

Concord, N. H., Jan. 11.—Judge Henry F. Burnham, of Manchester, won the nomination of the Republican members of the legislature for United States senator over Wm. E. Chandler and other candidates. Burnham won on the first ballot. Chandler received 47 votes, Burnham 198, Congressman Sulloway 22, Henry H. Baker 29, Henry B. Quinby 22, H. W. Blair 1. The Democrats of the legislature nominated Chas. F. Stone, of Laconia, as their candidate for United States senator.

Assaulter Indicted.

McConnelisville, O., Jan. 11.—The grand jury Thursday night indicted Walter Weinstock for criminal assault and horribly mutilating Nellie Morris at Hackney last week. Miss Morris is recovering, and now that there is no doubt about a speedy trial, there is no talk whatever of lynching or any resort to violence. Weinstock is held in jail here without bail, and the father of the girl at Hackney has insisted on the law taking its course and advised all of his neighbors against any efforts at lynching.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 11.—A bill was introduced Thursday in the Illinois legislature providing for the participation by the state of Illinois in the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo, and appropriating $150,000 for that purpose.

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 11.—A bill was introduced in the senate Thursday appropriating $100,000 for the Missouri exhibit at the Pan-American exposition.

Paterson Murder Trials.

New York, Jan. 11.—Judge Dixon, of Paterson, N. J., announced Thursday that the murder trials of McAllister, Kerr, Campbell and Death would be taken up on Monday. As it was expected that there would be a large number of spectators, he directed the sheriff to provide a sufficient number of constables to preserve order; also that the sheriff take precautions to exclude from the court room all persons under age.

Charged With Murder.

Philadelphia, Jan. 11.—Jacob Winne, Annie Bryan, Chas. Burns and Ellie Barrett were arraigned Thursday charged with participating in the murder of Father Riegel, who was found dead on Saturday night last in the hallway of a lodging house in the Tenderloin district of this city.

Jupiter Warmer Than the Earth.

The gigantic mass of Jupiter has a much larger warmth than that of the earth. It is the result of the molecular movement produced by the compression of the strata and must be greater the more powerful the masses, and hence the larger the pressure of the strata is. Jupiter surpasses the earth in point of mass 307 times, and for this reason the inner temperature or individual warmth of the planet is probably high enough to evaporate the water upon the surface quickly, so that water vapor forms the principal substance of the atmosphere of Jupiter. Water vapor is an excellent reflector and [illegible]

Among the small crowd which pressed round the fair vender was a young man of much assurance, who gazed upon the girl with freedom and affected to admire the various fancy articles exposed for sale, but bought nothing.

"What will you please to buy?" asked mademoiselle, with an exquisite smile.

"Oh," replied the young dandy, with a languishing look, "what I most wish to buy is unhappily not for sale."

"Tell me what you wish?" she responded.

"Oh, no; I dare not declare my wishes."

"Nevertheless let me know what you wish to buy," persisted the fair saleswoman.

"Well, then, since you demand it, I should like a ringlet of your glossy black hair."

She manifested no embarrassment at the bold request, but with a pair of scissors immediately clipped off one of her beautiful locks and handed it to the astonished youth, remarking that the price was only $100.

Her audacious admirer was thunderstruck with the demand, but dared not demur, as by this time a group had collected and were listening to the conversation. So he took the hair, paid over the money and left the hall.

Arms and The Woman

CHAPTER IX.

I took my pipe and strolled along the river bank. What had I stumbled into? Here was an old inn with rather a feudal air, but it was only one in a thousand, a common feature throughout the continent, and yet why had the gods, when they cast out Hebe, chosen this particular inn for her mortal residence? The pipe solves many riddles, and then sometimes it creates a density. I put my pipe into my pocket and cogitated. Gretchen had brought about a new order of things. A philosophical barmaid was certainly a novelty. That Gretchen was philosophical I had learned in the rose gardens; that she was also used to giving commands I had learned in the onion patch. Hitherto I had held the onion in contempt; already I had begun to respect it. Above all, Gretchen was a mystery, the most alluring kind of mystery—a woman who was not what she seemed. How we men love mysteries which are given the outward semblance of a Diana or a Venus! By and by my journalistic instinct awoke. Who are those who fear the newspapers? Certainly it is not the guiltless. Of what was Gretchen guilty? The innkeeper knew. Was she one of those many conspirators who abound in the kingdom? She was beautiful enough for anything. And whence came the remarkable likeness between her and Phyllis? Here was a mystery indeed. I had a week before me. In that time I might learn something about Gretchen even if I could solve nothing. I admit that it is true that had Gretchen been plain it would not have been worth the trouble. But she had too heavenly a face, too wonderful an eye, too delicious a mouth, not to note her with concern.

I did not see Gretchen again that day, but as I was watching the moon climb up, thinking of her and smoking a few pipes as an incense to her shrine, I heard her voice beneath my window. It was accompanied by the bass voice of the innkeeper.

"But he is a journalist. Is he safe? Is anything safe from them?" came to my ears in a worried accent, a bass. So the innkeeper, too, was a socialist!

Said an impatient contralto, "So long as I have no fear why should you?"

"Ach, you will be found out and dragged back!" was the lamentation in a throaty baritone. Anxiety raises a bass voice at least two pitches. "If you would but return to the hills where there is absolute safety!"

"No, I will not go back there, where everything is so dull and dead. I have lived too long not to read a face at a glance. His eyes are honest."

"Thanks, Gretchen," murmured I from above. I was playing the listener. But, then, she was only a barmaid.

"And it is so long," went on the contralto, "since I have seen a man—a strong one. I wish to see if my power is gone."

"Aha!" thought I. "So you have already laid plans for my capitulation, Gretchen?"

"But," said the bass voice once more, "supposing some of the military should straggle along? There might be one who has seen you before. Alas, I despair! You will not hide yourself; you will stay here till they find you."

I fell to wondering what in the world Gretchen had done. "I have not been to the village since I was a little girl. Dressed as I am, who would recognize me? No one at the castle, for there is no one there but the steward. Would you send me away?"

"God forbid! But this American? You say you can read faces. How about the other one?"

Silence.

"Yes, how about him?"

Said Gretchen: "We are not infallible. And perhaps I was then much to blame."

"No, we are not infallible. That is the reason why you should take no chance," was the final argument of the innkeeper.

"Hush!" said Gretchen.

"Confound the pipe!" I muttered. It had fallen over the window sill.

Five minutes passed. I heard no sound. Glancing from the side of the window I saw that Gretchen and the innkeeper were gone.

Yes, there wasn't any doubt about it; Gretchen was a conspirator. The police were hunting for her, and she was threatened with discovery. It was beyond my imagination what she could have done. Moreover, she was rather courting danger. The military post was only five miles down the river. The one thing which bothered me was the "him" who had suddenly intruded upon the scene, invisible, but there, like Banquo's ghost. Perhaps her beauty had lured some fellow to follow her fortunes, and his overzeal or lack of it had brought ruin to some plot.

"Gretchen," said I as I jumped into bed, "whoever he was, he must have been a duffer."

Her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde was in Jericho, and Hillars along with her, where I had consigned them.

Next morning Gretchen waited upon me at breakfast. She was quiet and answered my questions in monosyllables. Presently she laid something at the side of my plate. It was my pipe. I looked at her, but the leads of my eyes could not plumb the depths in hers.

"Thanks," said I. "It dropped from my window last night while I was playing the disgraceful part of eavesdropper." I dare say she had expected anything but this candid confession. It was very cunning in me. She knew that I knew she knew. Had I lied I should have committed an irreparable blunder. As it was she lifted her chin and laughed.

"Will you forgive me?"

"Yes; for you certainly wasted your time."

"Yes, indeed; for I am just as much in the dark as ever."

"And will remain so."

"I hope so. A mystery is charming while it lasts. Really, Gretchen, I did not mean to play the listener, and I promise that from now on"—

"From now on!" cried Gretchen. "Does not herr leave today?"

"No; I am going to spend a whole week here."

There was a mixture of dismay and anger in her gaze.

"But, as I was going to say, I shall make no effort to pry into your affairs. Honestly, I am a gentleman."

"I shall try to believe you," said she, the corners of her mouth broke into a smile.

She condescended to show me through the rose gardens and tell me what she knew about them. It was an interesting lecture. And in the evening she permitted me to row her about the river. We were getting on very well under the circumstances.

The week was soon gone, and Gretchen and I became very good friends. Often when she had nothing to do we would wander along the river through the forests, always, I noticed, by a route which took us away from the village. Each day I discovered some new accomplishment. Sometimes I would read Heine or Goethe to her, and she would grow rapt and silent. In the midst of some murmurous stanza I would suddenly stop, only to see her start and look at me as though I had committed a sacrilege, in that I had spoiled some dream of hers. Then again I myself would become lost in dreams, to be aroused by a soft voice saying, "Well, why do you not go on?" Two people of the opposite sexes reading poetry in the woods is a solemn matter. This is not appreciated at the time, however. It comes back afterward.

In all the week I had learned nothing except that Gretchen was not what she pretended to be. But I feared to ask questions. They might have spoiled all. And the life was so new to me, so quiet and peaceful, with the glamour of romance over it all, that I believe I could have staid on forever. And somehow Phyllis was fading away, slowly, but surely. The regret with which I had heretofore looked upon her portrait was lessening each day, from active to passive. And yet was it because Gretchen was Phyllis in the ideal? Was I falling in love with Gretchen because she was Gretchen, or was my love for Phyllis simply renewing itself in Gretchen? Was that the reason why the portrait of Phyllis grew less holding and interesting to me? It was a complex situation; one I frowned over when alone. It was becoming plainer to me every hour that I had a mystery all of my own to solve. And Gretchen was the only one to solve it.

I shall never forget that night under the chestnuts on the bank of the wide white river. The leaves were gossiping among themselves. They had so much to talk about, and then they knew so much! Had not they and their ancestors filtered the same moonbeams century on century? Had not their ancestors heard the tramp of the armies, the clash of the saber, the roar of the artillery? Had not the hand of autumn and the hand of death marked them with the crimson sign? Ah, the leaves! It is well to press them in books when they themselves have such fine stories to tell.

"Gretchen," said I, echoing my thoughts, "had I been born a hundred years ago I must have been a soldier. Napoleon was a great warrior."

"So was Blucher, since it was he who helped overcome the little Corsican."

The Germans will never forgive Napoleon.

"But war is a terrible thing," went on Gretchen.

"Yes, but it is a great educator. It teaches the vanquished how little they know."

"War is the offspring of pride. That is what makes it so abhorred."

"It is also the offspring of oppression. That is what makes it so great."

"Yes. When the people take up arms, it is well. War is the torch of liberty in the hands of the people. Oh, I envy the people, who are so strong, yet know it not. If I were a man, I would teach the people that a king has no divine right, save when it is conferred upon him by them."

"Gretchen, I'm afraid that you're a bit of a socialist."

"And who is not who has any love for humanity?"

"A beautiful woman who is a socialist, Gretchen, is a menace to the king. Sometimes he fears her. At large she is dangerous. He seeks her, and if he finds her he takes away her liberty." All this was said with a definite purpose. It was to let Gretchen know that I knew her secret. "Gretchen, you are an embryo socialist, a chrysalis, as it were."

"No, herr," sadly. "I am a butterfly whose wings have been clipped." I had not expected this admission.

"Never mind," said I. "Gretchen, I do not want you to call me herr; call me Jack."

"Jack!" she said. It became an uncommon name now.

"Whatever your true name may be, I shall never call you anything but Gretchen."

"Ah, Jack!" She laughed, and the lurking echoes clasped the music of that laughter in their wanton arms and hurried it across the river.

"Sing to me," said I.

Then imagine my surprise—I, who had heard nothing but German fall from her lips—when in a heavenly contralto she sang a chanson from "La Fille de Madame Angot," an opera forgotten these ten years!

"Elle est tellement innocente!"

She had risen, and she stood there before me with a halo of moonshine about her head. The hot blood rushed to my ears. Barmaid, socialist or whatever she might be, she was lovable. In a moment I was kissing her hand, the hand so small, so white and yet so firm. A thousand inarticulate words came to my lips, from my heart! Did the hand tremble? I thought so. But swiftly she drew it from my clasp, all the joy and gladness gone from her face and eyes.

"No, no!" she cried. "This must not be! It must not be!"

"But I"— I began eagerly.

"You must not say it; I command you! If you speak, Gretchen will be Gretchen no more. Yes, the king seeks Gretchen, but will you drive her away from her only haven?" with a choking sound.

"Gretchen, trust me. Shall I go tomorrow? Shall I leave you in peace?" Somehow I believed myself to be in danger. "Speak!"

There was an interval of stillness, broken only by the beating of hearts. Then:

"Stay. But speak no word of love. It is not for such as I. Stay and be my friend, for I need one. Cannot a woman look with favor upon a man but he must needs become her lover? I shall trust you as I have trusted other men, and, though you fail me in the end, as [illegible] have done, still I shall trust you. Herr, I conspire against the king. For what? The possession of my heart. All my life I have stood alone—so alone!"

"I will be your friend, Gretchen. I will speak no word of love. Will that suffice?"

"It is all I ask, dear friend. And now will you leave me?"

"Leave you!" I cried. "I thought you bade me stay."

"Ah," putting out her hand, "you men do not understand! Sometimes a woman wishes to be alone when—when she feels that she—she cannot hold back her tears!"

Gravely I bent over her hand and kissed it. It seemed to me, as I let the hand fall, that I had never kissed a woman on the lips. I turned and went slowly down the path. Once I looked back. I saw something white lying at the foot of the tree. Heaven knows what a struggle it was, but I went on. I wanted to take her in my arms and tell her that I loved her. When I reached the inn, I turned again, but I saw nothing. I sat in my room a long time that night, smoking my pipe till the candle gasped feebly and died in the stick and the room was swallowed in darkness.

I did not know, I was not sure, but I thought that, so long as I might not love Phyllis, it would not be a very hard task to love her image, which was Gretchen. You see, Phyllis was so very far away, and Gretchen was so near!

CHAPTER X.

On the next afternoon I was sitting on the porch, with a glass of wine, when Gretchen came out of the inn. Just then, raising my eyes, I saw a group of horsemen approaching. I discerned them to be cavalrymen, petty officers. They were mounted on spirited horses.

"Gretchen," said I, "they are cavalrymen. They do not wear the Hohenphalian uniform. So perhaps it would be just as well for you to go to your room and remain there till they are gone. Ah," said I, elevating the glasses again, "they wear his majesty's colors. You had best retire."

"I refuse. They may be thirsty."

"I'll see to that," I laughed.

"But"— she began.

"Oh, Gretchen wishes to see new faces," said I, with chagrin.

"If it pleases you, sir," mischievously.

"What if they are looking for—for"—

"That is the very reason why I wish to see them."

"You are determined?"

"I am."

"Very well," said I. "You had best eat an onion."

"And for what purpose?"

"As a preventive to offensive tactics," looking slyly at her. Her laugh rang out mockingly.

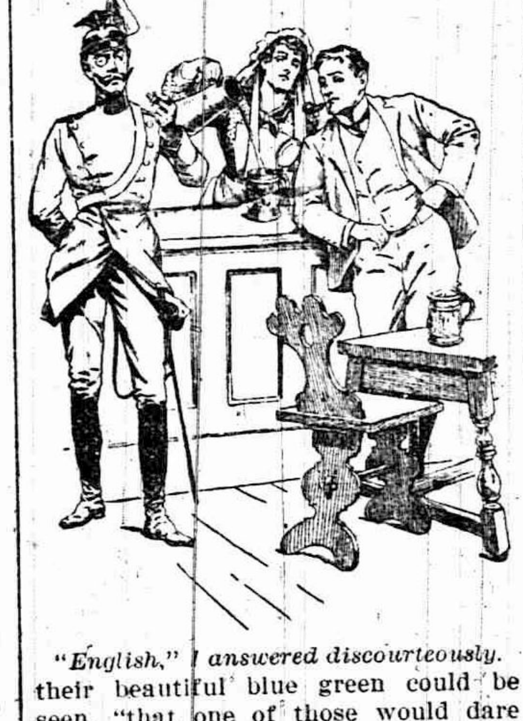
"Do you not know that aside from dueling the German lives only for his barmaid, his beer and his knoblauch? Nevertheless, since you wish it, I will eat one—for your sake."

"For my sake?" I cried in dismay. "Heaven forfend!"

"Does herr"—

"Jack," said I.

"Does Herr Jack think," her eyes narrowing till naught but a line of their beautiful blue green could be seen, "that one of those would dare take a liberty with me?"



"English," I answered discourteously.

"I hope he will not. I should have the unpleasant duty of punching his head." If I could not kiss Gretchen, nobody else should."

"You are very strong."

"Yes. And there are some things which add threefold to a man's strength."

"Such as"— She looked at me daringly.

"Yes, such as"— Her eyes fell before my glance. A delicate veil of rose covered her face for a moment. I wondered if she knew that it was only because I clinched my fists till the nails cut that I did not do the very thing I feared the stragglers coming down the road might do. "Come," said I peremptorily. "There is no need of your welcoming them here!"

So we entered the inn, and she began furbishing up the utensils, just to tease me more than anything else. Outside there was a clatter of hoofs, the chink of the spur, intermingled with a few oaths, and then two representatives of the king came in noisily. They gazed admiringly at Gretchen as she poured out their beer. She saw the rage in my eyes. She was aggravating with her promiscuous smiles. The elder officer noticed my bulldog pipe.

"English?" he inquired indifferently. The German cannot disassociate an Englishman and a brier wood bulldog pipe.

"English," I answered discourteously. It mattered nothing to me whether he took me for an Englishman or a Zulu. Either answered the purpose.

He wore an eyeglass through which he surveyed me rather contemptuously.

"What is your name, fraulein?" he asked, turning to Gretchen.

"Gretchen," sweetly.

"And what is the toll for a kiss?"

"Nothing," said Gretchen, looking at me. The lieutenant started for her, but she waved him off. "Nothing, Herr Lieutenant, because they are not for sale."

I moved closer to the bar. "Out for a constitutional?" I asked, blowing the ash from the live coal in my pipe.

"We are on his majesty's business," with an intonation which implied that the same was none of mine. "Gretchen, we shall return tonight, so you may lay two plates at a separate table," with an eye on me. He couldn't have hated me any more than I hated him. "Then there is no way of getting a kiss?"

"No," said Gretchen.

"Then I'll blow you one," and Gretchen made a pretty courtesy.

I nearly bit the amber stem off my pipe. They were soon gone, and I was glad of it.

"Herr Jack is angry," said Gretchen.

"Not at all," I growled. "What right have I to be angry?"

"Does Herr Jack wish Gretchen always to be sad?"

THE PAN-AMERICAN.

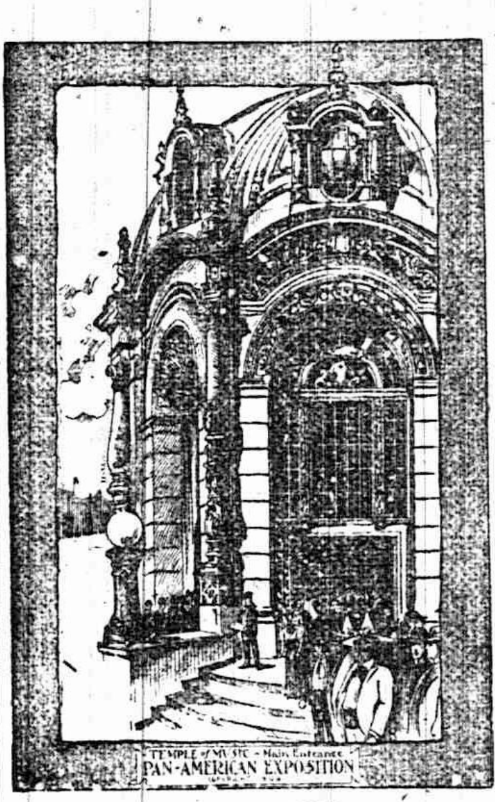
A GLANCE AT THE GREAT ENTERPRISE AND ITS PURPOSES.

True Picture of Nineteenth Century Development Arranged in a Setting of Unsurpassed Beauty and Splendor at Pan-American Exposition.

If one may judge by the presence of thousands of workmen at the grounds of the Pan-American Exposition and the wonderful progress they have made during the last few months, the Exposition will be opened in a condition of completeness upon the 1st of May next.

For the benefit of those who, for any reason, have not been informed concerning the plans and purposes of this vast enterprise I will state that the Exposition grounds are in the northern part of the city of Buffalo and have an area of 350 acres. Buffalo, with its 400,000 population, is preparing the most artistic creation ever produced for the purposes of an exposition. The completed work will cost probably $10,000,000, exclusive of exhibits.

The landscape upon which the buildings stand includes a part of one of the most beautiful parks in Buffalo or, in fact, in the world. The Exposition will thus have the setting of trees, lawns and water features, which have cost the city of Buffalo millions of dollars. The main Exposition buildings are some 20 or more in number and are arranged about a system of beautiful courts some 33 acres in extent. The arrangement is such as to permit the most exquisite decorative effects that the best trained artists of the world may be able to produce.



TEMPLE of MUSIC - Main Entrance
PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION

HALL OF MUSIC.

Space will permit only an enumeration of the principal buildings. These are: The Electric Tower, 375 feet high, which is to be the centerpiece of the most brilliant and novel electric illumination ever conceived; the Propylæ, or architectural screen, at the northern end of the grounds; the Stadium, for sporting and athletic events; the Agriculture building, Manufactures and Liberal Arts building, Ethnology building, the Government group of three great buildings, the Midway restaurant building, Electricity building, the Machinery and Transportation buildings and Railroad Station, the Temple of Music, Graphic Arts, Horticulture, Mines, Forestry, Dairy, Ordnance, Service and other buildings, the Albright Gallery of Art, costing $400,000; the New York State building, costing $175,000, besides the state and foreign buildings and numerous other structures of beautiful and interesting design for a variety of purposes.

The Midway at the Pan-American Exposition alone will cost more than some large expositions. It is estimated the cost of the Midway will be about $3,000,000, as it will have more than a mile of frontage closely built with the most picturesque structures conceivable and will contain between 30 and 40 entertainment features of most novel and interesting character.

The purposes of the Exposition are not merely to give the people a most magnificent and attractive entertainment, but it will furnish the opportunity for every one to inform himself upon the progress of the nineteenth century. The Exposition is held for the purpose of celebrating the achievements of the western world during a century of unparalleled progress. It is distinctly a western world affair, all the governments of the western hemisphere having been invited to participate in all departments. Official responses have been made by every important government, state and dependency of the western world, and they are preparing to be represented by most creditable exhibits.

The exhibits are classified in the following divisions: Electricity and electrical appliances; fine arts, painting, sculpture and decoration; graphic arts, typography, lithography, steel and copper plate printing, photo mechanical processes, drawing, engraving and bookbinding; liberal arts, education, engineering, public works, constructive architecture, music and drama, sanitation and hygiene; ethnology, archæology, progress of labor and invention, isolated and collective exhibits; agriculture, agricultural implements; machinery and appliances, foods and their accessories, horticulture, viticulture, agriculture, forestry and forest products, fish, fisheries, fish products and apparatus for fishing; mines and metallurgy, machinery, manufactures, transportation, railways, vessels, vehicles, ordnance, exhibits from the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Guam, Tutuila and the Philippine Islands.

The Exposition has the indorsement not only of the state of New York, which appropriated $300,000, but of the national government, which appropriated $500,000 for the purpose of being suitably represented upon this great occasion. The Exposition will continue six months and will furnish an opportunity such as rarely comes for the public to take note, at a glance, of the wonderful progress of the western world. It will be like a great university, at which the young and old will become for the time being students of western civilization.

About 12,000 people have subscribed to the stock of the Exposition, and it is a public enterprise in the broadest sense of the term, the aim being to produce a magnificent spectacle to delight the artistic sense of all who attend and to present through the medium of an army of enterprising exhibitors a true picture of nineteenth-century development. John G. Milburn, an eminent lawyer of Buffalo, is president, and the director general is William I. Buchanan, who was director of the departments of agriculture, live stock and forestry at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago and afterward for six years United States minister to the Argentine Republic.

MARK BENNITT.

"PAN-AM." RESTAURANTS.

The Best of Service Will Be Provided.

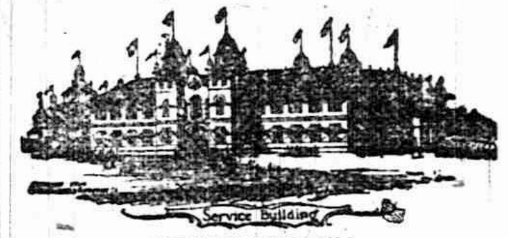
The needs of the inner man will be well attended to at the Pan-American Exposition to be held at Buffalo from May 1 to Nov. 1, 1901. At some expositions a great mistake has been made by not providing for good restaurants, where satisfactory meals could be obtained at reasonable prices. Either the food obtained has not been of good quality or prices charged have been exorbitant or the facilities in some particulars have been inadequate to the occasion.

There will be good restaurants in different parts of the grounds of the Pan-American Exposition, so that it will not be necessary for visitors to go outside of the grounds to secure a good meal, well served, at a moderate price. All tastes will be suited in the services rendered, for there will be places where meals will be served on an elaborate plan to suit the most fastidious taste and where prices will be in proportion to those charged at high class restaurants in large cities. There will be other places where the meals will be cheap, but the food appetizing and healthful and the surroundings clean. There will be restaurants in the beautiful building at the entrance to the Midway, another in a similar building at the entrance to the Stadium, another in the Electric Tower, which will be one of the great centers of interest on the Exposition grounds, and another on the Midway. Refreshments will also be served in the Temple of Music, which may be enjoyed by visitors at the same time that they are listening to the concerts in progress in the auditorium. There will also be a New England kitchen, a German restaurant, a Mexican restaurant, an Italian restaurant and other places where various kinds of refreshments will be served.

EAGLES AT THE EXPOSITION.

Remarkable Decoration For Ethnology Building at Buffalo.

The building devoted to the Departments of Ethnology and Archæology at the Pan-American Exposition, which is now approaching completion, will have some remarkable sculptural decorations. Among them will be gigantic figures of eagles and lions, which will be placed upon eight of the 16 panels of the domes. These sculptures in staff will be conspicuous features of the architecture of this beautiful building. Models in clay are first made of the figures, and from them reproductions in staff are cast.



SERVICE BUILDING.

The model of the eagle has just been completed. It is of colossal size. In the model nearly 10,000 pounds of clay have been used, and each bird, when cast in staff, will weigh fully two tons. The sculptured eagle will measure nearly 16 feet in height.

Essays on Pan-American.

A movement to interest the public school teachers and public school pupils in the Pan-American Exposition to be held at Buffalo next summer has been started. It originated in some of the public schools of Pennsylvania and is being taken up elsewhere as the wisdom of the plan becomes apparent. The idea is to have the teachers in the public schools write essays for various occasions of an educational character on the objects and aims of the Exposition and the bearing that such a display will have on the commerce of the world. A similar plan regarding the Paris Exposition was found quite successful and resulted in the attendance of a large corps of teachers at that fair. The plan contemplates also essays by pupils. It is believed that in this way much information can be spread regarding the benefits to be derived from cultivating closer relations with the different countries of this hemisphere and that it would result in greater intelligence among the public school teachers and pupils on this subject, as well as a larger attendance among this class of the population at the Exposition.

West Indians Will Attend.

Louis H. Ayme, United States Consul to Guadeloupe, says that in the West Indies the Pan-American Exposition is considered much more important than the Centennial Exposition of 1876 and that hundreds of natives are preparing to come to it.

A Poet With Vigor.

The McMillans of London published a book of poems by T. E. Brown, which the English critics lauded because of the "vigor of the poet's descriptive style." Here is a little sample of it referring to the sailing of a fishing smack:

So to the jetty gradual she was hauled;
Then one the tiller took
And chewed and spat upon his hand and bawled,
And one the canvas shook
Forth like a moldy bat, and one, with nods
And smiles, lay on the bowsprit end and called
And cursed the harbor master by his gods.

And, rotten from the gunwale to the keel,
Rat riddled, bilge bestank,
Slime slobbered, horrible, I saw her reel
And drag her oozy flank
And sprawl among the deft young waves that laughed
And leapt and turned in many a sportive wheel
As she thumped onward with her lumbering draft.

We believe this is a poet who could almost do justice to the Chicago stockyards. The rhythmic swish of the pig sticker's knife and the thrilling splash of the hog in the scalding vat ought to thrill such a bard to the very core of his immortal soul. Give us a call, Brown.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Sneeze Wood Tree.

The remarkable sneeze wood tree is a native of Natal and other parts of South Africa. It's funny name was given to it because one cannot saw it without sneezing violently.

The dust of its wood has just the same effect as the strongest snuff and is so irritating to the nose that workmen are obliged to sneeze even when they are planting it.

If a piece of the wood of this tree is put in the mouth, it is found to have a very bitter taste, and no doubt it is this bitterness which prevents insects of any kind from attacking the timber of the "sneeze wood" tree.

The fact that insects find it so disagreeable makes its wood very valuable for work that is required to last a long time.

They Couldn't Hurt.

"The ladies in our congregation are pretty fond of me," said the minister's mischievous little boy. "Nearly all of them gave pa some slippers on his birthday."

"I thought your pa always uses a slipper to spank you with."

"So he does, but these he just got are the soft kind, that's all made out o' wool."—Philadelphia Press.

The Old Chestnuts.

It is said that a certain Cleveland lady whose handsome house is in an ultrafashionable section of the city was called east while her home was undergoing the renovating and refurnishing process. During her absence a man was especially engaged to hang the pictures. Among them were a number of excellent copies of the world's greatest works of art, and the man, an artist, found his task a labor of love.

With great care he hung the more valuable copies in the roomy reception hall and had just finished his task when the lady returned.

Her eyes snapped as she surveyed his work.

"Who hung those old chestnuts there?" she cried.

"Old masters, madam," said the startled artist.

"Old chestnuts, I say; it's the same thing. If you hung them, take them down. I won't have them there. With new furniture and new decorations and new carpets and rugs I'll have new pictures too. Who ever heard of such old trumpery stuff in a strictly modern house?"

"And what shall I do with the—the old chestnuts, madam?" the artist inquired.

"Oh, dump them into the attic until I can get rid of them," replied the lady.

And there the "chestnuts" lie, Madonnas and cherubs and all, gathering dust and calmly awaiting the getting rid of process.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Mrs. Geo. Tiffany gave a dancing and card party to a number of young people last Tuesday evening. The guests were Misses Florence Brewer, Edyth Corey, Viola Shull, Jule Hicks, Messrs. Ralph Bidwell, Faron Anderson, Ernest Carr, Frank Chilson.

B. J. Pulver & Co. have one of the neatest and most up-to-date drug stores in the village and are constantly making improvements. They have recently purchased two new silent salesmen and filled them with fancy articles and now they have ordered an entire new set of shelf bottles with cut stoppers and glass gold trimmed labels.

The annual meeting of the Tecumseh banks was held Tuesday night. The old directors of the Lilley State bank were re-elected: Pres., Lucius Lilley; cashier, F. A. Shepard; assistant cashier F. B. Bauer. At the meeting of the State Savings bank, the number of the directors was changed from nine to seven. The following officers were elected: Pres., C. R. Miller; vice pres. and assistant cashier, J. Q Look; cashier, J. H. Smith.

The pastor of the Tecumseh Presbyterian church last Sunday evening chose for his topic "Who touched me?"—Depends on where you have been, elder. If in Ann Arbor, we dare say it was the back man. If in St. Joe, it would be the county clerk. If in Lansing, the hotel waiter. If in Washington, Mark Hanna would have tried it. If in Adrian, it would be a toss-up between the reporters of the two daily papers.—Adrian Press.

Reports to the state board of health by representative physicians in active general practice in different parts of the state, indicate that rheumatism, influenza, bronchitis, tonsilitis and neuralagia, in the order named, caused most sickness in Michigan during the past week. Cerebro spinal meningitis was reported at two places, whooping cough at 7, measles at 12, diphtheria at 27, smallpox at 38, scarlet fever at 95, and consumption at 159.

The Rummage Sale that has been conducted for so many weeks in Tecumseh has met with great success. It has been run by the two Guilds of St. Peter's church, the Research Circle and for the past two weeks by the Eastern Star. These sales are being conducted all over the country and are not only beneficial to the churches and societies by whom they are run but also to a large class of people who are suffering for clothes and can obtain them at these places for small sums of money.

"Twentieth Century Hope" will be the subject of the pastor's sermon next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 in the Universalist church. Sunday school at 3:45.

Mrs. Austin and her committee will not serve supper next week at the M. E. church, on account of the revival services, but will serve in the month of June.—By order of the President.

The board of the Baptist church organized last Tuesday night with the following officers:

Char.—Frank Bryan.
Treas.—G. B. Garlinghouse.
Sec.—R. S. Moore.

An adjourned meeting of the parish of the Universalist church will be held at the church Monday next, Jan. 14, at 6:30 p. m. A full attendance is requested. Business of importance will be presented for consideration.
L. LOANA STACY, Clerk.

The services at St. Peter's church Sunday next at the usual hour. On Tuesday evening at 6:30 the second of the series of illustrated missionary talks will be given. The illustrations will consist of about 80 stereopticon pictures on Chinese missionary work. The talk is primarily for the children, but all are invited and will be welcome.

RAILROAD NEWS.

The Lima Northern bowling team from Detroit came over to Tecumseh Saturday evening and bowled up against a Tecumseh aggregation and were ten-struck for three games. They will level the road bed from Dundee east and come up again sometime.—Adrian Press.

No. 24 on the C. N. due here at 9:23 was an hour and a half late Wednesday on account of a wreck on the Ann Arbor main line. A freight car that was being pushed across the track left the rails and considerable difficulty was experienced in clearing the track.

The D. & L. N. road, which has been dependent upon the Wabash for eight and one-half miles of track between South Adrian and Lima Junction, will within the next three weeks be making use of its own rails, the work of construction being nearly completed.

The Lake Shore shops at Elkhart are running double time in order to complete the repairs necessary on the locomotive equipment of the system.

Mrs. Bert Abbott left this morning for Trenton to spend several days with her husband who is quite sick.

Mrs. Minnie McNiff arrived Wednesday from San Francisco Cal, to visit her mother, Mrs. Geo Beach.

Mr. Sutton and Mr. Biser have resigned their positions at the car shops.

Eng Rhodes, of the D & L. N., is off duty on account of sickness.

Foreman Chas. Beck is confined to the house by illness.

Artemas Fairbanks Rice.

Entered into rest at his home in Raisin Mich., Wednesday, January 9th, 1901, Artemas Fairbanks Rice, in the seventieth year of his age.

"And when the even was come, Jesus saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side." Grant him, O Lord, eternal rest, and let light perpetual shine upon him.

The funeral services will be held this afternoon at one o'clock, at the home south of town. Rev. Burleson officiates.

LITERARY NOTES.

With the January number Modern Culture drops the old name, Self-Culture, from its title page and cover and takes its rightful place among the leading literary magazines of the country. It has ceased to be a class publication and has become in the broadest sense of the term a magazine of culture.

* * *

In January's Atlantic Monthly Henry D. Sedgwick Jr. contributed "A Gap in Education," discussing a topic as important and necessary as it is generally avoided.

* * *

It does not seem to be generally known that the now notable novel, by Charles G. D. Roberts, called "The Heart of the Ancient Wood," appeared complete in Lippincott's Magazine for April last.

* * *

A careful character study of the Emperor William appeared in McClure's Magazine for January. In this article the author shows that he has given to his work equal care and discernment. The result is an illuminating account of the man and the sovereign.

* * *

The complicated Filipino land question is discussed in the January Review of Reviews by Mr. James B. Rodgers, who has spent much time and labor in the investigation of Luzon land titles.

* * *

The National Magazine ushered in the new century in a most fitting manner by presenting in the January number an amount and variety of fiction and feature articles unsurpassed by any popular priced periodical.

* * *

With the current number The Critic achieves its 20th birthday, enters, in fact, upon its third decade, an event which is appropriately celebrated by certain important changes in typography and make-up. In addition to being printed in double columns there is a new dress of type and an incidental gain of 10,000 words in text.

J. A. Lambert, of Rachel, N. C., writes: I heartily endorse Foley Kidney Cure. It does what you claim it will do, and there is nothing equal to it and I thank you for the good it has done me. Accept no substitute. J. J. Orr.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Council Chamber, Village of Tecumseh.

Regular meeting held Jan. 7, 1901. Present the entire council. Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

The committee appointed to investigate the placing of an arc lamp on Union street, referred the matter back to the council without recommendation. Report accepted. No further action.

The committee to which was referred the Eggleston damage case, reported that after careful investigation they believed that the amount asked in settlement was excessive for the damage claimed, and further, that they were convinced that no damage nor cause for damage existed. Report accepted.

Street commissioner's report for December submitted, showing fire team labor 5½ days; hired team 6¼ days $16.50; hand labor 11 days 3 hours, $14.13; gravel sold, $4. Also work done from Dec. 4 to Jan. 7, 1901: fire team, 5½ days; Wm. Askin, 2 days 2 hours, $5.50; Geo. Sisson, 2 days 2 hours, $5.50; W. H. Bird, 2 days 1 hour, $5.25; Wm. Cassel, hand labor 2 days 2 hours, $2.75; P. E. Jones 2 days 2 hours, $2.75; Philip Hornbaker 2 days 2 hours, $2.75; J. E. Hoeg, 1 day 2 hours, $1.50; E. Ames, 2 days, $2.50; Chas. Moody, 1 day, $1.25; Bion Hodges, ½ day, 63c; also, that in accordance with the instructions of the council, a cement walk had been constructed on Shawnee and Pearl streets abutting what is known as the Bradley property, according to the provisions of a resolution of the common council, to that effect, and that the expense of constructing said walk was $147.36. Report accepted and clerk instructed to collect the sidewalk bill less the usual one-fourth, and to draw orders for the accounts.

On motion the appointment of Arthur B. Harding as special policeman for Sutton's opera house, was confirmed by the council; with the understanding that any compensation for services of such officer was to be paid by the managers of said opera house.

On motion clerk was instructed to write the electric light manager in accordance with instructions received from the council.

The following bills were audited by the finance committee and on motion clerk was instructed to draw orders for the several amounts.

Wm. Hayden Milling Co., mill feed	$ 5 76

On motion the council then adjourned.

DON H. C. BOWEN,
Village Clerk.

E. L. Lowe

Was born in Ridgeway, Mich., Sept. 10, 1860, and departed this life at Roswell, New Mexico, January 2d, 1901. He suffered an attack of measles in June, 1897, which settled in his bronchial tubes and lungs, thus causing an illness from which he vainly sought relief at different times in Colorado, Florida and New Mexico.

His education was gained in District No. 3, Ridgeway, and two years at Tecumseh high school. At 19 he graduated from the Valentine Bros.' school of telegraphy at Janesville, Wis., entering at once into the employ of the M. C. & St. P. Ry Co. He worked his way from a small office to the position of traveling auditor, but on account of his wife's health, resigned and returned to the station at Whitewater, Wis. Ten years ago he returned to the old homestead which has since been his home.

He was a person of no mean ability as writer, speaker or debator, and was of a cheerful disposition which won many close friends. He was converted under the labors of Rev. Lowry, of the Ridgeway M. E. church, and was a zealous worker in the church, having been superintendent of the Sunday-school and president of the Epworth League for four years and serving on the official board of the church from the time he was a member until on account of failing health he resigned. He was an enthusiastic prohibitionist and W. C. T. U. worker.

E L Lowe was the youngest son of Justus and Mary Lowe, of a family of eleven children, nine of whom grew to maturity, and only four remain: Coonrod L., of Ridgeway; Mrs. James McIntyre, of Holloway; Mrs Ed DePuy, of Saline; and Logier Lowe, of Oklahoma.

He was united in marriage with Cynthia A. Gould, of Lima, Wis. Dec. 13, 1879. To them was born a daughter, the wife and mother dying of consumption July 11th, 1895. He married Mrs. Edith J. Montgomery March 20th, 1897. She with the daughter Nina and step son and step-daughter, whose temporal wants he so generously supplied and worked so faithfully for their educational advancement and spiritual welfare including a large concourse of relatives and friends, mourn the death of a loving husband and father and true friend.

The funeral services were held at the Ridgeway church Sunday afternoon when a large gathering of neighbors and friends met to pay their last respects to a dear and esteemed citizen. Rev P. E Vincent, pastor of the F. M. church, officiated. The remains were laid at rest beside loved ones in the Ridgeway Evergreen cemetery. J. D. A.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire, through the HERALD to tender our heartfelt appreciation to the neighbors and friends for kind and valuable assistance in our bereavement and at the funeral services of our dear husband and father. Especially are we grateful to the quartette for their service and the contributors of flowers.

Take Your Choice.

The Buddhists believe that happiness, Nirvana, consists in self effacement, oblivion. The young Buddhas began life by sitting unsupported in the air just after birth. Their mothers attained Nirvana immediately, and they, the Buddhas, reached Nirvana in various queer ways.

One earnest Buddha, one of the earliest of the long line, earned the "Nibbuta" as follows:

A hawk was about to devour a small bird. Said the Buddha to the bird of prey:

"I beseech thee, leave this little creature in peace. I will give thee its weight from my own flesh."

Down from heaven came a pair of scales, and the transaction was accomplished. The small bird sat on one side of the scales, and the Buddha began putting slices of his body into the other side, while the bird of prey looked on with an evil eye. As the Buddha carved himself up the little bird seemed to get heavier and heavier. The beam of the scales did not move until the last particle of the saint's body was put in the scales.

The Buddhists' legends do not tell how the saint managed to carve up his last few fragments, but that is not important. Which do you think was happier, the Buddha who entered into Nirvana as the little bird flew away or the bird of prey that made a hearty meal of the saint's flesh and sailed off delighted with his bargain?—New York Journal.

Cobwebs and Cuts.

An old time remedy to stop blood flowing from a cut is to put cobwebs over it, but from recent discovery it appears a dangerous thing to do. Some time ago a woman fell and cut her head, and when her friends hurried to her assistance they found the blood flowing from a deep gash. Cobwebs were applied, and the bleeding quickly stopped, but in a few days the woman was taken with lockjaw.

A scientist declared there were lockjaw germs in cobwebs, and that was the way the woman contracted the disease. He has made quite a study of the subject and says that in a handful of cobwebs he found 61 different disease germs. That being true, it is very easy to see how one could get not only lockjaw, but many other dreadful diseases, as the cobweb is placed right on an open wound and the germs can enter the blood. Cobwebs form in dark, dirty places, and it is not to be wondered that they gather germs.—Exchange.

The Log of a Ship.

A ship's log is an instrument for measuring the rate at which the vessel is going and consists of three parts—viz, the log chip, the log line and the log glass. The principle is simply this: A light substance thrown from the vessel ceases to partake of the motion of the vessel as soon as it strikes the water and will be left behind on the surface after a certain interval. If the distance of the ship from this stationary object be measured, the approximate rate of sailing will be given.

The log chip is the float, the log line is the measure of the distance, and the log glass defines the interval of time.

In the old days the heaving of the log required skill and watchfulness, but since the patent log has come into use no skill is required in finding the speed of a vessel. It is regulated by clockwork, and the number of knots the vessel sails per hour is recorded on the dial without any hand touching it.

The London Bus.

"English travelers," says a London correspondent of the Boston Transcript, "have so jeered our advertising outrages upon architecture and scenery that I fancied we were of all nations most culpable. But after a season's residence in England I hold America excused. Our advertising efforts are modest, even feeble, beside those of our British cousins.

"A London bus is a mere advertising van with accommodations for passengers. It takes almost as long to read one through as to read a daily paper. The destination of the bus is marked in inconspicuous letters, the smallest on the canvas decorated vehicle, and the chances of disentangling those letters from the maze of advertising announcements about them in time to hail the bus you want are smaller still."

Crape on the Door.

The custom of placing crape on the door of a house where there has been a recent death had its origin in the ancient English heraldic customs and dates back to the year 1100 A. D. At that period hatchments, or armorial ensigns, were placed in front of houses when the nobility or gentry died. The hatchments were of diamond shape and contained the family arms quartered and covered with sable.

The Conceited Peer.

A certain conceited nobleman once observed to Charles Townsend, "When I happen to say a foolish thing, I always burst out a-laughing." Townsend eyed him curiously and at length remarked in the most deliberate manner, "Ah, I envy you your happiness, for you must certainly live the merriest life of any man in Europe."

When you are invited to a real old fashioned woman's house for supper, she always has floating island. This is a sure test.—Atchison Globe.

The temple of fame stands upon the grave. The flame that burns upon its altars is kindled from the ashes of dead men.

A man who is much afraid of drafts has a feather suspended from the ceiling by a light silken thread. Should the feather move in the slightest degree he doesn't rest content until he finds out where the draft comes from.

The London Bus.

A bus weighs 3,200 pounds and costs £145. It is made of ash and oak except the paneling, which is mahogany, and the windows are of plate glass. Before a bus is allowed to earn its £2 10s. a day it has to be licensed, or, as they say, "you have to get a number plate for it." This number plate is the white plate with black figures surmounted by a crown seen at the tail of the bus. It is provided by the police and costs £2. Then there is a wheel duty of 15s. per annum to be paid to the inland revenue.

After making these payments any one can run a bus in London wherever he likes, subject of course to the general rules and regulations bearing upon all vehicular traffic. Attached to each bus is a stud of 12 horses, of which only ten, or five pairs, are worked in any one day, thus securing a complete day's rest for each pair every sixth day. As a bus runs 64 miles a day and five pairs of horses are used it follows that a bus horse's day's work is 13 miles, which he does in less, considerably less, than three hours, the rate at which he travels being between five and six miles an hour.

This does not seem a great deal to exact from a horse, still the work is hard, often involving a prolonged dead pull at the trot, and the crowded condition of the London streets makes it harder by necessitating continual deviations out of the way of obstacles and abrupt stoppages to avoid collisions.—Cassell's Magazine.

How a Woman Loves.

Whenever I hear his name, I could faint. When I see him, I could sink into the ground. At the sight of his handwriting I grow cold from head to foot, I tremble, my heart aches so that it seems breaking in two. I long to be with him, yet when I am with him I have nothing to say. I have to escape and be miserable all alone. He is my thought all day; the last before I sleep, the first when I awake. I could cry and cry. I try to read, and I remember not a word. I like playing best, for then I can almost imagine that he is listening. But when I stop playing and look around I find myself in an empty room. It is awful. I call his name; no one answers. I whisper it; still no answer. I throw myself on the ground, and I say, "Think of me, think of me; you shall; you must; you do think of me!" It is great torture and a great despair. Perhaps it is a madness too. But it is my way of loving. I want to love while I live. If I knew for certain that he loved me—me only—the joy, I think, would kill me. Love! Do you know, poor little angel, what it means? Sometimes it is a curse.—From "Robert Orange," by Mrs. Craigie.

Cured by Forgetting.

This is an English story, and, strange as it may seem, it made a hit when it was told at the Lambs' club, says the New York Telegraph. It was perpetrated by Lawrence d'Orsay, the English actor. Several members of the club spun yarns of dubious merit, when Mr. d'Orsay in his peculiar way began:

"Now, gentlemen, I'll relate a story."

One man present pulled out his watch, and they all thought it was going to be a serial. One or two started to go, but the actor stopped them by his assurance that the story wouldn't be very long.

"There was a friend of mine in London," he said, "who was an incessant cigarette smoker. Finally he lost his memory. Then he forgot to smoke cigarettes, and he got well again."

Mr. d'Orsay effected his escape through the assistance of a friend who knew him when he didn't tell such stories.

The "Camel's Hair" Brush.

"Contrary to the belief of most people, the camel's hair brush used by artists has nothing of the camel in it," said a manufacturer of soft brushes to a writer the other day. "There was a time when real camel's hair was used for the purpose. The ship of the desert, however, has long been superseded by the homely little squirrel. Not only is squirrel's hair very much less costly, but it is better, softer, more pliable and far more durable. At the present day it is doubtful if you could find a pound of camel's hair in all the brush factories in this country. However, there is no cause for fear that the graceful little squirrel will be exterminated. It is the European squirrel that furnishes the hair for the brushes, the covering of the American squirrel being too furry and soft for the purpose."—Washington Star.

A LONG FELT WANT.

It is Supplied in this Vicinity at Last.

It is hard to always be pleasant.

Good-natured people are often irritable.

If you knew the reason you would not be surprised.

Ever have itching piles?

Not sick enough to go to bed or not well enough to be content.

Nothing will annoy you so.

The constant itching sensation.

Hard to bear, harder to get relief.

Keeps you awake nights.

Spoils your temper—nearly drives you crazy.

Isn't relief and cure a long felt want?

It is to be had for everyone in Doan's Ointment.

Doan's Ointment never fails to cure itching piles, eczema or any itching of the skin.

Here is proof of it in the testimony of an Ann Arbor citizen:

Mr. C. C. Church, of 520 South 7th street, Ann Arbor, now retired from the active duties of life, says: "I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Ointment. To anyone requiring a healing and soothing preparation it will prove invaluable. I suffered for years from itching hemmorhoids and though I tried everything I could hear of and used remedies prescribed by scores of friends I was unable to obtain permanent relief until my attention was called to Doan's Ointment. I was somewhat surprised after the second application to notice what a different effect it had from anything I had hitherto used. Encouraged I used it strictly according to directions and in a surprisingly short length of time when you take into account the number of years I was afflicted, the irritation ceased and the inflammation was allayed. When Doan's Ointment cured me it will cure others."

Doan's Ointment for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

RIDGEWAY.

J. W. Sherman is on the sick list.

H. C. Wilson, of Blissfield, spent Sunday at his old home.

Geo. Benyman, of Elkhart, Ind., is the guest of Stella Hindes.

Alice Westgate, of Raisin Valley, is the guest of Gertrude Smith.

F. J. Hough, of Adrian, was in the village on his wheel Saturday.

The L. C. S. will be held at the parsonage next week Friday evening.

Rev. D. H. Yokum filled the pulpit of the South Macon church Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. J. W. Sherman went to Toledo Wednesday night to see her son, who is quite sick.

Eva Doty, of Three Rivers, visited her cousin, Mrs. W. L. Jones, and family last week Thursday.

Supervisor C. L. Lowe is in Adrian this week in attendance at the meeting of the board of supervisors.

Mrs. F. L. Cook, after a three week's stay with her parents, returned to her home at Detroit Monday night.

Clarence Montgomery, of Montpelier, O., was called here Saturday by the death of his step-father, E. L. Lowe.

Acel Smith, of Grand Ledge, made a flying call in the village last week, returning Friday accompanied by his wife.

Nina Lowe, of Lima Center, Wis., who was called here Saturday by the death of her father, E. L. Lowe, returned Wednesday.

Bloomfield Sherman, from near Adrian, and John Sherman and wife, of Macon, attended the funeral of their nephew Wednesday.

On account of the stormy night there was not a very large attendance at the donation Wednesday evening. The receipts amounted to about $35.

Mrs. J. W. Osborn, who went to Hudson to spend Christmas with her daughter, Mrs. Harry Perkins, has been very sick but is reported much better.

On account of the lecture at Tecumseh Friday evening by Dr. Henson, fourth number on the Star Course, the Literary will not meet until Wednesday evening of next week.

At the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Pattison Christmas night occurred the marriage of Beulah, the youngest daughter to Lavern Hathaway, Rev. D. H. Yokom officiating. The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends.

The remains of the five months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Sherman, of Toledo, were brought here by the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Car, Wednesday. A short funeral service was held at the little one's grandparents', Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sherman at 2 o'clock. The remains were laid to rest in Evergreen cemetery.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. Chancey Dibble. of Ridgeway, celebrated their golden wedding January 2nd. At an early hour in the forenoon the guests began to arrive and soon the house was filled with the merriment of children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, numbering about 25

After doing justice to a bountiful dinner, they all returned to the parlors where C. B. Dibble, in behalf of the company, presented, with a few well chosen words, a fine eight day clock to Mr. and Mrs. Dibble as a token of their love and esteem.

Mr. and Mrs. Dibble were married January 2d, 1851, and began housekeeping about three miles southeast of Ridgeway village, in the midst of what would now be termed a wilderness. After many years of untiring efforts they succeeded in forming for themselves one of the most comfortable farm homes in the surrounding country. To them were born three sons and one daughter and God, in his infinite mercy has seen fit to spare them. They were present to help celebrate the golden wedding of their beloved parents. About three years ago on account of failing health and inability to perform the duties of farm work, the old couple moved to the village where they still reside.

As the shades of night fell upon the closing day, it reminded us that it was time to return home, when all joined in heartfelt wishes that the dear old people might be spared to enjoy many more anniversaries of their wedding day.

A GUEST.

Help... Nature

Babies and children need proper food, rarely ever medicine. If they do not thrive on their food something is wrong. They need a little help to get their digestive machinery working properly.

SCOTT'S EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL WITH HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME & SODA

will generally correct this difficulty.

If you will put from one-fourth to half a teaspoonful in baby's bottle three or four times a day you will soon see a marked improvement. For larger children, from half to a teaspoonful, according to age, dissolved in their milk, if you so desire, will very soon show its great nourishing power. If the mother's milk does not nourish the baby, she needs the emulsion. It will show an effect at once both upon mother and child.

Chas. Beasley was under the doctor's care Saturday night, having sprained his leg.

Mr. Hatfield has moved his family to Tecumseh where he has work in the car shop.

Clarence Lowe attended the funeral of his uncle, Elbridge Lowe, at Ridgeway Sunday.

Joint installation of the K. O. T. M. and L. O. T. M. will be held January 25 at Lenardson's hall Maccabees and their families are invited.

School opened again Monday after a vacation of two weeks. Several new scholars were enrolled. Although all were happy to resume work, yet the sad thought crept in that one of their former number was absent; Blanch Bannister will meet with them no more. Mr. Tripp started in with a new schedule of work and is doing all he can to build up the school. Let us as friends and patrons of the school unite to raise its standard.

BABY MILDRED McCARBERY.

Death entered the home of J. McCarbery Saturday and claimed the youngest member, who had been the joy of the home for a little over eight months. Brief was the life yet how great the joy. May the Lord strengthen the young parents in their great loss. The funeral took place Monday morning, conducted by Rev Kooiker and the Britton Reformed church choir rendering the music.

The family extend their heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends for their help and sympathy during the illness of the baby and in their bereavement.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions adopted by the C. E. S. of the Christian church:

WHEREAS God in his infinite love has taken from us one of our members just in the morning of life, Blanch Bannister, therefore we, the members of the Society, feel that her death is a personal loss and that we shall miss her smiling face from our midst.

RESOLVED that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to those who love and cherish her memory, comfort themselves with the thought that she is lifted far above all grief and pain; and let them resume their daily cares and duties, conscious that her voice is uttering its appeal to them to live for God and to trust in Him, even when He causes them to walk in darkness.

RESOLVED that this memorial be recorded in the secretary's book, thus perpetuating her name on our records as well as her memory in our hearts. Also that a copy be presented to the family and published in the local papers.

C. C. HENDERSHOT.

Departed this life Dec. 15, 1900, of apoplexy, Chas. C. Hendershot, aged 42 years. He was born in the town of Macon Feb. 1, 1857, and lived in that community until the time of his marriage to Nettie Hand, which took place Dec. 20, 1877, since which time he has lived on his farm.

His life has been characterized by strict attention to business, honest and upright in his dealings, successful in his life work, a man of retired nature, discreet in his expression, a believer in the teachings of the Bible, a very kind, considerate husband and father. He leaves a widow, one little daughter, five brothers and two sisters. His death occurred without warning being in perfect health, as was supposed. The services were held at the house on the 18th. conducted by Rev. D. H. Yokum, pastor of the M. E. church, Ridgeway. Interment at Macon cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the many neighbors, who, at the time of the death of a kind husband, and loving father, so kindly assisted us, we extend our sincere thanks with God's blessing and in the Sweet Home, may those who are waiting there and those who are watching here meet inside the beautiful gate and sing together, The Welcome Home.

MRS. C. C. HENDERSHOT AND DAUGHTER.

CONGRESSIONAL

The Senate Made Considerable Progress with the Army Bill.

FINAL VOTE STILL FAR AWAY

The House Considers the River and Harbor Appropriation Bill—Both Houses Adopt Resolutions on Death of Representative Clarke.

Washington, Jan. 11.—Considerable progress was made Thursday by the senate with the army reorganization bill, but the final vote upon the measure seems to be as far off as ever. Thursday's proceedings were characterized by several sharp colliquies, some of which were of a decidedly personal character.

An appeal was presented by Mr. Teller, of Colorado, from more than 2,000 persons in Manila, urging the United States government to cease its operations against the Filipinos. The appeal is sensational in its statements and so unusual in form that Mr. Hawley, of Connecticut, made a vigorous objection to its publication as a document. He declared that it was a treasonable denunciation of the government and an attack upon our soldiers.

Consideration was concluded of the committee amendments to the army reorganization bill, and the senate took up the amendments proposed by individual senators. The amendments providing for the appointment of Generals James H. Wilson, Fitzhugh Lee and Gen. Shafter to be major generals of the regular army and retired precipitated an extended and, on the part of Mr. Pettigrew, a bitter debate. The amendments prevailed, however, despite the opposition.

The announcement from the house of the death of the late Rep. Frank G. Clarke, of New Hampshire, was laid before the senate.

Mr. Gallinger presented a resolution expressive of the sorrow of the senate at the demise of Mr. Clarke, which was adopted. The chair appointed Senators Chandler (N. H.), Gallinger (N. H.), Deboe (Ky.), Scott (W. Va.), McLaurin (S. C.) and Heitfeld (Idaho) as a committee of the senate to attend the funeral. As an additional mark of respect, the senate then, at 5:05, adjourned.

HOUSE.

The general debate on the river and harbor bills continued in the house Thursday until 4 o'clock, when the death of Rep. Clarke, of New Hampshire, was announced, and the house adjourned out of respect to his memory.

The features of the debate Thursday were the speeches of Mr. Cushman (Wn.) and Mr. Hepburn (Ia.). The latter has been a persistent opponent of river and harbor bills for years, and he attacked the bill all along the line in his usually vigorous fashion.

Mr. Cushman's speech was unique in many particulars. He was in favor of river and harbor appropriations, and his complaint was due to the fact that the members of the committee, according to his ideas, had located the bulk of the appropriations in their own states and had given scant consideration to the needs of other states—especially to the Seattle ship canal in his own state. Mr. Cushman illustrated his remarks with a series of carefully prepared charts. He criticized several of the individual members in breezy style and became engaged in half a dozen very spirited encounters before he concluded.

Members crowded about the area in front of the speaker's desk where he stood explaining the figures upon the charts, and every one seemed to enjoy the picturesque performance immensely. When he wound up with a glowing appeal for justice of the Seattle project he got a stirring round of applause.

Mr. Hill (Conn.) announced the death of Rep. Frank G. Clarke, of New Hampshire, and presented the customary resolutions of regret.

These were unanimously adopted and the following committee was appointed to attend the funeral: Messrs. Sulloway (N. H.), Hill (Conn.), Knox (Mass.), Capron (R. I), Howell (N. J.), Lane (La.), Allen (Me.), Griggs (Ga.), Gaines (Tenn.), Robinson (Ind.), Nappen (Mass.), and King (Utah).

Then at 4:05, as a further mark of respect, the house adjourned.

More Smallpox Reported.

New York, Jan. 11.—The board of health was informed of two new cases of smallpox Thursday. The board's counsel has been instructed to apply for a warrant for the arrest of Dr. Montague R. Leverson, of Brooklyn, who is reported to have said that he had treated 30 cases of smallpox without reporting them to the board of health, and to have advised his hearers to shoot persons who might attempt forcible entry to their houses to vaccinate them.

Received Much Damage.

Queenstown, Jan. 11.—The Hamburg-American line steamer Frisia, Captain Schmidt, from Hamburg Dec. 29 for Boston and Portland, Me., arrived here Thursday. Her machinery is deranged. The Frisia had also sustained considerable deck damage and had large holes in both her quarters and considerable water in No. 4 hold. The repairs will probably necessitate the Frisia being docked here.

Remains Reach Home.

Canton, O., Jan. 11.—The body of Lieut. James S. Barber, nephew of the president, reached Canton Thursday, accompanied by the young widow, who made the trip from Hong Kong, China. The funeral services and interment will be held this morning. President and Mrs. McKinley sent a beautiful floral tribute from the White House conservatory.

Renting Locomotives.

Hundreds of locomotives are rented every year. Several corporations make their chief revenue this way. The Baldwins have many machines out on the rental form of payment—that is, the engines are rented in the same way that you would buy a stove on installments—so much down, so much a month, the payments to apply on the final purchase money. It is seldom, however, that a railroad rents locomotives. They are usually let out to contractors who construct temporary railways for hauling dirt from excavations.

Contractors who hire the locomotives usually have their own names gilded on them so that the public may suppose that they belong to them. The engines, as a usual thing, are cast offs. They may have pulled express trains once, but now they are only fit to pull gravel cars. The engineers who work them are oftentimes also the cast offs of the profession. They may have operated express engines, but through carelessness or other incapacity have been discharged from one road after another until they are only fit to haul gravel or wood trains.—Philadelphia Record.

Golf Before a Mirror.

One of the chief teachings in the religion of style is that to attain to orthodoxy it is necessary or at least desirable to practice daily in front of a looking glass so as to make sure that all the motions of the true style are being correctly carried out.

This always appeared to me a very "hard saying" until I had consulted W. G. Grace, John Roberts, C. B. Fry, K. S. Ranjitsinjhi, H. K. Foster, Kraenzlein, E. C. Bredin and other champions of sport.

All the above were unanimous in attributing the high degree of skill to which they have attained in various games and sports to the fact of their having devoted many hours a day from a very early stage of their careers to attitudinizing in front of looking glasses in their bedrooms.—Golf Illustrated.

The Oldest Visiting Card.

The state archives of Venice are said to possess the oldest visiting card of which there is any record, of course leaving aside the probable use of such articles for some thousands of years in China. Giacomo Contarini, professor at the University of Padua, sent the card in question as a curiosity to a Venetian friend, saying that the German students who came to Italy had the elegant and laudable custom of leaving such little cards, with their name and place of origin, at the houses of friends when they called and found them absent. The card referred to bears a coat of arms with the motto, "Espoir me confort," and beneath, "Joannes Westerhof Westphalus scribebat Patavii 4 Martii 1560."—London Tablet.

His Idea of an Alibi.

A talesman who was called in a murder trial in a certain state was asked whether he had any prejudice against an alibi plea on the part of a man accused of crime. The talesman replied that he had not.

"Do you fully understand what is meant by the term alibi?" he was asked.

"I think I do; yes, sir."

"What do you understand by it?"

The talesman reflected a moment and then, with a hesitancy indicative of graveness, replied, "An alibi is when the fellow who did it wasn't there."

"The Blues."

The origin of the term "blues" has been traced to the belief that persons in indigo dyeing establishments are peculiarly subject to melancholy. Another belief is that the expression is derived from the German blau, or lead, as lead by its heaviness has always been held to typify gloom and depression.

A Mean Slap.

"Very well," exclaimed Dr. Quick after his quarrel with the undertaker; "I'll make you sorry for this!"

"What are you going to do," retorted the undertaker—"retire from practice?"—Philadelphia Press.

"By hook and by crook" is an allusion to an ancient manorial custom which permitted the neighboring poor to take all the wood that they could reach and pull down from the forest trees, using only their shepherds' crooks.

Every woman in the country ought to know about

Mother's Friend

Those who do know about it wonder how they ever got along without it. It has robbed childbirth of its terrors for many a young wife. It has preserved her girlish figure and saved her much suffering. It is an external liniment and is applied to the parts which are called upon to bear the strain. It relieves the tension, absolutely no danger of upsetting the system as drugs taken internally are apt to do. It is to be rubbed into the abdomen to soften and strengthen the muscles that are to bear the strain. This means much less pain. It also prevents morning sickness and all of the other discomforts of pregnancy.

A druggist of Macon, Ga., says: "I have sold a large quantity of Mother's Friend and have never known an instance where it has failed to produce the good results claimed for it."

A prominent lady of Lamberton, Ark., writes: "With my first two children I was in labor from 24 to 30 hours. After using Mother's Friend, my seventh was born in 4 hours."

After Sickness

Take Vinol—Our Great Strength Creator.

IT GIVES ONE A SPLENDID APPETITE.

AND QUICKLY REBUILDS THE SYSTEM.

We Will Refund the Price of Vinol if It Fails.

The worst part of sickness, frequently, is getting over it.

The patient's strength is depleted, his system is generally demoralized, relapses are continually feared, and naturally.

The one thing to aid recovery is to give the patient that which will enable him to get strong, and at the same time give strength direct to the different organs of the body.

Nothing will do this like Vinol.

It acts directly on the stomach, creates a healthy appetite, and enables the digestive organs to obtain the necessary elements to increase the weight of the patient and to make new healthy flesh and muscle tissue and pure, rich, red blood.

The following is a letter showing where Vinol was taken and did good after a case of sickness. It reads as follows:

"I wish to certify to the very great benefit which has been derived from the use of Vinol in my family. My wife was very sick with the grippe and afterward was wholly run down. One bottle of Vinol places her on her feet in better condition than she had been before in six months. I heartily recommend and endorse it."—HENRY F. STURTEVANT, 81 Huntington St., Brockton, Mass.

Everything that is in Vinol is plainly printed on the label of each package.

We know Vinol is a splendid preparation, and in many cases we have been able to see for ourselves the wonderful results it brings about.

Remember that we guarantee Vinol and refund the purchase money if you are not satisfied.

VOTING FOR SENATOR

The Two Houses of the Legislature Cast Ballots Separately.

QUESTION OF EQUAL TAXATION

Important Subject Uppermost in the Minds of the Members of the Legislature

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 15.—Today the two houses of the legislature met separately and voted for United States senator from Michigan for the term of six years from March 4 next. This action was taken in compliance with the statute which provides that on the second Tuesday after the convening of the legislature in years when such an election is to occur, each house shall vote separately for senator, each representative and senator rising in his place as his name is called and announcing the person of his choice.

Today's voting was, of course, strictly in line with caucus action, James McMillan receiving the vote of every Republican legislator, while the one Democratic senator and nine Democratic representatives cast their votes for Thomas E. Barkworth of Jackson. Early in the session it was announced that the Democrats would cast their votes for Daniel J. Campau, chairman of the Democratic state central committee, but the minority concluded in caucus that inasmuch as Mr. Campau had been honored with this complimentary vote on several previous occasions, it would be proper to pass the honor on this year. In taking this action the minority were careful to resolve that no disrespect to Mr. Campau was intended.

Election of Senator.

The election of senator will not be an accomplished fact until high noon tomorrow, for the reason that the statute provides that on the day succeeding the taking of the vote separately in the two houses, the house and senate shall meet in joint convention at 12 o'clock, noon, and again cast their ballots. Tomorrow, therefore, Senator McMillan will have had this distinguished honor conferred upon him for the third successive time.

As might be expected, in view of the numerous sessions of the last legislature at which this important question was considered, the subject of equal taxation is uppermost apparently in the minds of the members of the present legislature. It is evident that there will be no lack of ideas and bills, several of the latter having been already introduced, while others have been noticed for introduction. Senator Atwood has introduced and had printed for the use of the committee on taxation a bill creating a commission to assess the property of railroad companies only for taxation on an ad valorem basis. In the house, Representative Chandler has had a similar course taken with a bill, which is practically a copy of the Oren bill, excepting that it creates a separate board of assessors instead of putting that duty on the tax commission, and which includes the property of railroad, telephone, telegraph and express companies. Senat[illegible]me has another bill on this su[illegible], as has Representative Dingley, and it is understood that still others are in the course of preparation.

Much Pruning and Trimming.

It would be unprofitable to enter into a discussion of any of these measures at this time, for the reason that there will be a great deal of pruning and trimming before legislative sentiment settles down sufficiently to enable one to give with any degree of certainty the details of the bill that is likely to become a law. There is every reason to believe, however, that when the legislature finally squares itself away and does business in this connection, the expectations of the people of the state will be fully met.

Representative Dingley is the author of two joint resolutions proposing important amendments to the constitution. One of these has for its object the doing away with direct taxation for state purposes, the idea being to raise all money required by the state by specific taxation, leaving all direct taxation to be levied by the municipalities for their own needs. Governor Bliss called attention in his inaugural message, it will be remembered, to the desirability of devising some means to increase the receipts of the general fund of the state, arguing that under the present arrangement increased specific taxation bids fair to make the primary school fund very top-heavy. In offering this proposition to amend the constitution, Representative Dingley is carrying out the instructions of his constituents, the Kalamazoo board of supervisors, who, at a recent meeting, adopted a resolution urging that this change be made.

Salary of $1,000 a Term.

The other Dingley measure to which reference was made proposes a constitutional amendment relative to the pay of members of the legislature. It is proposed to substitute for the present per diem system a term's salary of $1,000, with no extra compensation for legislators from the upper peninsula. Years ago when railroad facilities were not what they are now, upper peninsula legislators found it necessary to remain at the seat of government practically from one end of the session to the other, and, because of this extra expense which was not entailed upon the other legislators, a bill was passed at every session allowing the former an extra $2 per day. It has become more and more difficult to pass this bill of late years, the measure furnishing more opportunities for vote dodging than almost any other that comes up during the session. A bill making this provision was introduced last week, and an effort was made to pass it under a suspension of the rules, but an objection sent it to the judiciary committee, where it still remains.

The people of the state will doubtless be pleased to learn that there is quite a discussion on the part of the legislature to economize in various lines. The number of employes in each house has been reduced somewhat, not a great deal to be sure, but enough to make the situation appear hopeful. Aside from this the house, by a unanimous vote, decided that members of committees visiting state institutions in the course of their official duties shall be allowed merely their "actual and necessary expenses" as the law provides, instead of a mileage allowance as in previous years. It is figured that this will result in a very material saving. Inasmuch as the resolution by which this saving was effected was offered by Chairman Dingley of the ways and means committee, which committee will have the scrutinizing of all bills carrying appropriations, it is believed that last week's action is but a part of the programme of economy to be adhered to throughout the session.

Pay for Publishing Laws.

Ex-Auditor General Dix made recommendations in the line of economy in his retiring report, his idea being that the constitutional provision allowing each newspaper that publishes the general laws enacted at any special session of the legislature shall be entitled to $15 be abrogated. Of course, it is only when very little legislation is enacted at a special session that the newspapers can afford to avail themselves of this provision, and on such occasions the sum total of allowances is about $7,000. The several special sessions during the past two years has entailed quite an expenditure in this connection, and doubtless prompted the ex-auditor's recommendation. General Dix also suggested that the allowance to newspapers for publishing the annual tax sales be reduced, although he did not say what the figure should be.

A craze for state normal schools seems to have taken possession of various communities. Up to a very few years ago Michigan boasted only one of this class of institutions. Now it has three, and the unanimous testimony of the acknowledged educational authorities of the state is that the state has need for several more, if it hopes to bring the qualifications of its teachers up to the standard of neighboring states.

For Additional Normal Schools.

Already three bills providing for additional normal schools have been noticed, and the session is very young. Senator Kelly would have one established at Muskegon in connection with the manual training school, the belief being that the state could acquire without cost the valuable property occupied by the latter. Representative Sharpe, of Iosco, has a bill to establish a school in northeastern Michigan, and Representative Lugers, of Holland, has one providing for a school in western Michigan, preferably, of course, at Holland. It would not be surprising if another normal school were provided for this winter, but that will doubtless be the limit even if all bills do not fail.

James Russell, of Marquette, whose term as commissioner of mineral statistics expired with the year, has subjected himself to considerable criticism by taking the position in his annual report that this office has outlived its usefulness and should be abolished. His critics insist that the recommendation would have more weight if made at the commencement of his term of office instead of at its close.

Two years ago the legislature made an appropriation for a Michigan exhibit at the Pan-American exposition to be held in Buffalo this year, but in the closing days of the session when Governor Pingree was swinging his veto ax with great frequency and accuracy, he put the measure to sleep.

Exhibit Can Be Prepared.

Notwithstanding the short time remaining before the time for the opening of the exposition, it is believed that a creditable exhibit can be prepared, and Representative Chandler has introduced a bill making an appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose. This was more money than the introducer of the bill thought would be needed, and with his consent the committee in charge of the measure has cut the amount to $50,000.

At the time Governor Pingree was exercising the pardon authority a couple of weeks ago, much talk was indulged in relative to restricting the powers of the governor in this respect, some persons even advocating the extreme step of amending the constitution so as to deprive the executive of this power altogether and placing it in the hands of a board. Representative Burns, of Grand Rapids, who served some time as a member of the present board, has introduced a bill on this subject which he hopes to push to a successful issue. The measure abolished the present board of four members and a secretary who is not a member, and substitutes therefor a board of three members, the secretary to be a member of the board. One of the members is to be a practicing physician and another a lawyer in active practice. For the compensation of $5 per day for not to exceed six months in any two years, the Burns bill provides an annual salary of $2,500 for each member of the board and requires that the latter shall devote their entire time to the duties of the office.

Puts a Curb on the Executive.

While the present constitution places the power to grant clemency solely in the hands of the governor, the right is reserved to the legislature to stipulate the manner in which application for pardon shall be made. The bill takes advantage of this constitutional provision to put a curb on the executive. It provides that all applications for either pardon, parole or commutation of sentence shall be made in writing to the pardon board, which alone shall have authority to recommend clemency. The governor cannot, according to the provisions of this bill, grant clemency to any convict who has not made such written application to the board. This is designed to prevent the wholesale granting of pardons on the spur of the moment. In case of life prisoners unanimous action of the board is made necessary for recommendation. It should not be understood that any attempt is sought to provide that the governor cannot pardon unless the board recommends, for that would be unconstitutional. It is simply a step in the direction of preventing the chief executive from making a dash any day he choses and liberating a job lot of convicts who have never even thought of applying for release. It surrounds the executive with all the restrictions possible under the constitution, some think that it even treads somewhat upon that ancient and honored document.

PATERSON TRAGEDY

McAllister, Campbell and Death on Trial for Murder.

KERR'S TRIAL TO BE SEPARATE

The Testimony of the Witnesses Examined Yesterday—The Hack Driver Tells the Story of the Brutal Crime on the Lonely Rock Road.

Paterson, N. J., Jan. 15.—The trial of McAllister, Campbell and Death, charged with the murder of Jennie Bosschieter began Monday, a jury being secured in an hour. Kerr, another of the accused parties will have a separate trial.

In his opening address, Prosecutor Emley said he would ask for a verdict of murder in the first degree, and quoted the law to the effect that "any person who should kill another in the perpetration of a rape shall be guilty of murder in the first degree."

Mrs. Nina Bosschieter, Jennie's stepmother, was the first witness. Mrs. Bosschieter said Jennie left the house about 8 p. m. on the 18th of October and said she was going to a drug store in the neighborhood. At 10 p. m. Jennie had not returned and Mrs. Bosschieter went to bed. She got up at about 5:30 in the morning to prepare breakfast. She did not know then that Jennie had not been home during the night. She was subsequently notified of the finding of the body and she saw the body when it was brought home that evening.

On cross-examination by Dr. Dunn, Mrs. Bosschieter said that Jennie sometimes remained out late at night, but she always thought that the girl stopped with some friend. Mrs. Bosschieter admitted that on some of those occasions when Jennie remained out late she had to knock on the door or window to arouse some of the family so that she could get in.

Susie Bosschieter, who followed her mother, testified that Jennie, on the evening of Oct. 18 said she intended to call on Mrs. Klatts. On cross-examination the witness said Jennie occasionally remained away from home at night, but she was always at the house of a woman friend and generally at Mrs. Klatts'.

Cornelius Garry, a teamster, said he found the body of the murdered girl lying on her back with her feet toward the river. Her clothing was somewhat disordered, and her hat was lying about four feet from the body.

Leonard Kammerling testified that he knew Jennie Bosschieter well. He saw her on Main street at Kent's drug store at 9:30 o'clock on the night of Oct. 18. She was talking to Campbell, one of the defendants. Another young man whom he did not know was standing near her.

Jennie said good evening to the witness and he returned her salutation. He said he got a cigar and then stood on the curbstone and watched Jennie and Campbell for a while. He could not hear their conversation. When he first saw them, however, he heard Jennie say "no, no," in a snappish manner. She appeared rather pale.

Nellie Devries saw Campbell on the sidewalk at Saal's saloon, and Jennie was with him. They entered the side door and another young man joined them. Bertha Dyson, Nellie's companion, told the same story.

Christopher Saal testified that he owned the saloon at Bridge and River streets. He remembered the night of Oct. 18. McAlister was in his place that night. Campbell was with him. McAlister ordered drinks and carried them into the rear room.

Later on he went into the rear room. McAlister, Campbell, Death and a girl were seated at a table. McAlister ordered a bottle of champagne. Witness carried it and glasses into the room. He then had to go to the cellar, and when he emerged the party was gone.

"Did you see any of the party the next day?"

"Yes, Mr. McAlister the next morning said to me, that girl is dead.' I said 'I have nothing to do with it.' McAlister said I would not give them away if anyone came around. He said even if a big reward were offered I should stick by him."

Hackman Schulthorpe, in whose vehicle the four men and the girl rode, said on the night of Oct. 18 a young man came to him and engaged his victoria. The man was George Kerr. Kerr told him a party of four would use the hack and ordered him to drive to Saal's saloon. He said McAlister came out of the saloon and told him to turn around. In a little while the four men, McAlister, Campbell, Death and Kerr came out carrying a woman. The woman was placed in the rear seat. The witness was told to drive out along the Goeffle road to Lee's place. Lee's place was closed so they pulled up into the Rock road. They went along this to a point beyond the railroad tracks. He was then ordered to stop. The place where he stopped was a clear one with no bushes. All four men left the carriage. They lifted the girl out about as they lifted her in. He had thrown the blanket on his horse. One of the men took it off and it was carried into the darkness where the woman had been borne.

Schulthorpe, in a rough voice, that could be heard with fearful effect in the little court room, told the most horrible part of his story. Kerr only was exempt from participation in the assault which the hack driver described. With brutal roughness, without the slightest attempt to conceal facts under nice words, in the language of the street, Schulthorpe told the incidents of that stop on Rock road.

Then the girl was carried back to the hack and placed on the rear seat. At that time the girl's head was hanging far back. The men in the hack were alarmed and a little past the schoolhouse on the Rock road they stopped again and the men tried to revive the girl.

The witness then told of the drive back to Paterson, of the examination by the physician, which ended with the remark, "Boys, I can do nothing for you." The men ordered him to drive back across the river. The witness then told of the disposal of the body where it was found. He drove the four men back. McAlister and Kerr left the hack first, and the former handed him $10 and said: "You know what to do, keep your mouth shut."

"Did you see any evidence of life in the girl after you started from the saloon," asked Prosecutor Emely.

"Yes, she rose up, kind of straightened up and then fell back again."

Judge Hoffman then began the cross-examination, which had not been concluded when court adjourned.

CONDITIONS IMPROVING.

Affairs in the Philippines Are Growing More Hopeful.

Manila, Jan. 15.—Optimism is taking the place of conservatism among the military men here, the cause being the numerous surrenders, captures and destruction of insurgent camps, combined with the increasing understanding of the Americans' intentions among the natives, the propagation of the principles of the federal party and the knowledge that they are approved by the United States Philippine commission and the military authorities, and that the carrying out of the terms of Gen. MacArthur's proclamation, classing all who do things inimical to the interests of the army as rebels and traitors, are having pointed effect, with the offering of local autonomy and protection and showing the certainty of the punishment of those who remain rebellious.

The cutting of communications and supplies has destroyed the remnants of the insurgent's organization. The inhabitants of the towns are disinclined to any longer contribute secretly to a hopeless cause, and it is generally believed that the pacification of a sufficiently number of provinces to inaugurate a general scheme of provincial government will be accomplished before many more weeks have elapsed. The most pronounced resistance at present is in remote southern Luzon, northern Mindanao, Cebu and Bohol.

The first batch of 30 leading insurrectionists who have been ordered to be deported to the island of Guam sail on the transport Rosecrans today.

Gen. Wheaton reports that 53 armed Bolomen have surrendered at Benguet.

Sixteen of Geronimo's band were captured Sunday night and brought to Montalban.

An Indication of Good-Will.

Washington, Jan. 15.—Gen. Williams, representative of the Cramps, has returned from Constantinople. When asked Monday as to the reports that the Turkish government had ordered a warship built in an American yard, and that this would liquidate the outstanding claims against Turkey, Mr. Williams said he was not at liberty to make any statement, as he had not had an opportunity to confer with the Messrs. Cramp. While it can be stated positively that Turkey has given the order for a warship to be built at American yards, it is not yet definitely understood as to the bearing of this action upon the American claims. It appears to be accepted, however, as an indication of the good will of the Turkish government and the disposition to secure a final adjustment.

Want Stock Tax Changed.

Washington, Jan. 15.—Former Speaker Thos. B. Reed made an argument before the senate committee on finance Monday for the amendment of the war revenue reduction act so as to reduce the tax on stocks. He contended for a change in the basis of operation, saying that the tax should be upon the selling value of stocks rather than upon the par value, as provided in the existing law. Mr. Reed contended that this tax operates as a great hardship upon stock selling far below par. He said there were dealers whose stamp payments were equal to their incomes. This Mr. Reed argued amounted practically to confiscation, and was unjust.

Situation Improved.

Washington, Jan. 15.—The navy department has been informed of the arrival of the Philadelphia at Panama Monday. Press reports have it that a serious revolutionary movement in the vicinity of the Colombian capital is afoot, but official reports from United States Consul Gudger, state that the situation has improved much of late. How long the presence of the Philadelphia will be necessary is not known and will depend upon what aspect affairs in that quarter assume.

In Charge of Navy.

Washington, Jan. 15.—Secretary Root said Monday all the Filipino insurgent leaders deported to Guam would be placed in the custody of the naval forces in control of that island, who would be responsible for their control and safe keeping. He said he had no idea of the number of such prisoners, but did not believe it was large enough to necessitate any increase in the naval force for guard or other duty in connection with their captivity.

Got Nine Months.

Berlin, Jan. 15.—The case against Harriet Plathe and [illegible] Arndt, which grew from the [illegible]berg case, was tried Monday. The defendants were charged with falsely accusing State's Attorney Isenbiel of favoring Sternberg and with being bribed to do so. Plathe was acquitted in consequence of insufficient evidence. Arndt was sentenced to nine months' in prisonment.

Believed to Have Confessed.

Leavenworth, Kas., Jan. 15.—Fred Alexander, the negro who assaulted Miss Eva Roth in this city last Saturday, was Monday formally charged with the murder of Pearl Forbes, the factory girl who was assaulted and killed in this city Nov. 6. It is believed that Alexander has confessed the crime.

President's Congratulations.

Berlin, Jan. 15.—The United States ambassador, Mr. Andrew D. White, will present President McKinley's congratulations to Emperor William on the occasion of the celebration of the bi-centenary of the Prussian kingdom, together with other diplomats, Jan. 18.

No Officer to Blame.

Dunkirk, N. Y., Jan. 15.—Coroner Blood's verdict in the Fredonia normal school fire, made public Monday, finds that no officers of the school were criminally to blame for the deaths of the six students and the janitor.

Blamed the Planets.

In the middle of the fourteenth century in Paris a new ordinance enjoining the cleansing of the streets and the shutting up of swine was carefully neglected, as usual, and a terrible plague was the consequence. The faculty of medicine, called upon for a remedy by the king, sent to inform him after long discussion that the plague was the result of a hostile conjunction of the planets Mars and Jupiter.

Senator Goodell Wants the Detroit House of Correction Investigated—The Governor Sends the Names of More Appointees to Senate.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 15.—At a meeting of the senate Monday night Senator Goodell, of Wayne, offered a resolution that the president appoint a committee of three to investigate the Detroit house of correction, condition of inmates, sanitary condition of buildings and grounds, etc. The resolution was adopted. The committee will be appointed later.

Senator Loomis, of Grand Rapids, introduced a bill requiring all insurance written in this state to be written through a resident Michigan agent, who shall receive full compensation. The bill seeks to prohibit "overhead" writing and to prevent outside insurance people from having business done here and getting a good share of the commission that should go to resident agents.

Gov. Bliss' new batch of appointments were referred to the committee on executive business, of which Senator Atwood is chairman.

Senator Moore noticed a bill to repeal the act creating the St. Clair jury commissioners.

Senator Doherty noticed a bill to make the president and village attorney of Harrisville, Alcona county, ex-officio members of the board of supervisors.

Dwight B. Hinckly, of Hastings, was appointed clerk of the rules committee.

The house met for 15 minutes. In the absence of a minister of the gospel, Reading Clerk Smith read the scripture exercise.

Rep. Gordon, of Marquette, noticed a bill to regulate the rates to be charged by telegraph companies in Michigan. He would have 25 cents charged in the state for the first ten words, and 10 cents for every ten words thereafter. Mr. Gordon also noticed a bill to require express companies to exchange packages so that they will always be sent by the nearest route, thus avoiding delays as much as possible, and prorate the charges.

Rep. Gordon noticed another bill for an additional building to cost about $25,000 at the Northern state normal school at Marquette.

Rep. Burns, of Grand Rapids, noticed a primary election bill doing away with the political convention at Grand Rapids. Its features are about th esame as those of Rep. Colby's bill to do away with conventions in Detroit. Before going into the booth to vote for a candidate for nomination to any office, the voter must select one or another of the political party tickets.

Rep. Ames, of Detroit, noticed a bill to require each county in the state to pay not to exceed $3.50 a day to every person ordered isolated by a health officer because of contagious disease, this compensation to be paid during quarantine period while the party confined cannot work.

Rep. Weter, of Macomb, noticed a bill to have two new double steel elevators built in the capitol building.

Rep. Bland, of Detroit, noticed a bill to invalidate assignments of mortgages of indebtedness.

Rep. Ames, of Detroit, is preparing a bill to require that packages containing spirituous liquors, manufactured or sold in this state, shall be labeled with the ingredients of each properly and fully denominated thereon. The bill will provide that where a patron of a saloon or bar room is suspicious of the beer or whisky or other liquor set before him he may compel the bartender or proprietor to show him the label with table of contents of the keg or barrel or other package from which the liquor was drawn. Such a law, Rep. Ames considers, would conduce to public health. He would have the state dairy and food commissioner execute it.

More Nominations.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 15.—Gov. Bliss Monday night sent to the state senate another batch of appointments.

Tte most generally interesting are those of Russell R. Pealer, of Three Rivers, ex-Michigan department G. A. R. commander, and ex-Circuit Judge Wm. R. Kendrick, of Saginaw, as members of the "advisory board in the matter of pardons." They succeed George F. Beck, of Detroit, and Harson D. Smith, of Cassopolis.

Ex-Senator Jas. K. Flood, one of the "immortals" in the last state senate, is appointed by Gov. Bliss member of the railroad and street crossing board.

Of the 30 appointments, Wayne county gets two plums—Postmaster Dickinson and Geo. J. Vinton, of Detroit, being named as members of the state fish commission.

Senator Atwood, of Caro, has landed his fellow townsman, Timothy C. Dunn, as member of the board of control of the Jackson state prison, whose superintendent, Mr. Chamberlain, Pingree tried ineffectually to have displaced by "Lieut. Bill" Judson, of Washtenaw. Atwood doesn't want Judson reappointed state oil inspector. If Tax Commissioner Freeman is reappointed, Judson will very likely not be reappointed oil inspector, as both he and Freeman come from Washtenaw county.

Will Soon be Completed.

Copenhagen, Jan. 15.—It is understood here that the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States will soon be completed. It is stated that the minister of finance, H. E. Horring, is concluding satisfactory arrangements. The desire here is to sign the convention before March 4.

HAVE A HARD TIME

The Promoters of the Jeffries-Ruhlin Fight in Trouble.

CINCINNATI STILL PREPARING

Several Governors Have Refused to Allow it in Case Ohio Will Not Have It—Memphis Appears to be Quite Willing, However.

Cincinnati, Jan. 15.—The promoters of the Jeffries-Ruhlin contest here Feb. 15 had their inning Monday. Ruhlin appeared at a matinee and again at night and was not molested. The Evangelical alliance did not hold their meeting of rejoicing and the opposition to the fight, for the first time in more than a week, was not heard from. Meantime the Saengerfest Athletic association proceeded with its work at the hall and let some more contracts. The most important development in favor of the association was the signing of a petition by more than 100 members of the Chamber of Commerce during the noon session in favor of having the fight here as scheduled. Business men are nearly all with the Saengerfest club for the fight. Unless the political leaders now give an ultimatum against the athletic club the fight will be held here.

Kansas City, Jan. 15.—A letter has been received from Eddie Cooke, Brady's representative in Cincinnati, in which Cooke states that he has forwarded the Kansas City request for a proposition to Brady at New York, and that an official communication from Brady might be expected within a day or two. Cooke says:

"In the event of the match falling through here, I think Kansas City's convention hall an ideal place for the contest.

Topeka, Kas., Jan. 15.—Fifteen minutes after Gov. Stanley was sworn in to office for his second term Monday, a telegraph messenger placed in his hands the following telegram from a Cincinnati newspaper:

"Please wire us whether you would allow Jeffries and Ruhlin to fight a limited number of rounds in your state in case the fight is prevented here."

To this the governor wrote the following reply:

"There will be no prize fight in Kansas while I am governor.

Kansas City, Jan. 15.—The ministers of the Christian church in Kansas City, at their regular weekly meeting Monday, adopted a strong protest against holding the Jeffries-Ruhlin fight in this city, negotiations for which have been in progress since doubt that the contest will take place at Cincinnati has arisen. The protest was addressed to the directors of Convention hall.

Arms and The Woman

"Certainly not, but sometimes your joy is irritating. You are sad all day; then some strangers come, and you are all smiles. Your smiles do not come in my direction as often as I should like."

"Well, then, look at me," said Gretchen.

The smile would have dazzled an anchorite, let alone a man who didn't know whether he loved her for certain, but who was willing to give odds that he did.

"Gretchen!" I cried, starting toward her.

But, with a low laugh, she disappeared behind the door. Gretchen was a woman. As a man must have his tobacco, so must a woman have her coquetry. It was rather unfair of Gretchen after what I had promised. It was like getting one in a cage and then offering sweetmeats at a safe distance. It now became a question of analysis. So I went to the river and sat down in the grass. A gentle wind was stirring the leaves, and the sunbeams, filtering through the boughs, fell upon the ground in golden snowflakes. What was Gretchen to me that I should grow jealous of her smiles? The night before I could have sworn that I loved her; now I was not so sure. A week ago all the sunshine in the world had come from Phyllis' face; now a shadow had come between. Oh, I knew the symptoms! They were not new to me. They had visited me some five years back and had clung to me with the tenacity of a creditor to a man with expectations. When a man arrives at that point where he wants the society of one woman all to himself, the matter assumes serious proportions. And a man likes to fall in love with one woman and continue to love her all his days. It is more romantic. It annoys him to face the fact that he is about to fall in love with another. In my case I felt that there was some extenuation. Gretchen looked like Phyllis. When I saw Gretchen in the garden and then went to my room and gazed upon the likeness of Phyllis, I was much like the bachelor Heine tells about—I doddered.

The red squirrel in the branches above me looked wise. He was wondering how long before the green burs would parch and give him their brown chestnuts. I was contemplating a metaphysical bur. I wanted to remain true to Phyllis, though there wasn't any sense in my doing so. Had Gretchen resembled any one but Phyllis, I never should have been in such a predicament. I should have gone away the day after my arrival. Here I was going into my second week. My assistant in London was probably worrying, having heard nothing from me during that time. As matters stood it was evident that I could not be true either to Phyllis or Gretchen since I did not know positively which I loved. I knew that I loved one. So much was gained. I wanted to throw up a coin, heads for Phyllis, tails for Gretchen, but I couldn't bring myself to gamble on the matter.

A steamer came along then, puffing importantly, sending a wash almost at my feet. I followed it with my eye till it became lost around the bend. Over there was Austria and beyond the orient, a new world to me.

"If I could see them together!" I mused aloud.

The squirrel cocked his head to one side as if to ask, "Austria and Turkey?"

"No," said I, looking around for another stick, "Phyllis and Gretchen. If I could see them together, you know, I could tell positively then which I love. As it is, I'm in doubt. Do you understand?"

The squirrel ran out to the end of the limb and sat down. It was an act of deliberation.

"Well, why don't you answer?"

I was startled to my feet by the laughter which followed my question. A few yards behind me stood Gretchen.

"Can't you find a better confidant?" she asked.

"Yes, but she will not be my confidant," said I. I wondered how much she had heard of the one sided dialogue. "Will you answer the question I just put to that squirrel of yours?"

"And what was the question?" with innocence not feigned.

"Perhaps it was, Why should Gretchen not revoke the promise to which she holds me?"

"You should know, herr," said Gretchen gently.

"But I do not. I only know that a man is human and that a beautiful woman was made to be loved." Everything seemed solved now that Gretchen stood at my side. But she turned as if to go.

"Gretchen," I called. "Do not go. Forgive me. If only you understood!"

"Perhaps I do understand," she replied with a gentleness new to me. "Do you remember why I asked you to stay?"

"Yes; I was to be your friend."

"This time it is for me to ask whether I go or stay."

"Stay, Gretchen!" But I was a hypocrite when I said it.

"I knew that you would say that," simply.

"Gretchen, sit down and I'll tell you the story of my life, as they say on the stage." I knocked the dead ash from my pipe and stuffed the bowl with fresh weed. I lit it and blew a cloud of smoke into the air. "Do you see that, Gretchen?"

"Yes, herr," sitting down, the space of a yard between us.

"It is pretty, very, but see how the wind carries it about! As it leaves my throat it looks like a tangible substance. Reach for it, and it is gone. That cloud of smoke is my history."

"It disappears," said Gretchen.

"And so shall I at the appointed time. That cloud of smoke was a fortune. I reached for it, and there was nothing but the air in my hand. It was a woman's love. For five years I watched it curl and waver. In it I saw many castles, and the castles were fair indeed. I strove to grasp this love; smoke, smoke. Smoke is nothing given a color. Thus it is with our dreams. If only we might not wake!"

Gretchen's eyes were following the course of the languid river.

"Once there was a woman I thought I loved, but she would have none of it. She said that the love I gave her was not complete because she did not return it. She brought forth the subject of affinities and ventured to say that some day I might meet mine. I scoffed inwardly. I have now found what she said to be true. The love I gave her was the bud. The rose—Gretchen," said I, rising, "I love you. I am not a hypocrite. I cannot parade my regard for you under the flimsy guise of friendship."

"Go and give the rose to her to whom you gave the bud," said Gretchen. The half smile struck me as disdainful. "You are a strange wooer."

"I am an honest one." I began plucking at the bark of the tree. "No. I shall let the rose wither and die on the stem. I shall leave tomorrow, Gretchen. I shall feel as Adam did when he went forth from Eden. Whatever your place in this world is, it is far above mine. I am, in truth, a penniless adventurer. The gulf between us cannot be bridged."

"No," said Gretchen, the smile leaving her lips, "the gulf cannot be bridged. You are a penniless adventurer, and I am a fugitive from—the law, the king or what you will. You are a man. Man forgets. You have just illustrated the fact. His memory and his promises are like the smoke—they fade away but soon. I shall be sorry to have you go, but it is best so."

"Do you love any one else?"

"I do not. I love no one in the sense you mean. It was not written that I should love any man."

"Gretchen, who are you, and what have you done?"

"What have I done? Nothing! Who am I? Nobody!"

"Is that the only answer you can give?"

"It is the only answer I will give."

There was something in Gretchen's face which awed me. It was power and resolution, two things man seldom sees in a woman's face.

"Supposing, Gretchen, that I should take you in my arms and kiss you?" I was growing reckless because I felt awed, which seems rather a remarkable statement. "I know you only as a barmaid. Why not?"

She never moved to go away. There was no alarm in her eyes, though they narrowed.

"You would never forgive yourself, would you?"

I thought for a moment. "No, Gretchen, I should never forgive myself. But I know that if I ask you to let me kiss your hand before I go you will grant so small a favor."

"There," and her hand stretched toward me. "And what will your kiss mean?"

"That I love you, but also respect you, and that I shall go."

"I am sorry."

It was dismal packing. I swore a good deal softly. Gretchen was not in the dining room when I came down to supper. It was just as well. I wanted to be cool and collected when I made my final adieu. After supper I lit my pipe (I shall be buried with it) and went for a jaunt up the road. There was a train at 6 the next morning. I would leave on that. Why hadn't I taken Gretchen in my arms and kissed her? It would have been something to remember in the days to come. I was a man and stronger; she would have been powerless. Perhaps it was the color of her eyes.

I had not gone up the highway more than 100 yards when I saw the lonely figure of a man tramping indirectly toward me and directly toward the inn. Even in the dusk of twilight there was something familiar about that stride. Presently the man lifted up his voice in song. The "second lead," as they say back of the scenes, was about to appear before the audience.

Evidently Hillars had found "Jericho" distasteful and had returned to protest.

CHAPTER XI.

"Hello there!" he hailed, seeing but not recognizing me. "Have you seen any cavalry pass this way?"

"No; I have not," I answered in English.

"Eh? What's that?" not quite believing it was English he had heard.

"I said that no cavalry has passed this way since this afternoon. Are they looking for you, you jailbird in perspective?"

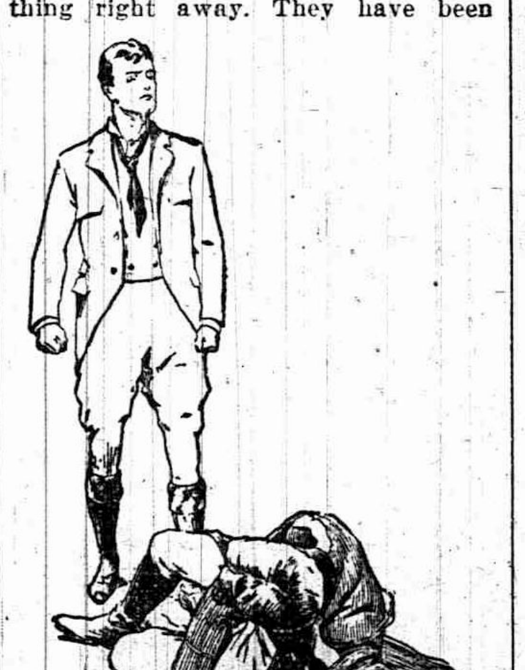
He was near enough now. "Well, I be dashed!" he cried. "What the devil are you doing here of all places?"

"I was looking for you," said I, locking my arm in his.

"Everybody has been making that their occupation since I left Austria," cursing lowly. "I never saw such people."

"What have you been doing this time?"

"Nothing, but I want to do something right away. They have been



I took the lieutenant by the collar and flung him into the corner.

hounding me all over the kingdom. What have I done? Nothing, absolutely nothing. It makes me hot under the collar. Do they think to find the Princess Hildegarde by following me around? I'd give as much as they to find her."

"So you haven't seen anything of her?"

"Not a sign. I came here first, but not a soul was at the castle. Nobody knows where she is. I came here this time to throw them off the track, but I failed. I had a close shave this noon. I'll light out tomorrow. It isn't safe in these parts. It would be of no use to tell them that I do not know where the princess is. They have connected me with her as they connect one link of a chain to another. You can kill a German, but you can't convince him. How long have you been here?"

I did not reply at once. "About ten days."

"Ten days!" he echoed. "What on earth has kept you in this ruin that long?"

"Rest," said I glibly. "But I am going away tomorrow. We'll go together. They will not know what to do with two of us."

"Yes; they will. You will be taken for my accomplice. Hark! What's that?" holding his hand to his ear. "Horses. Come, I'm not going to take any risk."

So we made a run for the inn. In the twilight haze we could see two horsemen coming along the highway at a brisk gallop.

"By the Lord Harry," Hillars cried excitedly, "the very men I have been dodging all day! Hurry! Can you put me somewhere for the time being? The garret; anywhere."

"Come on. There's a place in the garret where they'll never find you." I got him up stairs unseen. If no one but I knew him to be at the inn, so much the better.

"Oh, say! This'll smother me," said Dan as I pushed him into the little room.

"They'll put you in a smaller place," I said.

"Hang it all, Jack! I'd rather have it out with them."

"They have their pistols and sabers."

"That's so. In that case discretion is the better part of valor, and they wouldn't appreciate any coup on my side. Come back and let me out as soon as they go."

I descended into the barroom and found the two officers interrogating the innkeeper. They were the same fellows who had visited the inn earlier in the day. Gretchen was at her place behind the bar. She was paler than usual.

"Ah," said the innkeeper, turning to me, "am I not right in saying that you are the only guest at the inn and that no American has been here?"

I did not understand his motive, for he knew that I was an American.

"It is perfectly true," said I, "that I am your only guest."

"Ah, the Englishman!" said the lieutenant suspiciously. "We are looking for a person of the name of Hillars whom we are charged to arrest. Do you know anything about him?"

"It is not probable," said I nonchalantly.

I glanced at Gretchen. I could fathom nothing there.

"Well," snarled the lieutenant, "I suppose you will not object to my seeing your passports?"

"Not in the least," said I. But I felt a shock. The word "American" was written after the nationality clause in my passports. I was in for some excitement on my own account. If I returned from my rooms saying that I could not find my passports, they would undoubtedly hold me till the same were produced. "I'll go and bring them for you," said I. I wanted some time in which to mature a plan of action if action became necessary.

There was rather a sad expression in Gretchen's eyes. She understood to a fuller extent than I what was likely to follow when it was found that I had misrepresented myself. I cursed the folly which had led me to say that I was English, and I swore at the innkeeper for meddling. As I left the room I smiled at Gretchen, but she did not answer it. Perhaps I was gone five minutes. In that time I made up my mind to show the passports and trust to luck for the rest. When I came back, Gretchen had engrossed their attention. They took no notice of me. I have never understood how it came about, but all at once the lieutenant bent forward and kissed Gretchen on the cheek. She started back with a cry, then looked at me. That swift glance told me what to do. I took the lieutenant by the collar and flung him into the corner. The surprise on his face was not to be equaled. Then as he rose to his feet the veins in his neck swelled with rage.

"I'll pay you for that, you meddling beef eater!" he roared.

"Don't mention it," said I, with an assumption of blandness which I did not feel. "That was simply gratuitous. It is a sample of what I shall do to you if you do not immediately ask this lady's pardon for the gross insult you have just offered her."

"Insult! To kiss a common barmaid an insult!" he yelled, now purpling. "Why—why—what is this woman to you—this tavern wench, this"—

"Be careful," I warned. Gretchen was calmly wiping her cheek, but her eyes were like polished emeralds.

"You have come here, I believe," said I, "to see if my passports were proper."

"Curse you and your passports! Are you a gentleman?"

"Would you recognize one if you saw him?" I laughed.

"Can you fight?"

"Certainly," said I, thinking of the weapons nature in her kindness had given to me.

"Good! Otto, have the horses brought around. We will cut for the barracks and get the colonel's weapons, the rapiers." The word "rapier" sent an icy chill up my spine. A duel!

"The devil!" said I under my breath. I knew less about fencing than I did about aerial navigation, which was precious little. The fact that Gretchen was now smiling aggravated the situation. I could not help the shudder. Why, the fellow would make a sieve out of me!

"Will you look at my passports now?" I asked. "You may not have the opportunity again."

"Your passports from now on will be void," was the retort. "But I shall be pleased to give you a passport to the devil. I shall kill you," complacently.

"Think of my family," said I, a strange humor taking possession of me.

"You should have thought of your family before you struck me that blow," he replied.

My laughter was genuine. Even Gretchen smuggled a smile. The lieutenant had taken my remark in all seriousness. "You will not run away?" he asked.

"I shall probably be obliged to run away tomorrow," said I smoothly. "I should not be able to account for your presence here. But I shall await your return from the barracks, never fear." All this was mere bravado. Honestly, I shrunk within my clothes and shivered in my shoes. But I had an unfailing nerve. Some call it bluff.

Gretchen had been whispering to the innkeeper. When he moved from her side, she was smiling.

"What the deuce is she smiling about?" I wondered. "Does the woman take me for a modern D'Artagnan?"

"Innkeeper," said the lieutenant, "if this man is not here when I return I'll take satisfaction out of your hide."

The innkeeper shrugged. "I have never heard of an Englishman running away."

"And I have seen many a German do that," I put in. "How am I to know that your going to the barracks is not a ruse?"

PLENTY OF MONEY.

The State Has Over $2,000,000 In Its Strong Box.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 15.—In his report for the last fiscal year, Auditor-General Dix gives the receipts of the state treasury during that time, as $6,321,736.06 and the disbursements as $5,222,234.41, leaving a surplus of $1,099,501.65. This, added to the amount on hand at the beginning of the year, gives a balance now in the treasury of $2,501,557.53. In addition to this there was refunded during the year the sum of $53,516.01.

Of the receipts the sum of $754,248.41 forms no part of the regular revenue. The next disbursements after the deduction of the sum refunded, are $5,168,718.46. The non-revenue disbursements were $739,742.36, and the revenue disbursements $4,428,976.14.

The Spanish war bonded indebtedness is $500,000, the interest upon which amounts to $16,043.50 annually. During the year $614,517.04 was paid for the support of the state insane.

The total receipts from the several state institutions amounted to $3,977,912.74, and the disbursements for the same, $2,916,235.24.

The total expenses of the judiciary were $159,688.98. The state banking department cost $16,741.62. Extra clerks made an additional expense of $198,470.88, $111,867.78 of which is due to the collection of delinquent state taxes.

The board of state auditors was allowed $302,787.04.

Pro-Boer Mass Meeting.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Jan. 15.—Boer Delegate Wessels, who addressed a large pro-Boer mass meeting here Monday night, talked about the Boer invasion of Cape Colony. "To understand the situation," he said, "it is necessary to go back before the war. I went to American Consul Stowe at Cape Town to make arrangements to have President McKinley move for a court of arbitration, but Sir Alfred Laurier told me 'It is too late to talk of arbitration,' and soon after made the significant statement that the 'South African element must be crushed.' It is evident that the British aimed not only to annex our republics, but to go farther. They have driven us out of our country, and we have as much right in Cape Colony as anywhere. Our supporters there include many English.

Dewet has been in touch with this movement since September. We will win, if not this year, next year. We will never submit to the British flag. The British market is already affected, and we hope Wall street will be also, until commerce joins with the common people in demanding the end of the war."

Deaths in the State.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 15.—There were 2,675 deaths reported to the secretary of state for December, corresponding to a death rate of 13.1 per 1,000 of population. This number is 214 more than the number reported for December, 1899.

There were 402 deaths of infants under 1 year of age, 175 deaths of children aged from 1 to 4 years, both inclusive, and 240 deaths of persons aged 65 years and over.

Important causes of deaths were as follows: Pulmonary tuberculosis, 141; other forms tuberculosis, 37; typhoid fever, 116; diphtheria and croup, 58; scarlet fever, 36; measles, 1; whooping cough, 5; pneumonia, 300; diarrheal diseases of infants, 35; meningitis, 21; influenza, 30; cancer, 127; accidents and violence, 147; smallpox, 2.

As compared with the preceding month, there was a decrease in the number of deaths from typhoid fever, diphtheria, croup and measles, and an increase in the number of deaths reported from pneumonia.

Conditions Much Improved.

Washington, Jan. 15.—Henry C. Barter, of Detroit, national secretary of the Longshoremen's union, testified before the industrial commission Monday upon labor on the docks and harbors of the great lakes. He said that the agreements between the International Longshoremen's union and the dock managers of the various ports along the lakes had produced a marked improvement in the condition of the workmen and the relations existing between employer and employe. This agreement, he said, had eliminated the intemperance and brutality which were largely in evidence a few years ago and established mutual confidence between employer and employe.

Violently Insane.

Standish, Mich., Jan. 15.—Joseph F. Morley, who is violently insane, was brought here Monday by Sheriff Pomeroy, and lodged in jail. He lives in Mason township, this county, and attempted to cut his mother's throat Sunday. It took six strong men to bind him. He will be sent to Traverse City asylum.

Suspects Arrested.

Cumberland, Md., Jan. 15.—Two of the men believed to have been implicated in the attempted bank robbery here early Saturday morning were arrested at Keyser, W. Va., Monday. They are Alonzo Evy, of Keyser, and a man giving the name of Thos. Moore. A third man named McNamar eluded capture. Moore was wounded in the hand and the wound corresponds to a blood mark in the East End hotel bar door, to which the burglars paid a visit after the failure of the bank breaking endeavor.

Extraordinary Temerity.

"I told that Boston girl I didn't like Emerson."

"Was she displeased?"

"Displeased? She got nearly as mad as she did when I said that beans could be baked without salt pork."—Chicago Record.

Tried Five Doctors.

Mrs. Frances L. Sales, of Missouri Valley, Ia., writes: "I had severe kidney trouble for years, had tried five doctors without benefit, but three bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure cured me." J. J. Orr.

Advice is cheap, which is probably the reason why so much of it is thrown away.

Save doctor's bills by giving Foley's Honey and Tar to infants and children in time to prevent pneumonia or croup, which are fatal to so many thousands of babies. J. J. Orr.

Why is it that people who are worth their weight in gold are often so very poor?

"It was almost a miracle Burdock Blood Bitters cured me of a terrible breaking out all over the body. I am very grateful." Miss Julia Filbridge, West Cornwell, Conn.

Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1 00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think.

Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it's independent in the best sense of the word.

It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West

ARE YOUR EYES BAD?

Dr. M. F. STEIN,

THE FAMOUS SPECIALIST

Will cure you. Many people become all but totally blind and at an early age, simply because they pay no attention to their eyes. They notice a dimness and a soreness after reading awhile and when a miserable headache comes to them they ascribe it to any causebut the ight one and take a pill. The real cause, but the misery, is that their yes are weak and every time they read or write means an added strain and the eyes made still weaker. Consultation with a specialis means the ending of all misery and the saving to you of your eye-sight. Dr. Stein is reliable. You do not see him once and then look for him again in vain. He makes regular visits to your city. Comean d see him and have your eyes scientifically tested free of charge, that you may have comfort when you read and write.

The Economy Store.

The Holidays are over but we do not intend calling the busy time over at the Economy.

We find our China and Crockery department in such shape that we have decided to make this store headquarters the coming week for economical buyers.

Such as Broken Sets of China at prices which will startle the most conservative.

Our stock of Lamps is by no means small, and at the new prices placed upon them they will command your immediate attention. Do not forget that we also have a large line of Stationary at your own price. A very fortunate purchase of granite and tinware places us in a position to furnish you with the same at from 35 to 50 per cent below the prevailing prices.

Do not fail to inspect these prices for they are meant for busy trading.

B. J. PULVER & Co.

E. J. Smith, in Detroit Tribune: "Newbold Satterthwaite, of Tecumseh, lighted a cannon cracker under the coat tails of the nineteenth century to assist it in getting an accelerated move on. The cracker was slower than the century and Satterthwaite, reasoning that the fuse had failed, fondled the thing absently with his mind on something else. When he recovered from his reverie it was found that Satterthwaite's hand was damaged, the buttons blown from his coat and several letters were missing from his name."

While other towns are boasting about possessing horseless vehicles, it might be stated that Petersburg keeps up with the procession and also has a horseless wagon. It is owned by Master Harold Bray and can go at a speed of about 20 miles an hour. The motive power used is neither steam, gasoline nor electricity, and costs only about five cents per day to operate. It is a success in every respect.—Petersburg Sun.

Petersburg isn't in it. C. E. Williamson, of this place, has delivered his groceries in a horseless delivery wagon for several years. His is an auto-mule-Bill.

The Michigan crop report for January considers the condition of the wheat crop. It is shown that while 210 correspondents report that wheat suffered last month, 283 report that the crop suffered no injury. The ground was not covered with snow in any part of the lower peninsula where wheat is raised.

If the law relative to the protection from holes where the ice has been cut, was looked after a little more it would save a good many of our skaters from a cold bath. The old law required only lanterns by night as danger signals but the new law says that barricades shall be erected. They shall consist of cross bars upon which a pole, rope, chain, or rail shall be laid at a height not less than three feet above the ice and shall be placed not less than ten feet from the edge of the opening.

O. G. Hunt, who came here about a year ago from Angola, Ind., and bought the Economy Store of S. E. Parrish, has worked up a fine business. When Mr. Hunt first came here he kept quite a large grocery stock, but increase in business compelled him to sell out this stock in order to make room for his novelty goods. During the holidays he employed four clerks who were kept busy from morning until night waiting on customers, and the amount of goods sold is shown from the decrease in stock. Mr. Hunt is among Tecumseh's most energetic business men.

Vern Barrett was in Coldwater over Sunday.

Delos LeBaron was up from Toledo Saturday.

H. H. Chappin was over from Adrian yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Green are spending the day with friends at Clark's Lake.

Orson B. Curtis, statistical clerk in the custom house at Detroit and well known in local G. A. R. circles, died Friday at his home in that city. Mr. Curtis enlisted in the 24th Michigan infantry in 1862 and served with great credit in the battle of Fredericksburg where his arm was shot off by a rebel shell. Previous to the war he was a student of the University of Michigan, and after his return he came to Tecumseh and was superintendent of the public schools of this place. Mr. Curtis was also a newspaper man and writer, having written a book entitled "History of the Iron Brigade."

The Eastern Stars Visit Dundee.

The Order of the Eastern Star were invited by "Ruth Chapter" to Dundee last evening and about eighty accepted the invitation. They were most royally entertained. After exemplifying the work, they listened to a finely rendered program, consisting of duets, solos and recitations. Then they marched to the opera house where a most sumptuous banquet was spread. The tables were beautifully decorated and guests nicely cared for. The merriment and good time did not cease with the feast, but continued all the way home. Warm cars, good lights and plenty of room all helped the luminous Stars to shine far into the night.

RAILROAD NEWS.

The Lake Shore has commenced work on a new line between Plymouth and Doughton Junction in northeastern Ohio, which will give them the shortest line and highest grades of any line between Pittsburg and Lake Erie. They have recently completed the double track between Ashtabula and Plymouth and between Doughton Junction and Youngstown, so that, with the new line in operation, they will have double tracks all the way from Pittsburg to Lake Erie.—Adrian Times.

John Lawson, colored, who lives in Adrian, suffered a severe accident Friday. He was employed on a construction gang on the Lima Northern and was helping to unload some cars when in some manner his foot became caught between the drawbar and the car. The member was badly pinched but no bones broken. Lawson lost his right leg several years ago.

Fred Ladd, of Adrian, who was on his way home from Saginaw, was on the Pere Marquette that was wrecked the other night near Plymouth.

This morning the C. N. train was thrown off the track at Britton, delaying the trains to and from Detroit several hours.

Mrs. Smith and son Waller went to Deshler, Ohio, Saturday to visit Mr. Smith who is an engineer on the B. & O.

Jos. Bany, of Findlay, O., is the guest of her cousin, Will Mathias, and wife.

Mrs. Will Lockard, and daughter returned today to their home in Detroit.

Boss Bridge Carpenter McFarlan resigned his position Saturday night.

Alvin Titus is absent from his work at the shops on account of illness.

Mr. Fuller was in Adrian with his children over Sunday.

C. R. Wilson was in Detroit yesterday.

—The U. S. Civil Service examinations will be held at several places in each state during March and April to secure young men and women for various government positions. Last year upwards of 8000 such appointments were made without political influence. No fees are charged. Information about the places and dates of examinations can be had free by writing the Columbian Correspondence College, Washington, D. C.

Ex-President Harrison Tries Golf.

When Edward Bok, editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, heard that Ex-President Harrison was practicing golf on a links near Indianapolis, he took a new ball out of his golf-bag and expressed it to the General, with the words, "Drive this." In a few days came back a dispatch:

"Thanks. I have. But doesn't a bottle of liniment go with each ball? Benjamin Harrison."

Blown to Atoms.

The old idea that the body sometimes needs a powerful, drastic, purgative pill has been exploded; for Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are perfectly harmless, gently stimulate liver and bowels to expel poisonous matter, cleanse the system and absolutely cure Constipation and Sick Headache. Only 25c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

New service, Queen & Crescent, only 23 hours Cincinnati to Shreveport. Elegant service of Pullman sleepers, cafe and observation cars.

ROUND ABOUT US.

Brooklyn expects to have a telephone exchange in the near future.

The Petersburg schools are doing their best to establish a lecture course in their village.

F. D. Lancaster, who has been in the clothing business in Clinton for the past 14 years is going to retire.

The most modern method of amputating farmer's arm is by steam power and a device known as a corn shredder.—Ex.

The Monroe Democrat gave a very fine account of the Custer Massacre and a supplement including a portrait of Gen. Custer.

Rats got into the hyacinth bulbs at Ellis' greenhouse recently, and when their depredations were discovered they had eaten and carried off about $30 worth of the bulbs.

Stephen Tinkell, of Adrian, has been taken to a Detroit hospital to have his left hand amputated. Some time ago a wart grew on his hand and about a year ago developed into a cancer.

The Ann Arbor Register says that it looks as if nearly everybody in Ann Arbor had had vaccine scraped into them—at least it will not be safe to slap a person on the left arm for the next couple of weeks.

The crop of salted cucumbers at the pickle factory, harvested the past season, has been shipped to Detroit. It required 28 tank cars to make the shipment, the freight thereon amounting to $1,036.—Dundee Reporter.

The team of a Tecumseh meat wagon ran away a few days ago, and clashed with an oil wagon. Thus do the different industries go hand in hand, all that was lacking being a match to make light of the meat wagon.—Hudson Post.

Mrs. Henry Zimmerman, of Adrian, ran a sliver in the index finger of her right hand several weeks ago while putting a stick of wood into the stove. Blood poisoning has set in so that the entire finger has had to be removed.

The marriage of Miss Louise Lechner and Hon. Wm. W. Wedemeyer, of Ann Arbor, took place last week at the home of the bride in Kalamazoo. Hon. Wedemeyer is well known about the county and in Tecumseh, being a prominent Republican.

Friday evening when three Morenci ladies were returning from a revival meeting they were attacked by a vicious cow, which was being driven to the stock yards. One of the ladies was knocked down and her collar bone broken but the others escaped without harm.

Forty dollars in gold, says the Hillsdale Democrat, was found beneath an old shop that was being moved over in Somerset the other day; and for a time there was danger that every old rookery in that part of the country would be pulled up by the roots and moved somewhere.

Willie Waterman, a 15 year old lad living near Brooklyn, is another victim of the corn husker. While trying to clean it, his hand was caught in the machinery and before it could be extricated was badly mangled. The thumb and third finger have been amputated.

Miss Waters, of Tecumseh, is no longer partial to celluloid combs. She was sitting near the fire a few evenings ago when a spark flew out and set fire to one of them, and as a result the hair and one side of her head was burned. This should be a warning to Tecumseh girls, that it's dangerous to get near the sparks.—Hudson Post.

A young man with an old horse has been traveling about the vicinity of Brooklyn, stopping at each farmhouse and asking for an egg. He generally received from one to two eggs at each place and as eggs are 20c a dozen he made a fair day's wages. The people up there say, however, if the fellow comes up their way again, he will get eggs that won't sell for 20 cents.

A Michigan man was fined $15 for biting a piece out of the arm of a Toledo policeman. It is bad enough to have such an awful appetite without being compelled to pay for it. There must be something wrong with a man who will try to eat a Toledo policeman when nearly every saloon in town has a free lunch. But since Pingree grew into fame one can't tell what to expect of a Michigan man.—Ex.

What terrible thing has happened in Addison? Just listen to the Courier. Rumors are always afloat like contagious germs, and like contagious germ, too, in the diseased or weak parts of our structure they find lodgment and consequently growth, and before we know it we are hurling headlong over the rapids of gossipism and to the dread falls of enmity and hatred. Idle rumor, cured by silence, has spared many a reputation and healed many a breaking heart.

DAMAGING TESTIMONY.

Some Brought Out in the Trial of Capt. Herlihy.

New York, Jan. 15.—Chief of Police Devery was the first witness Monday in the trial of Capt. Herlihy, who is charged with neglect of duty and unbecoming conduct. Ex-Judge Olcott for the prosecution asked: "Did Capt. Herlihy, while in command of the 12th precinct, report to you that he had good grounds for believing any house, room or premises within his precinct was occupied for lewd or obscene purposes and ask you to authorize in writing the members of the force to enter the same and to arrest all persons there found offending against the law?"

Mr. Grant, Capt. Herlihy's attorney, interposed a long objection, based on the ground that there was no law or rule of the department which made it imperative on the captain to make such a report to the chief or his deputies, and that there was no evidence that the captain had not done all he could to rid his precinct of disorderly characters of every description. Mr. York overruled all of the objections. The chief started to give a long answer and Mr. Olcott interrupted him, saying: "Say yes or no."

"I never heard of any captain making such a request," answered the chief.

The witness was turned over to Mr. Grant, whose first question was:

"Mr. Chief, how long have you been connected with the police department?"

"Twenty-three years."

"And in your whole experience have you ever known of a warrant of that kind to be applied for?"

"I never did."

Rev. Albert Heyhoe testified that Capt. Herlihy called upon him last October and took him to task about an interview that had appeared as coming from him in an evening paper shortly before. He said he had at this time complained to Capt. Herlihy about a house near the Camp Memorial chapel, of which he is the pastor. Capt. Herlihy said he would see to it that the house was closed. It remained open and Mr. Heyhoe afterwards wrote a letter of complaint to Capt. Herlihy. In response an officer had called on Mr. Heyhoe, and told him that if he would speak the word "the whole business would be stopped."

This testimony is considered damaging to the defense, as it establishes one of the points the prosecution is striving to prove, the power of Capt. Herlihy to break the reign of vice in his precinct had he chosen to do so. At the conclusion of Mr. Heyhoe's testimony the trial adjourned until next Wednesday afternoon.

UNCONSCIOUS FROM GAS.

A Woman Claiming to be the Widow of Sam T. Jack.

New York, Jan. 15.—A woman who had registered as Mrs. Sam T. Jack was found unconscious from gas in the South hotel, East 11th street, Monday. She was taken to Bellevue hospital where the physicians said she had a chance of recovery.

Great mystery surrounds the woman's identity. Shortly after her arrival at the hotel a man who knows the widow of the late Sam T. Jack very well called at the hospital to identify the dying woman. He declared positively that she was not Mrs. Sam T. Jack and that the latter was in Chicago managing her theater there. The woman is about 35 years old. She had in her possession cards bearing these addresses: Mrs. Post Haven, No. 346 East 36th street, New York; Miss J. D. Haynes, 514 Cottage Grove avenue, and No. 3432 Washington boulevard, Chicago. There was also another card with the address of 3450 Fort avenue, Chicago. In the pocketbook of the woman were found $1.87, two 2-cent stamps and four pawn tickets. The pawn tickets were in the name of "Steiner."

Frightful Accident.

Jamestown, N. Y., Jan. 15.—A frightful accident occurred at the Jamestown water works pumping station Monday afternoon. Nine men were at work on a scaffolding over a deep reservoir, when the framework gave way and they fell 30 feet into the reservoir, in which was only shallow water. Nearly every one had broken bones and bruises, and four being fatally injured it is feared.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

Paris—According to the Gaulois, M. Pichon, French minister to China, will shortly be recalled from Pekin at his own request, owing to ill health.

Madrid—The police have ransacked the residence of the Marquis of Berralbo, a representative of Don Carlos, failing, however, to secure the documents they were seeking.

Liverpool—Pierce, Watts & Co., timber merchants, one of the oldest firms in the business, have been declared bankrupt. Their liabilities are estimated at £80,000 and their assets at £40,000.

Berlin—In the Reichstag Monday Ferr Roesecke, agrarian, said the fact of the meat inspection bill not having, unfortunately, been put in force, could easily be traced to certain "irresponsible influences."

Paris—M. Chas. Hermite, the mathematician, is dead. He was born in 1822, was a member of the institute of science and of other learned institutions. The deceased, who was a commander of the Legion of Honor, was the author of many works on mathematics.

London—Lady O'Hagen has been elected to preside over the Burnley school board as a progressive, by a majority of one, against the church party. A socialist gave the deciding vote. She immediately took the chair, though a lively legal controversy has been going on as to whether a woman is eligible.

A Destructive Hurricane.

Port Louis, Island of Maritius, Jan. 15.—A hurricane swept over this island Jan. 12, and during the storm a number of vessels were driven ashore. Among these was the French steamer Irawaddy (from Marseilles Dec. 10, for Mauritius), which had a hole stove in her bottom, and the British steamer Muttra (from Calcutta Nov. 30 for Colombo and Mauritius). The others were smaller craft. The damage inland was not serious.

Rarity of a Dread of Death.

Sir Lyon Playfair, who represented the University of Edinburgh for 17 years, naturally came in contact with the most eminent men of England, and he put this question to most of them. "Did you in your extensive practice ever know a patient who was afraid to die?" With two exceptions, it seems, they answered "No." One of these exceptions was Sir Benjamin Brodie, who said he had seen one case. The other was Sir Robert Christison, who had seen one case, that of a girl of bad character who had a sudden accident.—Health.

The Discovery of Iron.

Teacher—Sammy, can you tell me where and how iron was first discovered?

Sammy—I can't tell you just where, sir, but I think I know how it was discovered.

Teacher—Well, Sammy, what is your information on that point?

Sammy—I heard pa say the other day that they smelt it.

The Bishop Knew Him.

A story current about the bishop of London represents him as a bored listener to a windy speech. Turning to a fellow sufferer, he said, "Do you know that speaker?"

"No," was the answer.

"I do," said the bishop. "He speaks under many aliases, but his name is Thomas Rot."—London News.

WHAT'S IN A NAME.

Many Times Nothing—Sometimes a Fund of Knowledge.

It's a good old saying and a true one too, "Know all men by their works." The public have been imposed upon so many times by unscrupulous claims made for selfish means of profit, they look for something more substantial; they ask for deeds. The little conqueror has earned the reputation made in Michigan and no impostor can steal it. From north to south, from east to west, in every city, town and hamlet in the state, people stand ready to testify to merit. Gratitude for comfort brought to thousands of homes brings emphatic rejoicings and words of praise, the like of which has not been equaled in modern times. Is it a wonder the name Doan is a familiar one in every household? Is it surprising the public appreciate Doan's Kidney Pills and will not be led astray by the ingenious efforts of would-be competitors? A Detroit citizen tells here why the name of Doan is dear to him:

Mr. R. N. Elliott, of 143 High street, Detroit, says: "My knowledge of Doan's Kidney Pills dates back to five years ago. I was tortured with kidney troubles and inflammatory rheumatism. The doctor prescribed the pills for me which have since become so justly famous. Their use quickly eliminated the uric acid from my system and with its departure came the cure of the rheumatism and the end of the kidney troubles. It took but a few boxes to accomplish this end and I feel that I owe Dr. Doan an everlasting debt of gratitude for prescribing such a valuable remedy. I have taken great pleasure in recommending this medicine to a number of my friends. I always keep a box of these pills on hand so that, should I take a severe cold and feel that it is settling on my kidneys, a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills relieves all apprehension."

MRS MADALENE R. WIER

Was born Aug 17, 1823, in Brookfield, Mass, and died at her home in this village, Saturday, January 12, 1901

Her maiden name was Madalene Russell. She was married to George Wier Sept. 16, 1847. She came to Lansing, Mich, in 1869 and later to Clinton where Mr. Wier was employed in the woolen mill until his health failed him and he died a number of years ago Since, Mrs. Wier and her faithful daughter Bertha have been companions, living in the old homestead on Chicago street.

Mrs. Wier has been in feeble health for several years and, after a fall from her chair last week, she seemed to fail rapidly and Saturday evening the Angel of Death came and quietly laid the sufferer at rest.

Four children are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother: Gilbert, of West Bay City; Mrs. Emmet Linden, of Bridgewater, Mrs. Jeanette Spencer, who is in the West; and Miss Bertha, of this place.

The funeral was held at the home Monday at 2 o'clock, Rev E. M. Moore officiating. Interment at Riverside cemetery.

Getting Thin

is all right, if you are too fat; and all wrong, if too thin already.

Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult a doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: overwork and under-digestion.

Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it—true—but, by it, you can There's a limit, however; you'll pay for it.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the readiest cure for "can't eat," unless it comes of your doing no work—you can't long be well and strong, without some sort of activity.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other. If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

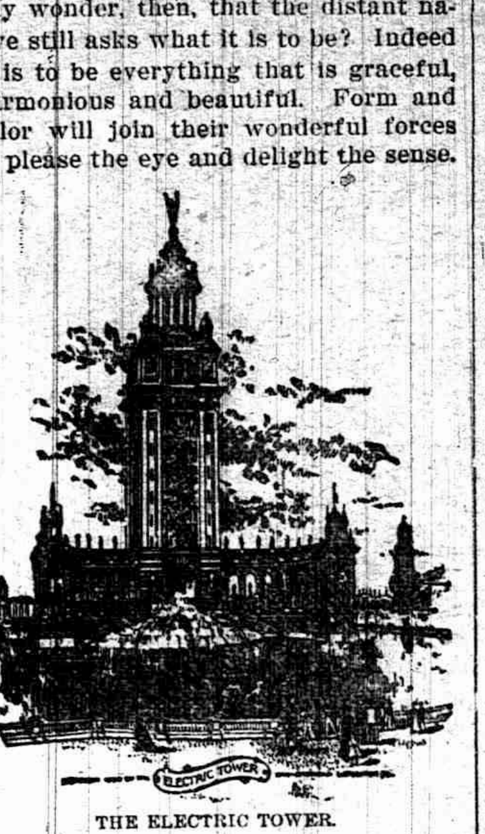
BRILLIANT IN COLORS

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION WILL GLOW WITH WONDERFUL RADIANCE.

Electrical Illuminations and Other Features In Which Buffalo's Fair Will Excel All Former Enterprises of This Description.

Even the Buffalonian cannot comprehend the exquisite character of the great Exposition he is building. Is it any wonder, then, that the distant native still asks what it is to be? Indeed it is to be everything that is graceful, harmonious and beautiful. Form and color will join their wonderful forces to please the eye and delight the sense.



THE ELECTRIC TOWER.

"Magnificent" is not too strong a word to express the character of the completed work. He is a man of dull imagination who, now visiting the grounds, cannot picture in some degree the comeliness and stateliness of the finished enterprise.

The Pan-American Exposition is intended to be in every way an artistic triumph. From the very beginning it has been the purpose of those who have been intrusted with the making of this Exposition to present to the world the most artistic creation ever conceived for a like purpose. The arrangement of the buildings, the style of architecture, the decorative work, the embellishment of the grounds and the electrical illumination are some of the features that will stand out prominently in the Exposition picture. There are 33 acres in the courts around which stand the principal Exposition buildings. While the whole Exposition plot of 350 acres will be as beautiful as nature, with the artistic help of man, can make it, the several courts will be the particular center for formal decorative work. The courts are arranged in the form of a cross, the north and south courts bearing the names of Court of Fountains, Plaza, Fore Court and Approach and being nearly 3,000 feet in extreme length. The Transverse Court is known as the Esplanade and is 1,700 feet from east to west. Two subordinate courts open into the Esplanade, known as the Court of Lilies and Court of Cypresses. The combined area of these courts is approximately two and a half times the area of the courts at the World's Columbian Exposition and for this reason gives a far greater opportunity for artistic treatment.

It has been said of this Exposition that it would outrival all former enterprises in a number of important features. The first of these is in the court settings just described. The second is in the plastic ornamentation of buildings and the elaborate use of sculpture for decorative purposes. As a third may be mentioned the hydraulic and fountain effects. These are of a most elaborate character and are to be seen in all of the courts. A fourth feature is the horticultural decorative work. Sunken gardens and formal floral ornamentation will be employed at every point where the bright colors of foliage and flowers will add to the beauty of the scene. As a fifth feature may be noted the color decoration of the buildings. This is a very elaborate undertaking, the result of mature study upon the part of the best mural painters of the world. Considered a very difficult, if not embarrassing, problem at first, it has been worked out by patient study until results very pleasing and happy have been achieved. A sixth point of excellence will be the electrical illumination of all the courts. Then the brilliance of the gardens and the radiant beauty of the buildings will be heightened by the glow of 200,000 electric lamps arranged with artistic conception and illuminating with fantastic hues the numberless fountains and pools and turning the scene into one of unrivaled splendor.

The style of architecture is what is described as a free adaptation of the Spanish renaissance. It is particularly appropriate for the purposes of an Exposition since it gives opportunity for the employment of many architectural features of a festive character. Thus the visitor may see many lofty towers and lanterns, graceful domes and minarets, airy pavilions and other decorative work that will produce a sky line free from any suggestions of monotony or severity.

The Electric Tower, standing in a broad pool between the Court of Fountains and the Plaza, is to be the centerpiece for electrical illumination. This tower is 80 feet square and 375 feet high, with circular wings curving from the east and west sides to the southward and forming a semicircular space in which are to be many beautiful fountain features. From the southern face of the Tower a cascade will gush from a niche, 70 feet from the ground, and fall upon a terraced base. At night this cascade and the fountains and pools will be illuminated in fantastic colors. Floating lights upon all the pools will form an interesting feature of the general scheme of illumination.

Some 30 or more American sculptors of renown are at work upon the decorative groups which are to have a place at this Exposition. These are to be nearly all original productions under the master direction of Karl Bitter. It will be the most elaborate use of decorative sculpture ever undertaken at an Exposition, there being more than 125 groups. These will adorn the fountains, bridges, entrances to buildings and other salient points.

Besides the pools and fountains, within the several courts will be a grand and stately canal which will surround the entire group of buildings. In the southern reaches of this canal are artificial bodies of water known as the Mirror Lakes, from which lagoons extend in several directions, thickly set with aquatic plants of rare species.

In addition to the sunken gardens and other floral features of the courts will be the horticultural exhibits in the southern part of the grounds. These will consist of several acres of beds of the finest productions of the best nurseries and greenhouses of the western world. The competition for supremacy will be very keen and the lover of flowers will have a rare opportunity to make a comparison of the merits of the productions of competing growers.

MARK BENNITT.

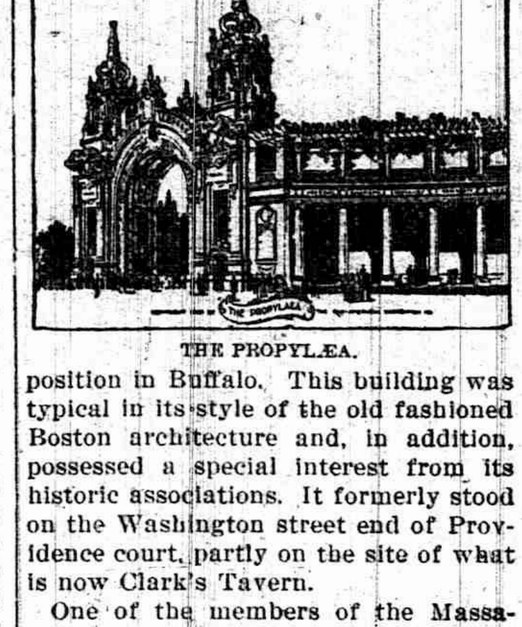
BAY STATE AT BUFFALO.

Fine Historical Exhibit Will Be Made by Massachusetts.

The historic commonwealth of Massachusetts will have a most interesting exhibit at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo.

It is being collected through the co-operation of various societies, such as the Sons of the Revolution, Daughters of the Revolution, Sons of the American Revolution, Daughters of the American Revolution, the Society of the War of 1812 and kindred organizations. The chairman of the Massachusetts Pan-American commission, Mr. Walter Gilman Page, is a leading spirit in these societies and is anxious that the wealth of historic material possessed by Massachusetts should be adequately represented at the Pan-American Exposition.

The matter of a building has not yet been definitely decided, but it is probable that the old Providence House, which was one of the historic buildings of Boston, will be reproduced as a home for Massachusetts exhibits at the Exposition in Buffalo. This building was typical in its style of the old fashioned Boston architecture and, in addition, possessed a special interest from its historic associations. It formerly stood on the Washington street end of Providence court, partly on the site of what is now Clark's Tavern.



THE PROPYLÆA.

One of the members of the Massachusetts commission to the Paris Exposition, who recently returned from the French fair, secured there about 450 valuable exhibits, which will be transferred to the Pan-American at Buffalo. Ex-Mayor Frederick Fosdick of Fitchburg and City Treasurer E. T. Tifft of Springfield returned recently from a visit of a few days in Buffalo very enthusiastic over the prospects for the success of the Exposition and are anxious to have the good old Bay State well represented there.

Buildings Going Up.

The magnificent buildings which are to house the exhibits of the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo next summer are fast progressing toward completion and will soon be ready for the collections which are on the way from all quarters of the American continent. The scene upon the grounds of the Exposition, in the northern part of the city, including part of the famous Delaware Park, is a busy one, and every day sees some definite progress made in the construction work. Conditions have been very favorable to rapid work, and the Pan-American Exposition bids fair to break the record in the matter of swift construction of Exposition buildings and their entire completion before the time arrives to open the gates to the general public.

Connecticut at Pan-American.

The state of Connecticut is getting together a large display that will represent her farm, fruit and dairy interests at the Pan-American Exposition next year. Benjamin H. Lee of Hartford is the commissioner in charge of the work, and he is assisted by a committee composed of N. S. Platt, chairman, New Haven; Professor C. S. Phelps, secretary, agricultural station, Storrs; J. A. Dubon, Poquonock; Professor A. G. Gulley, Agricultural college, Storrs; E. H. Jenkins, agricultural station, New Haven; J. B. Noble, dairy commissioner, Hartford; B. C. Patterson, master of state grange, Torrington.

The Government's Building.

The Government buildings at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo are being built by Rasmussen & Strehlow of Omaha. The contract calls for a group of three buildings connected by curved arcades. The main structure is to be 400 by 130 feet, with a dome 250 feet high, and the smaller buildings each 150 feet square. All departments of the government will make up to date exhibits, which the members of the Government board are now busy collecting and getting into shape.

Value of Telephone Numbers.

"Telephone numbers have an actual money value," said an officer of the American Bell Telephone company. "The assertion has a strange sound, but if you think for a moment of the advantage a business house derives from having its location well known the thing seems only natural.

"In the course of time people's minds begin to associate a firm with its telephone number, and if when they start to call up an old friend they find him masquerading under a new number it is as much of a shock as if they had called at a house with which they were in the habit of doing business and found it had moved away. It all comes under the legal head of 'good will,' a very elusive commodity, but one which has its market value.

"So much is this fact appreciated by some of our old patrons that they are willing to pay heavy mileage if they move away from the neighborhood of their exchange in order to retain their old telephone address. Many important houses have followed the northward trend of business in the last few years, and there are several cases of a firm's office address being in the up town district, while its telephone number remains so and so Cortlandt or Broad. The firm's line to the exchange may be several miles long."—New York Mail and Express.

Spinsters.

Unmarried women are called spinsters, or spinning women, because it was a maxim among our forefathers that a young woman should not marry until she had spun enough linen to furnish her house. All unmarried, old or young, were then called spinsters, a name still retained in all legal documents.

Trying It on the Building.

Markleigh—Your office seems badly mussed up. Have you no janitor?

Barkleigh—We have one, but since he became a faith curist he has been giving the office "absent treatment."—Baltimore American.

A story first heard at a mother's knee is seldom forgotten, and the same may be said of other things received at a mother's knee, which will readily recur to the reader.—Chicago News.

TOLD IN HIS DREAMS.

PECULIAR VISION OF A RANCHER ON A NEW MEXICO PRAIRIE.

His Partner Appeared to Him During Sleep and Informed Him of the Fearful Fate That He Had Met at the Hands of the Indians.

"No, I can't say I go much on superstition and that sort of thing, but I'd like some of these wise chaps to explain a little incident that happened to me down in the Pecos valley, in New Mexico, a few years ago."

Grizzled Bob Morrow, veteran cowboy, ranchman, globe trotter and philosopher, took another pull at his cigar as he sat comfortably in his seat in the hotel lobby. A thoughtful look came over his face, and his companions at the table awaited in silence his further utterances. After a pause Bob continued:

"We were 'sign' riding, Lee Wells and I. Know what 'sign' riding is? An imaginary line is drawn on the prairie. Two men, one stationed at each end, ride toward each other at a given hour. Any cattle that have crossed that line are rounded up and driven back. The idea is to keep the cattle together as much as possible during the winter.

"Our line was about ten miles long. Lee and I used to meet half way every day, and if no cattle had crossed we'd sit down and smoke and chat a bit. Sometimes we'd visit each other's 'dobe and generally chum together as far as men can when ten miles apart. We each had six horses, the pick of the herd, and mighty proud we were, too, of 'em.

"'Bout that time the Indians were rather troublesome. They generally went in small bands, and occasionally the loss of a bunch of horses would be reported by ranchmen thereabout. Lee and I didn't fear 'em much. They carried only bows and arrows, and if it came to a chase our horses could easily outrun theirs. The greatest danger we had to fear was the loss of our horses.

"Lee and I had talked frequently about the Indians, and both were of the same mind—if attacked, kill the horses rather than let the marauding thieves get 'em.

"I left Lee at the half way mark, as usual, one day, got back to my 'dobe and after eating dinner turned in. I hadn't been asleep very long when I was awakened by a sort of feeling that there was somebody in the room. I groped under the pillow for my gun, turning over as I did so, and there in the doorway, stood Lee Wells. The feathered shafts of six arrows were sticking from his breast, and his face in the moonlight looked drawn and ghastly. There was a smile of satisfaction on his face, though, as he said quietly:

"'Well, they got me, Bob, but they didn't get the horses.'

"I was out of bed in an instant. The minute my feet touched the floor Lee vanished. The door was shut and locked just as I left it when I went to bed. Pondering over the realistic 'dream,' or whatever it was, I turned in again, but it was a long time before I got to sleep again.

"A second time I was awakened by the same vision. There stood Lee in the doorway, and again he pointed to the arrow shafts and said:

"'They got me, Bob, but they didn't get the horses.'

"No more sleep for me that night. I looked around the 'dobe, thinking perhaps Lee was playing me a trick. I went out to the corral. The horses were all right, and there were no signs of anybody having been around. I sat up and smoked and thought a whole lot until daybreak; then I mounted and set off for the half way mark. Lee wasn't there, and there was no sign of his coming, so I rode on to his 'dobe.

"There, at the gate of the corral, was Lee's body, with six arrows in his chest, just as I had seen them in the vision. Inside the corral lay the bodies of his horses, all killed with bullets.

"It was plain to me that, seeing the Indians coming, Lee had deliberately killed the horses before turning his attention to the thieves. Judging from the hoof prints, there must have been about 20 Indians in the bunch. Lee must have damaged them some before he fell, judging from the cartridge shells lying around. They took his Winchester, of course, and looted the 'dobe. They didn't get much for their trouble, though.

"But what I want to know is was that a dream or did Lee Wells really appear before me in some sort of form?"

His hearers could not explain.—New York Mail and Express.

Good For Preserves.

Last spring a feminine botanist blossom laden came upon a masculine naturalist who was just in the act of cramming a wriggling something into a tomato can in which something else wriggled.

"To preserve them," he said, feeling that an explanation was in order.

"Do they make good preserves?" asked the sister scientist.—Youth's Companion.

Awkward Compliment.

There is such a thing as being too persistently complimentary. A candid and well meaning professor who had witnessed the performance of a little play in a private house in which his hostess had taken the leading part met the lady as she came from behind the curtain.

"Madam," he said, rushing up to her, "you played excellently. That part fits you to perfection."

"Oh, no, professor," said the lady modestly. "A young and pretty woman is needed for that part."

"But, madam," persisted the professor, "you have positively proved the contrary!"—Pearson's Weekly.

In the Dumps.

There was once upon a time an Egyptian king, so it is said, who built a pyramid and died of melancholy. His name was Dumops, yet there are probably few persons who know that they are perpetuating the memory of his tragic history when they remark that they are "in the dumps."

SOME MEN GROW ON TREES.

This Is the Belief of an Indian and Some Other Tribes.

The Sioux Indians still share with the old Aryan and Semitic tribes in the belief that there are trees that bring forth human beings and others that bear various portions of the human body, and in the fourteenth century an Italian traveler, on arriving at Malabar, was told by the natives that the country abounded with a tree that bore men and women. The latter were attached to the limbs by the nether extremities and were full formed when the wind blew, but when the wind died out they soon withered. These specimens of humanity reached the length or height of three feet.

In the first book of the Mahadharata mention is made of forms of dwarfs that were to be found on a large fig tree. The Arabs are still strong in the belief that somewhere in the southern ocean there is a tree that bears a nut that resembles the face of a man and when in its fullness the mouth opens and gives voice to the cry: "Wak! Wak!" The Chinese reverse the order of things and, instead of believing that the trees give birth to men, claim that in the beginning the herbs and grass sprang from the hair of the human family. They have preserved the tradition, too, that somewhere within the borders of the beautiful Flowery Kingdom there is a wonderful lake by whose margin grew trees whose leaves developed into birds and also that, if a jar be broken on the waters, birds of the most brilliant plumage will at once arise from the pieces and fly off.

In central India there is a tribe called Khatties that claim to have their origin from a stick of wood. When the five sons of Pandu, the heroes whose exploits are told in the Mahadharata, had become simple tenders of sheep, Karna, their illegitimate brother, wishing to deprive them of their last resource, prayed to be gods to assist him. He struck the earth with his staff, which opened, and from it sprang a man who was called Khat, meaning begotten of wood, and by this name have his descendants ever since been known.—St. Louis Republic.

LINCOLN WAS GRACIOUS.

Invited the Theater Usher to a Seat In His Box.

"I never was much of a Republican," said a gentleman who was born and reared in Washington, "but I loved Abraham Lincoln. He was one of the most lovable men I ever met. I was an usher at the National theater, and about two weeks before the assassination John Wilkes Booth and Susan Denin were playing there. Mrs. Lincoln having expressed a desire to see them in 'Romeo and Juliet,' I was sent to the president's house to say that a box had been reserved. In the evening, Mrs. Lincoln being indisposed, the president and little Tad Lincoln came, and I showed them to the box.

"As Tad entered he turned and said, 'Come in, Lew.' 'Oh, no,' I replied; 'that would not be right.' Tad then turned to his father and said, 'Pap, you have no objection to Lew coming in?' Mr. Lincoln, with a smile and motioning me to a seat, replied: 'No, Tad; certainly not for any of your friends. We will be glad to have your company.'

"I told Tad that my business would not allow me the privilege, and, thanking both father and son, I returned to my duties with a light heart and with an admiration for the president I have felt for but few men, and since that incident I have often recalled it and expressed my sorrow that he met with a death so untimely."—Washington Star.

Woman's Life Saved.

A rather curious case came to our attention of a woman in Detroit whose life was saved "several times," so she says, by Ath-lo-pho-ros. Once is a good record, but "several times" makes her a warm advocate of Ath-lo-pho-ros whenever rheumatism is mentioned—you can write to her if you want—Kate Nauman, 590 12th St., Detroit, Mich. She says Ath-lo-pho-ros is the best and only medicine that will cure rheumatism, "because it has cured me;" and she says "the swelling and intense pain ceased within five minutes after the first dose." She further says, "the disease has no more dread for me as long as Ath-lo-pho-ros can be obtained." What it has done for her it will do for anyone.

GET STRONG

Vinol Makes Weak People Strong.

WE GUARANTEE IT WILL DO SO.

WE KNOW OF NO TONIC OR REBUILDER LIKE IT.

Vinol does create strength.

We know that and have proved it in many instances.

The reason Vinol rejuvenates and strengthens a person is that it acts directly upon the stomach, strengthening and toning up this great vital organ and enabling it to obtain for itself, from the food that is taken into it, the elements which are required to make firm healthy flesh and muscle tissue, sound bone structure and pure healthy blood.

Vinol does this in a scientific way and is enabled to do it because it contains, dissolved in a delicate mild wine, in a highly concentrated state, the active principles of cod-liver oil.

Vinol does not contain any of the grease that formerly characterized cod-liver oil, hence is free from all the objectionable features which made it impossible for patients to take or retain that vile-smelling remedy into their stomach.

Vinol in its favorable action upon the stomach and other organs of the body acts also in a beneficial way upon the nerves and brain, and will be found to be invaluable to brain workers as well as body workers.

The following letter is from a well-known authoress. It reads as follows: "I wish to acknowledge the receipt of the Vinol and testify to its great benefits. Since taking it I am much improved in health, and during the intense heat of last August I should not have been able to continue in my literary work if it had not been for the strengthening properties of Vinol. Yours in gratitude."—ELLA STARR, 106 W. 82d St., N. Y. City.

We wish any one suffering from weakness, a demoralized condition of the nerves, or a susceptibility to wasting diseases, to call on us and hear what we have to say in regard to Vinol.

Try it on our recommendation, and if you find it does not do everything we claim for it, we will gladly refund to you the amount you have paid us.

THE LEGISLATURE

Some Talk f Unseating Senator Earl of Detroit.

ON ACCOUNT OF FEDERAL JOB

His Pennsylvania Friends Brought Carloads of Flowers—Little Business Transacted in Either the Senate or House.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 18.—There is some talk among members of the senate looking to a movement to unseat Senator Earle, of Detroit. It is said that he tendered his resignation to the secretary of the interior as a government good roads agent, but that the resignation was not accepted, as per a prearranged plan. Section 6 of article 4 of the state constitution reads:

"No person holding any office under the United States or any county office, except notaries public, officers of the militia and officers elected by townships, shall be eligible to or have a seat in either house of the legislature, and all votes given for any such person shall be void."

Senator Helme, democrat, said yesterday:

"It would not require a two-thirds vote of the senate to unseat Senator Earle. His defeated democratic opponent should have made a contest early in the game."

Senator Earle said Thursday night: "My resignation, forwarded to Washington the night before I was elected to the senate, was accepted."

Gov. Bliss sent to the senate Thursday the following appointments, which were confirmed in executive session: Frederick Klump, of Cass City, Tuscola county, member of the state board of mediation and arbitration; Geo. M. Brown, of Saginaw, Saginaw county, member of state board of fish commissioners; Homer C. Brigham, of Grand Rapids, Kent county, member of board of trustees of the Northern Michigan asylum.

Senator Nichols introduced his bill to increase the number of supreme judges by adding two.

Senator Humphrey introduced a bill to permit townships to establish a sort of high school.

Senator Atwood introduced two bills. One provides that mutual benefit associations shall permanently deposit with the state treasurer securities worth $1,000 before being allowed to do business in this state. The other bill provides that foreign life insurance agents shall provide themselves with certificates to do business in this state.

Senator Bangham introduced a resolution making the open deer season the month of November and limiting the number of deer any one hunter may kill to four bucks.

Senator High noticed a bill to require different railroads to make better train connections at junctions.

Senator Holmes, chairman of the railroad committee, announced the appointment of John J. Brown, of Greenfield, Wayne county, as the clerk of the group.

Senator Gad Smith offered a resolution that one member of the committee on geological survey accompany the committee on college of mines when the latter goes north. Senator Helme objected and moved as an amendment that all hands go on the trip, but Smith's resolution carried.

Senator Earle, of Detroit, is the man that wants to go, and he says his object is to investigate a certain grade of strap rock abounding in the upper peninsula, which is said to contain enough natural cement to make it excellent material for building good roads.

Senator Holmes' bill in the interest of the Detroit Homeopathic college, relative to cadavers, which Helme opposed Wednesday, went through easily yesterday.

The state affairs committee reported favorably on Goodell's bill for a state dairy bureau.

The Marquette prison investigating committee was excused for next week.

The house Thursday forenoon indicated that it is taking an absorbing interest in the taxation question. Rep. Branch brought up his motion that the house adjourn sometime during the day until Monday night at 9 o'clock in order to give its members an opportunity to attend the meetings on Friday and Saturday of the Michigan Political Science association at Ann Arbor. The motion was lost by a vote of 75 to 11. After several members had asked for leaves of absence for today, Rep. Wade had a resolution adopted inviting President Campbell, of the state tax commission, and Atty.-Gen. Oren to read the taxation papers they have prepared for the Ann Arbor meetings, at a meeting of the members of the legislature to be held here some evening next week.

At the afternoon session, members of the legislature practically publicly acknowledged that they rode on railroad passes, Rep. Sheridan J. Colby, of Detroit, being the most conspicuous of them. This feature came up on an unsuccessful attempt to get through the house in committee of the whole the joint resolution to submit a constitutional amendment that the legislators be paid $750 a year, with no extras for mileage, etc. Rep. Dingley got the resolution before the house.

Rep. McKay said the people would not stand for this, and offered an amendment that the amount be reduced to $500 a year.

Rep. Campbell ineffectually tried to have an amendment recommended that the salary of each legislator shall not exceed $1,500 for two years.

Rep. Totten, a new member, offered a resolution that members of the legislature shall not receive, nor use, free transportation or passes from railroad companies or persons.

"If this provision is inserted here it will strengthen this proposed constitutional amendment before the people," said Mr. Totten.

Rep. Colby said he did not believe it policy to insert such an amendment. "Most of us ride on passes," said he. "I do, and I do not feel under any obligations to the railroads for the courtesy extended by them. Let us amend the general railroad act so as to require the railroads to furnish free transportation to members of the legislature during sessions."

The house demonstrated its approval by applauding.

"I am very glad, gentlemen, the proposition meets with your approval," smilingly said Mr. Colby.

"I would suggest that you include in your proposed railroad amendment free sleeping car berths, parlor car priviliges and dining car service," said Chairman McCallum, amid general laughter. Totten's amendment was defeated.

Rep. Dingley finally proposed that the amount to be paid a legislator per year be reduced from $750 to $600, in order to make the plan popular. He explained that under the present per diem system, legislators were paid during the last regular session $137,500, while under the proposed constitutional amendment fixing the amount $750 it would amount to about $40,000 a session more.

"I'm not in favor of playing a policy game with the people," said Rep. Weter. "I'm satisfied that $750 a year for the salary of a member of the Michigan legislature is little enough."

Afterward, when the house resumed sitting, the joint resolution was defeated by a vote of 53 to 32, a two-thirds vote being required for its adoption. The vote was then reconsidered and the joint resolution went on the table.

Rep. Branch, of Jackson, noticed a bill to "prohibit the use of trading stamps and similar devices." He said in explanation: "They are merely lottery schemes and should be put out of business. I have no objection to grocers and other merchants giving away their own goods to induce trade."

Rep. Seeley noticed a bill to provide for a closed season for black bass fishing in inland waters.

Bills Passed.

The following bills were passed by the house Thursday:

Fuller—Providing for two voting precincts in Baldwin township, Delta county.

Moore—Repealing jury commission law for St. Clair county.

Moore—Legalizing $4,000 floating indebtedness of village of Algonac for water plant.

Moore—Legalizing $4,000 floating indebtedness of village of Algonac for electric light plant.

Bolton—Authorizing Hillman township, Montgomery county, to borrow $3,000 to pay outstanding indebtedness.

McFarlane—Increasing the salary of the Wayne county probate judge to $6,000.

The following bills were passed by the senate:

Changing the name of Hubert Clark, of Tekonsha, to Hubert Teller; immediate effect.

To legalize $4,000 bonds of the village of Algonac; immediate effect.

To legalize the floating debt of Algonac to amount to $4,000; immediate effect.

To authorize Hillman township, Montgomery county, to issue bonds.

To give Detroit Homeopathic College of Medicine its share of Wayne county cadavers; immediate effect.

To change the name of Carlton N. Nithout to Carlton M. Dodge; immediate effect.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Michigan pensions were granted Thursday as follows: Original—Elias Callahan, Bedford, $6. Restoration and reissue and increase—Isaiah C. Miller, Millbrook, $16. Increase—Chas. Smith, McBrides, $12; Joseph P. Gass, Dorr, $14. Reissue—Elias Hall, Grand Rapids, $10. Widows—Susannah Lintz, Constantine, $12; minors of Jerome B. Helms, Greenbush, $18; Louis A. Burrell, Lamont, $8; Electa H. Mudge, Grand Rapids, $12; Helen E. McCarty, Petersburg, $12.

An Explosion.

Muskegon, Mich., Jan. 18.—The Fruitport Iron Co., located at Fruitport, 10 miles south of this city, was damaged by an explosion about 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon, but nobody was injured. The explosion was caused by the igniting of gas from the charcoal used for smelting purposes, and several of the buildings connected with the plant suffered from fire. The damage, however, will not exceed $3,000, and the plant will again be in operation within 48 hours.

Seriously Injured.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 18.—Charles Gosser was seriously injured by the bursting of an emery wheel over which he was working in the machine shop of Hildreth & Co., at North Lansing, Thursday.

Cannot Recover.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 18.—J. B. Waldron, of St. Johns, who was injured on the state house elevator a fortnight ago, was very low Thursday and no hopes for his recovery are entertained.

Masqueraded for Years.

New York, Jan. 18.—The death of Murray Hall, properietor of an employment agency on Sixth avenue, was reported Thursday. Hall died from cancer of the left breast, and when Dr. Wm. C. Gallagher made an examination he found the victim to be a woman. Dr. Gallagher learned from other occupants of the house where "Mr. Hall" lived that "Mr. Hall's" wife died two years ago after a married life of 20 years. Many who had known Hall for years never suspected that she was not a man. Coroner Zucca Thursday night said the dead Murray Hall was a woman about 42 years old and had dressed as a man in order to help the business along. Neighbors declared that "Mr. Hall" had been twice married. His second "wife," who died two years ago, was well known and well liked.

Library for Syracuse.

Syracuse, N. Y., Jan. 18.—Mayor Jas. K. Maguire received a letter Thursday from Andrew Carnegie, stating that if Syracuse would furnish a good location and agree to spend $30,000 a year upon its library, he will give the city a building to cost $200,000. The city will comply with the conditions.

ARGUMENTS MADE

In the Case of the Men Accused of Murdering Jennie Bosschieter.

THE CASE NEARING AN END

Attorneys for Defense Claim No Case Has Been Proven—Ridicule the Expert Testimony and Denounce Sculthorpe, the Hackman.

Paterson, N. J., Jan. 18.—For the entire session Thursday the opposing counsel in the Jennie Bosschieter murder trial appealed to the jury. Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Ralph Shaw began the summing up for the state. It was expected that Mr. Emly would do this, but he merely offered in evidence the under garment said to have been a part of Jennie Bosschieter's wardrobe.

Mr. Shaw, in summing up, claimed that the state had proven its case and that in every contention had been sustained. He denounced the accused, who, he said, had taken the girl out to do her to death like a dog. He demanded that the jury render such a verdict as the law and evidence demanded, one of guilty in the highest degree.

Then ex-Judge Francis Scott led in the summing up for the defense. He was followed by Michael Dunn. Their addresses were very similar. They declared that no case had been made out against Walter McAlister, Wm. Death and Andrew Campbell. They ridiculed the expert testimony and branded the hackman, Sculthorpe, as a man of the lowest type and of the basest motives. They maintained that the story told by him was not supported by evidence and that it was a lie. Mr. Scott made a point that if Sculthorpe's story were to be believed at all, he should be a prisoner accused of participation in the crime. Mr. Scott was arguing that the state had failed to prove its first count, that of assault, when Judge Dixon interrupted him, saying:

"Before you proceed, I want the jury to understand that if chloral were given, or if a person were struck or choked in order to accomplish the assault, the poison or violence is a part of the assault. The jury must not be misled on that point."

The counsel for the defense declared that it had not been proven that chloral was administered to the girl, and maintained that if the statements made by Prof. Witthaus as to the finding of chloral in the stomach of the girl were to be taken into consideration, so also were those of Dr. Vandenberg to be given weight. Dr. Vandenberg declared that he had seen persons "knocked out" by drinking absinthe. The defense maintained that it had not been proven that any of the defendants had purchased chloral, or that the bottle alleged to have been found near the dead girl belonged to one of the prisoners. They declared that none of the medical testimony offered had shown that the girl had been assaulted.

Ex-Judge W. T. Hoffman, who conducted for the defense all the examinations and cross-examinations, was to conclude the summing up, but he asked that he be allowed to begin his address in the morning instead of Thursday evening, to preclude the necessity of repetition should he be interrupted by the adjournment of court.

This request was granted, and the court was adjourned till to-day.

It is believed the case will go to the jury this afternoon.

In a Satisfactory Condition.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Commander B. F. Tilley, of the U. S. S. Aberenda, reports to the navy department, under date of Auckland, N. Z., Dec. 26, that he has just concluded a visit to all the islands of the Samoan group under the control of the United States and found affairs in a very satisfactory condition. He says he was impressed with the great improvement in the condition of the roads, the sanitary and cleanly condition of the villages and the large increase in the planted and cultivated areas. He was cordially received everywhere, and given numerous presents of food and Samoan curiosities. Lieut. Commander E. J. Doon, who was left in command of the naval station at Tutuila, reports everything quiet in the island.

MADE A DENIAL.

Cadet McArthur Would Not Admit Many Things About His Hazing.

West Point, N. Y., Jan. 18.—The congressional committee only held two sessions at the West Point military academy Thursday. The afternoon session only lasted a little over an hour. The committee afterwards attended a cavalry drill at the riding academy and after dinner they were entertained at a concert by the West Point military band at the Cullom memorial hall.

A night session was to have been begun at 9 o'clock Thursday night, but Gen. Dick decided to postpone any further hearing of testimony until today. Only two witnesses were examined. The first was Cadet James Prentice, who had accused the late Oscar L. Booz of feigning to read his bible when he had a novel hidden inside the cover. After a long examination by the committee, Prentice said that he believed that he was mistaken and Booz might have been reading a lesson leaf or a supplement to the bible.

The other and more important witness was Cadet Douglas MacArthur, of whom the probers after facts about hazing had heard a great deal since they came here.

MacArthur stoutly denied that he had ever fainted or become unconscious from violent exercising, and insisted that he had not been treated any more harshly than his tentmate, Cunningham, and several other classmates. He told the committee that he had been feeling under the weather before he had been hazed on the night in question, and swore positively that he had neither convulsions nor hysteria in consequence. The whole matter, he said, had been greatly exaggerated and the story that cotton had been stuffed into his mouth to stifle his groans was perfectly absurd. He acknowledged, however, that Cadets Dockery and Barry had exercised him until his muscles became cramped and he lost all power over them. He also admitted that he lay on his cot and moaned, but did not cry out.

MacArthur's examination will be resumed when the committee meets to-day.

FOR FORGERY.

Sigmond Hertz Arrested at Queenstown for American Authorities.

Queenstown, Jan. 18.—The Allan line steamer Corinthian, Capt. Henry, which left Halifax Monday, Jan. 7 for Queenstown and Liverpool, arrived here at 10 o'clock Wednesday evening with some difficulty. Sigmund Hertz, of New York city, for whose extradition the United States authorities were asking on charges of forgery, was on board. His wife accompanied him. They were the only passengers booked for Queenstown. They were transferred to the tender, and Hertz was immediately arrested by three detectives. When charged with forgery, Hertz replied that he knew nothing about it.

He had given his name in the passenger list as "Henry Emden," and had described himself as a merchant.

They landed with considerable baggage, of which the police immediately took charge. There is no accusation against the woman, but she declined to be separated from her husband, and both were lodged for the night at the police barracks.

Hertz will be charged before a magistrate this (Friday) morning.

The Miners' Scale.

Pittsburg, Jan. 18.—The scale committee presented its report to the district miners' convention Thursday. It provides for advances for all classes of mines and workmen in the mines, and that Pittsburg prices prevail at all mines in the Irwin field. It also provides for an advance of 10 cents a ton for pick mining on a run-of-mine basis. Each clause of the scale will be taken up separately, requiring probably all day to-day to complete.

Sudden Death.

Chicago, Jan. 18.—Mrs. Maria T. Banigan, widow of Joseph Banigan, former president of the United States Rubber Co., died suddenly Thursday of acute paralysis of the heart at the home of her niece, Mrs. Scott Linn, 2631 Michigan avenue. Mrs. Banigan, who was 60 years of age, lived in Providence, R. I., but had resided in Chicago for the last two months. The body will be taken to Providence for burial.

It is one of the privileges of man to live and learn, but some men seem to live a great deal more than they learn. —Chicago News.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD
SEMI-WEEKLY.

Big Furnace Started.

Cleveland, Jan. 18.—The new blast furnace of the American Steel & Wire Co., which has been in course of construction for the past 14 months, was "blown in" Thursday. This is the next to the largest furnace in Ohio. It cost about one million dollars and it has a capacity of 500 tons of Bessemer pig iron daily. The furnace was lighted by Miss Marie De Forest, the young daughter of the district manager of the company, who was presented with a gold watch as a souvenir by the company.

Murderer Hanged.

Regina, N. W. T., Jan. 18.—John Morrison, who murdered a whole family, father, mother and three children, named McArthur, near Moosemin two months ago, was hanged here Thursday. The condemned man was cool and collected. The scaffold was the same one on which Louis Riel, the rebel, was hanged in 1885.

Initiation Raised.

New York, Jan. 18.—The members of the New York Cotton exchange, by a vote of 121 to 26, adopted an amendment making the initiation fee in the future $10,000 and limiting the membership to 450. There are now about 425 members. Memberships in the past cost about $5,000.

Extradition Autnorized.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 18.—Gov. Odell has authorized the extradition of John Lintz, under arrest in Buffalo, for having embezzled $1,000 of the funds of the Knights of Father Mathew, a fraternal temperance organization of St. Louis, of which he was treasurer. Detective Caudle, of St. Louis, procured the requisition and will take Lintz to that city.

ANXIETY OVER A TOMCAT.

A Mystery Which Was Explained by a Wall Street Man.

It was in a Broadway pharmacy. A reporter was waiting with others when the druggist stepped to the telephone and, after getting the number he called for, said:

"What is that tomcat doing?"

He listened with apparent excitement and added:

"How is spinach?"

After holding the receiver to his ear for a few moments he rang off and started to attend to his customers. He seemed nervous, however, and finally excused himself in the midst of filling an order and called up the same number on the telephone again.

"Sell my tomcat at the market," he said as soon as he had some one at the other end.

Then he returned to his customer with apparent ease of mind. The reporter wondered what the druggist meant by this strange conversation until it was explained by a Wall street speculator. "Tomcat," it seems, is a pet name among brokers for Tennessee Coal and Iron stock. "Spinach" is the familiar name for Southern Pacific. The druggist had evidently bought "tomcat" low, and his excitement was caused by his eagerness to "take profits."

These are not the only stocks that have pet names in "the street." People's Gas of Chicago is known as "Postoffice," and Brooklyn Rapid Transit is known among many as "Little Manhattan." The names are not the same in all brokers' offices. The jargon enables customers to give orders over the telephone to their brokers with a certain amount of secrecy. The practice is as old as "the market."—New York Mail and Express.

MISPLACED SWEETNESS.

Mamma Suffered on Account of Her Son's Lovemaking.

She was pouring at a tea that afternoon, and she looked unusually bewitching. He was sitting at her left in a bower of palms that almost concealed him. He was holding one of her hands under cover of the tablecloth, while she tried to pour with the other.

She did not look at him as he talked, but he knew by her color and the little quiver of the hand he was holding that she heard everything he said.

"Dearest," he murmured as she sent one cup off without a spoon and another filled only with whipped cream, "dearest, if you don't mind my saying all this to you, just drop a spoon. Couldn't you manage it?"

A clatter of silver and more color in the girl's face as, in stooping to pick up the spoon, he kissed her hand. Spurred by this success, he went on, "Dearest, if—if you return it—that is, if you love me, you know—just put three lumps of sugar into the next cup you pour—'y-e-s'—or, if you don't, two, to spell 'no.'"

One, two, three! The tiny cup was almost full, but in her haste to hide her confession she covered the three lumps hastily with chocolate and cream and sent them off.

He asked his mother, as they drove home that night, if she had enjoyed herself.

"Ugh! No!" was her disgusted reply. "Such horrible stuff to drink as they gave one! Why, my cup was half full of sugar!"—M. S. Holbrook in Smart Set.

"Something-In-It"-ism.

Did you ever notice how many persons there are in the world who can be induced to admit there "is something in it?" Doesn't make any difference what it is. The most of the folks will sputter disbelief for awhile and then when some sudden recollection strikes them or you get some argument in under the solar plexus they will grudgingly admit that there's something queer about it or something we don't understand or generally "something in it."

The members for the society of psychical research, the spiritualist doctor, the medium, the Christian Scientist and some of the rest of the folks will explain to you just what "is in it" according as they practice the cult. For the rest of us the vague notion that there is something somewhere somehow, that we do not understand, must needs suffice.—Lewiston Journal.

That Tired Feeling.

"There's no doubt about it," says a prominent vegetarian, "that for endurance, for hard work, vegetarianism is the only thing. Do you know why? It is because in vegetables you eat no tiredness. In meat or fish or poultry you eat a great deal of tiredness, and that is why the meat eater after a hearty meal feels lazy and heavy and disinclined to work. He has absorbed with his meat a great quantity of uric acid, and the definition of uric acid has been given by an eminent scientist as the 'essence of tiredness.' He who eats only vegetables is never tired after a meal—never."

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900, By Harold MacGrath.

He gasped. The words would not come which would do justice to his feelings. He drew off one of his gloves and threw it into my face. It stung me. I should have knocked him down but for the innkeeper stepping between.

"No, herr," he said; "do not disable him."

"You had best go to the barracks at once," said I to the lieutenant. My clothes were too small for me now, and I did not shiver in my shoes. My "Yankee" blood was up. I would have fought him with battleaxes.

"Herr," said the innkeeper when the two had made off for the barracks, "you are a man of courage."

"Thanks," said I.

"Do you know anything about rapiers?" he asked.

"I know the handle from the blade; that's all. But that does not make any difference. I'd fight him with any weapon. He struck me, and then—then he kissed Gretchen."

"I have wiped it off, herr," said Gretchen dryly. Then she passed from the room. I went up stairs too. I looked out of my window. There was moonlight, possibly the last time I should ever see moonlight in the land of the living. Nothing but a mishap on my opponent's part and that early in the combat would save my epidermis. The absurd side of the affair struck me, and I laughed mirthlessly, but none the less I laughed. If it had been pistols, the chances would have been equal. A German does not like pistols as a dueling apparatus. They often miss fire. A sword is a surer weapon. And then the French use them—the pistols—in their fiascoes. Rapiers? I was as familiar with the rapier as I was with the Zulu assagai. I unstrapped my traveling case and took out Phyllis' photograph. I put it back. If I was to have a last look at any woman, it should be at Gretchen. Then I got out my cane and practiced thrusting and parrying. My wrist was strong.

"Well," I mused, "there's consolation in knowing that in two hours I shall be either dead or alive."

I flung the cane into the corner. To pass away the time I paced back and forth. It passed too quickly, and it was not long ere I heard the clatter of the returning cavalrymen. Some one knocked at my door. I swung it open and was thrown to the floor, bound and gagged in a tenth of a minute.

"Put him on the bed," whispered the leader of my assailants. When this was done, the voice added, "Now you can go to the stables and wait there till I call you."

It was the innkeeper. He surveyed me for a moment and scratched his chin.

"Will herr keep perfectly quiet if I take the handkerchief from his mouth?" he asked. I nodded, bewildered.

"What in tophet does this mean?" I asked. I did not say tophet, but it looks better in writing.

"It means nothing and everything," was the answer. "In the first place, herr will fight no duel. The man with whom you were to fight was sent on an errand to this out of the way place as a punishment for his dueling at the capital. I know him by reputation. He is a brawler, but a fair swordsman. He would halve you as I would a chicken. There is another who has a prior claim on him. If there is anything left of Herr Lieutenant at the end of the fray, you are welcome to it. Yes; there will be a duel, but you will not be one of the principals. It is all arranged."

"But I do not understand," I cried.

"It is not necessary that you should." He laughed and rubbed his hands in pleasurable anticipation. "There is a young man down stairs who arrived a few moments before the lieutenant. He has a special affair. There were words. Herr Lieutenant is mad enough to fight a whole company."

"Then why in heaven's name am I up here in this condition?" I cried. "Let me go and be the young man's second, though I can't for the life of me see where he has come from so suddenly and I might say opportunely. Come, cut me loose."

"It is too late."

"Too late?"

"Yes. Herr Lieutenant has been informed that you ran away."

"Ran away!" I roared. "You told him that I ran away? Curse your insolence! I'll break every bone in your body for this!" I cried, straining at the ropes.

"The ropes are new," said he. "You'll hurt yourself."

"You told him that I ran away?" This was too much.

"Yes. Ah, but you will be surprised. The duel will last five minutes. Herr Lieutenant will thrust. The thrust will be parried. He will feint; useless. Thrust on thrust, parry on parry. Consternation will take the place of confidence. He will grow nervous. He will try all his little tricks, and they will fail. Then his eyes will roll and his breath come in gasps. Suddenly he thinks he sees an opening. He lunges. Ach, the fool, it is all over!" The old man's voice quivered with excitement. He had passed his time in the barracks and had seen many a sword skirmish.

"Well, are you going to take off these ropes?"

"No. You would break every bone in my body."

I groaned in exasperation.

"You will soon be out of breath."

Oh, could I have but loosened those cords!

"Stahlberg, who left the service a year ago, will act in the capacity of second." Stahlberg was at the head of the vineyard. "I shall watch the affair from the window here. The scene of action will take place in the clearing beyond. It will be an affair worth witnessing."

"And where is Gretchen?"

"Where she should be—at the bar, a dutiful barmaid." Then I heard nothing but the deep cachinnations of the innkeeper. There was something in the affair which appealed to his humor. I could not see it. For ten minutes my vocabulary was strictly unprintable.

"Will you kindly tell me what the meaning of all this is?"

"Herr Winthrop, the idyl has come to an end. The epic now begins."

CHAPTER XII.

The golden summer moon was far up now, and the yellow light of it came into the window and illumined the grim face of the innkeeper, throwing a grotesque shadow of him on to the floor. The leaves rustled and purred against the eaves. As the branches moved so did the light and darkness move over the innkeeper's visage. He was silent and meditative.

"An epic?" I said.

"An epic."

"Innkeeper," said I, "if I give you my word of honor not to molest you or leave this room will you let me be a witness?"

He passed into the gloom, then back into the light. "This is no trick?" suspiciously. "I have a deal of regard for my old bones, old as they are."

"On my honor."

"Well, I'll do it. It is in the blood of us all. But a false move on your part, and I promise you that this knife shall find a resting place in you."

He cut the ropes, and I was free. But my arms ached. The two of us took our stand by the window and waited for the principals in the drama about to be enacted in the clearing. I confess that my conscience was ill at ease. Why I knew not. I was dreading something, I knew not what. The innkeeper's hand trembled on my arm.

"Sh! They come," he whispered.

As I looked beyond his finger I saw four figures advance over the sward. One of them, a slight boyish form, was new to me. The fellow walked briskly along at the side of Stahlberg, who was built on the plan of Hercules. When they came to the clearing, they stopped. The seconds went through the usual formalities of testing the temper of the swords. Somehow I could not keep my eyes off the youngster who was going to do battle with the veteran, and I could not help wondering where in the world he had come from and why in the world he had chosen this place to settle his dispute in. There were plenty of convenient places in the village and in around the barracks. He took his position, back to me, so I could not tell what he was like. The moon shone squarely in the lieutenant's face, upon which was an expression of contempt mingled with confidence. My heart thumped, for I had never seen a duel before.

"I do not know where you came from," I heard the lieutenant say, "but you managed nicely to pick a quarrel. It is all on your own head. It is too bad that cur of an Englishman had to run away."

The innkeeper's knife was so close that I could feel the point of it against my ribs. So I gave up the wild idea of yelling from the window that I hadn't run away. The lieutenant's opponent shrugged. He placed himself on guard. That was his reply. Suddenly the two sprang forward, and the clash of swords followed. I could not keep track of the weapons, but I could see that the youngster was holding his own amazingly well. Neither was touched the first bout.

"Two minutes," murmured the old rascal at my side. "It will be over this time."

"You seem to have a good deal of confidence in your man," said I.

"There is not a finer swords—swordsman in the kingdom, or on the continent for that matter. There, they are at it again!"

Step by step the lieutenant gave ground. The clashing had stopped. It was needlelike work now. Gradually they began to turn around. The blades flashed in the moonshine like heat lightning. My pulse attuned itself to every stroke. I heard a laugh. It was full of scorn. The laugh—it recalled to me a laugh I had heard before. Evidently the youngster was playing with the veteran. I became fascinated. And while the innkeeper and I watched a curious thing happened. Something seemed to be slipping from the youngster's head. He tried to put up his free hand, but the lieutenant was making furious passes. A flood of something dimly yellow suddenly fell about the lad's shoulders. Oh, then I knew! With a snarl of rage I took the innkeeper by the throat and hurled him, knife and all, to the floor, dashed from the room, thence to the stairs, down which I leaped four at a time. Quick as I was, I was too late. The lieutenant's sword lay on the grass, and he was clasping his shoulder, with the sweat of agony on his brow.

"A woman!" he groaned. "A woman!" Then he tottered and fell in the arms of his subordinate. He had fainted.

"This will make a pretty story!" cried the young officer as he laid his superior lengthwise and tried to stanch the flow of blood. "Here's a man who runs away and lets a woman—God knows what sort—fight his duels for him, the cur!"

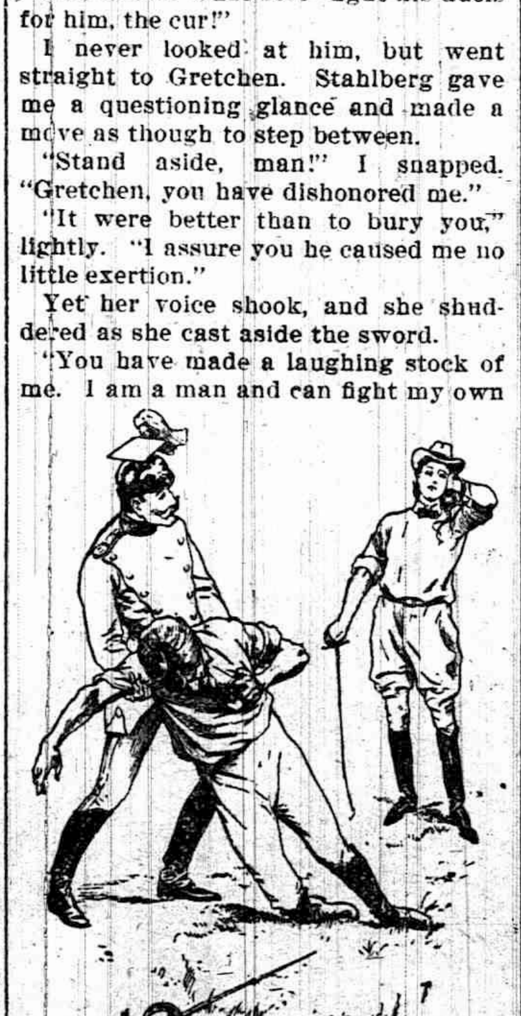
I never looked at him, but went straight to Gretchen. Stahlberg gave me a questioning glance and made a move as though to step between.

"Stand aside, man!" I snapped. "Gretchen, you have dishonored me."

"It were better than to bury you," lightly. "I assure you he caused me no little exertion."

Yet her voice shook, and she shuddered as she cast aside the sword.

"You have made a laughing stock of me. I am a man and can fight my own battles," I said sternly. "My God," breaking down suddenly, "supposing you had been killed."



He tottered and fell in the arms of his subordinate.

"It was not possible. And the man insulted me, not you. A woman? Very well. I can defend myself against everything but calumny. Have I made a laughing stock of you? It is nothing to me. It would not have altered my"— She was very white, and she stroked her forehead.

"Well?" said I.

"It would not have altered my determination to take the sword in hand again."

She put her hand to her throat as though something there had tightened. "Ah, I am a woman, for I believe that I am about to faint. No!" imperiously as I threw out my arms to catch her. "I can reach the door alone without assistance."

And so we went along. I did not know what to do nor yet what to say. A conflict was raging in my heart between shame and love—shame that a woman had fought for me and won where I should have lost, love that strove to spring from my lips in exultation. I knew not which would have conquered had I not espied the blood on Gretchen's white hand.

"You are wounded!" I cried.

She gazed at her hand as though she did not understand; then, with a little sob and a little choke, she extended her arms toward me and stumbled. Was ever there a woman who could look on blood without fainting? Gretchen had not quite fainted, but the moon had danced, she said, and all had grown dim.

"Gretchen, why did you risk your life? In God's name, what manner of woman are you and where did you learn to use the sword? Had you no thought of me?" I was somewhat incoherent.

"No thought of you?" She drew the back of her hand over her eyes. "No thought of you? I did it because—because I did not—I could not—you would have been killed!"

I was a man—human. I loved her. I had always loved her. I had never loved any one else. I was a coward to do what I did, but I could not help it. I crushed her to my breast and kissed her lips, not once, but many times.

"How dare you?" weakly.

"How dare I, Gretchen, dear Gretchen?" I said. "I dare because I love you! I love you! What is it to me that you have dishonored me in the eyes of men? Nothing. I love you. Are you a barmaid? I care not. Are you a conspirator? I know not nor care. I know but one thing. I love you. I shall always love you. Shall I tell you more? Gretchen, you love me!"

"No, no, it cannot be!" she sobbed, pushing me back. "I am the most wretched woman in the world. Do not follow me, herr. Leave me; I beg you to leave me. I have need of the little strength left. Leave me, leave me!"

And she passed through the doorway into the darkness beyond. I did not move from where I stood. I grew afraid that it was a dream and that if I moved it would vanish. I could yet feel her lithe, warm body palpitating in my arms. My lips still tingled and burned with the flame of hers. An exultant wave swept over me. She loved me! She had not told me so, but I knew. She had put her heart before mine. My life was dearer to her than her own. I could have laughed for joy. She loved me! My love overwhelmed my shame, engulfed it. Then—

"I know you," said a harsh voice at my elbow. It startled me, and I wheeled swiftly. It was the lieutenant's brother officer. "I thought from what I heard of you that you were a man worth trouble and caution. Ach, you, the man we have scoured the country for? I should not have believed it. To let a woman fight for him! And she—she is more than a woman—she is a goddess!" with enthusiasm. "If I was betrothed to her, I'd find her if I had to hunt in heaven and hell for her. And what does she see in you?" He snapped his fingers derisively. "I warn you that your race is run. You cannot leave a railway station within the radius of a hundred miles. The best thing you can do is to swim the river and stop in the middle. The prince is at the village, and he shall know. Woe to you, you meddler!"

"Young man," said a voice from over my shoulder from the doorway, "you should by right address those impertinent remarks to me. I am Hillars, the man you seek."

And I had forgotten his very existence! What did he know? What had he seen?

"You may inform Count von Walden," continued Dan, "that I shall await his advent with the greatest of impatience. Now let me add that you are treating this gentleman with much injustice. I'll stake my life on his courage. The Princess Hildegarde is alone responsible for what has just happened."

"The Princess Hildegarde!" I cried.

Hillars went on: "Why she did this is none of your business or mine. Why she substituted herself concerns her and this gentleman only. Now go, and be hanged to—you and your prince and your count and your whole stupid country. Come, Jack!"

The fellow looked first at me, then at Dan.

"I apologize," he said to Dan, "for mistaking this man for you." He clicked his heels, swung around and marched off.

"Come," said Dan.

I dumbly followed him up to my room. He struck a match and lit the candle.

"Got any tobacco?" he asked, taking out a black pipe. "I have not had a good smoke in a week. I want to smoke awhile before I talk."

I now knew that he had been a witness to all or at least to the larger part of it.

"There is some tobacco on the table," I said humbly. I felt that I had wronged him in some manner, though unintentionally. "The Princess Hildegarde!" I murmured.

"The very person," said Hillars. He lit his pipe and sat on the edge of the bed. He puffed and puffed, and I thought he never would begin. Presently he said, "And you never suspected who she was?"

"On my word of honor, I did not, Dan," said I, staring at the faded designs in the carpet. The golden galleon had gone down, and naught but a few bubbles told where she had once so proudly ridden the waters of the sea. The Princess Hildegarde! The dream was gone. Castles, castles!

"I am glad you did not know," said Dan, "because I have always believed in your friendship. Yet it is something we cannot help, this loving a woman. Why, a man will lay down his life for his friend, but he will rob him of the woman he loves. It is life. You love her, of course."

"Yes." I took out my own pipe now. "But what's the use? She is a princess. Why, I thought her at first a barmaid—a barmaid! Then I thought her to be in some way a lawbreaker, a socialist conspirator. It would be droll if it were not sad. The Princess Hildegarde!" I laughed dismally. "Dan, old man, let's dig out at once and close the page. We'll talk it over when we are older."

The infancy of British manufacturing was nursed by engineers from Holland, who superintended the erection of wind and water mills.

A Lost Line.

"It may have been unprofessional conduct," said the civil engineer, "but I acted on the spur of the moment, and I hardly think that there was any harm done. I was out in the country one day on an important piece of business, and as I was about to leave for the depot to catch a train for the city two old farmers came to me with a line fence dispute that they wanted me to settle for them. I had barely time to catch my train, and I told them that I did not care to bother with it. It was only a matter of six inches or so that was in dispute, and I advised them to split it up between them. But they wouldn't listen to my advice, and one of them declared that if I didn't find the line for them he wouldn't let his son drive me to the station as he had promised. As I had no other way of reaching the depot I unpacked my instruments with a sigh and a mental resolve to end the thing as soon as possible.

"'Wul,' drawled both of the old men as I took my eye away from the instrument, 'what's the line?'

"'Gone,' said I solemnly.

"'What?' they both shouted.

"'You can see for yourselves, gentlemen,' said I, making way for them.

"'By gosh, I can't see it!' said one of them as he squinted through the glass.

"'I'll be darned if I kin either,' said the other one as he, too, squinted through the glass.

"'It seems to have disappeared, gentlemen,' said I. 'Such cases are extremely rare, but they are known to happen.'

"When I left, they were accusing each other of having stolen the line."—Detroit Free Press.

The Boatman's Turn.

A boatman in the north of England having been engaged to row a reverend gentleman over a rough part of a river, was very much annoyed at the manner he was addressed by the clergyman, the conversation commencing thus:

Clergyman—My dear man, have you ever studied "geology?"

Boatman—No, sor; Aa hevn't.

Clergyman—Well, my friend, that's part of a life lost, but you will probably know a little "theology?"

Boatman (turning quite irritable)—No; Aa knaw nowt aboot that either.

Clergyman—Well, that's another part of a life lost, my man.

Nothing more was said, as the water was turning very boisterous and they were in great danger, when suddenly the boat gave a lurch and was capsized.

The boatman, being an expert swimmer, took the situation quite coolly, while his companion, who knew nothing of the art of swimming, was struggling for life. The boatman, who was making good progress toward terra firma, accosted the clergyman with the following:

"Aa say, mister, do ye know onnything aboot 'swimology?'"

"No, my man; I don't."

"Wey, what a pity," said the boatman; "there's a whole life lost."—Pearson's.

Mistaken For Shafts.

A story is told of a pair of feet that must have been objects of great regard in their day.

One day a party of men, including Jackson, the man of big feet, were preparing to attend a political meeting. It was soon discovered that there was no way of conveying Jackson, as all the vehicles were full.

"Let me ride that horse over there?" asked Jackson.

"There isn't a man in the world that can ride that animal. He'll work to a cart or a plow, but no one can stay on his back."

"I'll try him, anyway." And the determined man instructed several men to catch and hold the horse.

The animal plunged and kicked, but finally Jackson secured a seat in the saddle.

Every one expected to see him dashed to the ground, but the horse looked round, saw the man's feet and walked peacefully away. He thought he was between a pair of shafts.—London Standard.

His Birthday.

Although unrivaled in the art of cross examination, on one occasion Lord Russell was distinctly beaten by a witness.

"What is your age?" he asked.

"Is it my age you are asking?" replied the witness.

"Yes, sir. Now speak up and be exact."

"And be exact! Well, of all the"—

"The court does not desire to hear any comments of yours. Tell the court your age."

"Well," said the man, "I celebrated my twelfth birthday last week."

"Don't trifle with the court and remember you are on oath."

"It's quite true. I was born on Feb. 29, in leap year, and my birthday only comes once in four years."

Where the Danger Was.

A little beyond a certain Scotch village the main road has a marked declivity, and this added to a sharp turn at the bottom decided the authorities to erect a danger board. The job was intrusted to an old worthy, who duly fixed up the warning at the foot of the hill.

"What's wrang with the bottom of the brae, ye thundering idiot?" exclaimed a village dignitary angrily.

"Man, there's everything wrang," came the curt reply. "Is it no there where a' the accidents take place?"

Early Football Players.

Football was for many years the national game of Florence. The season was from January to March, and the ladies and gentlemen of Florence and the populace as well were wont to assemble on the Piazza Santa Gioce to witness the game, which was called "Calcio," from the word meaning "to kick." The last game was played in 1739.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Oats That Travel.

Get a head of wild oats and lay it on the table overnight, first moistening the oats. Next morning you will discover that the head of oats has crawled off the table and likely enough has made tracks for the outside door. This peculiar gift of traveling lies in the spikes that extend from the coverings of the grains. As the moisture soaks into the head of oats it swells, and the spikes change position in such a way as to set the head to tumbling over and over sidewise. The larger and coarser varieties of wild oats have this power of locomotion developed to a remarkable degree, and even domestic oats will develop it if allowed by neglect to degenerate. Go down into the fence corners of the oatfield and see if you cannot find a long and well bearded head of "tame" oats that has been allowed to grow wild. Then take it home and try the experiment.—Chicago Record.

A Sharp Boy.

"I go through my work," said a needle to an idle boy.

"Yes, but not till you are pushed," said the boy to the needle.

Tried Five Doctors.

Mrs. Frances L. Sales, of Missouri Valley, Ia., writes: "I had severe kidney trouble for years, had tried five doctors without benefit, but three bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure cured me." J. J. Orr.

Advice is cheap, which is probably the reason why so much of it is thrown away.

Save doctor's bills by giving Foley's Honey and Tar to infants and children in time to prevent pneumonia or croup, which are fatal to so many thousands of babies. J. J. Orr.

Why is it that people who are worth their weight in gold are often so very poor?

"It was almost a miracle. Burdock Blood Bitters cured me of a terrible breaking out all over the body. I am very grateful." Miss Julia Filbridge, West Cornwell, Conn.

Contentment may be better than money—but most men are willing to take the chances with the money.

Women as Insurance Risks.

M. M. Danforth says that the investigation of statistics made by R. Hingston Fox showed that as a rule the female risks if as carefully selected would be even preferable to male applicants. As to the dangers incident to the child bearing period, they are far less important as affecting the insurance risk than are those conditions of mental strain and worry incident to business or the exactions of alcoholic excesses and dissipations so much more common in the male applicant.

It has been stated that women are more apt than men to conceal important facts; but this the author denies, saying that not a few of the latest writers on the subject assert that women are more likely than men to give a truthful answer to vital questions. The so called "moral hazard" of female insurance is a much overrated if indeed not a purely imaginary objection unwarranted by the experience of insurance companies in general.—Medical Examiner and Practitioner.

Thought It Was Home.

We have a young San Franciscan in our midst, and she is homesick as homesick can be for that city of uncountable hills and innumerable heliotrope hedges. Nothing in Washington pleases her. We went to the matinee the other day, and midway of the performance I heard from her a gasp of delight. She grasped her right arm with her left hand and rubbed the skin vigorously for a moment or two. Then the hopeless, homesick look settled on her face again, and she sighed.

"I thought for a moment I was out home again," she said wistfully.

"What made you think so?" I asked.

"Oh," said she, "it was only for a moment. It wasn't really true, but just for a minute I was sure I felt a fea."—Washington Post.

A New Field For Woman.

Women have already found remunerative employment in taking pet dogs for a daily airing and in teaching them tricks, also keeping the coat of Angora cats in thorough order, but until recently it has probably not occurred to any that a school of polite conversation for parrots would afford them a new opening. The need for such an institution is suggested by the case of the woman in Paris who had been summoned and heavily fined for allowing her parrot to use questionable language in a public place. It is evident that Polly must have a moral and social education, and this fact seems to suggest a new field of work for women, who might take parrots of neglected education in hand, correcting their diction.—Paris Letter.

Difficult Color Scheme.

"The baby has his father's nose, don't you think?"

"Nonsense! Nature could no more reproduce that nose than she could reproduce a Turner sunset."—Detroit

Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1 00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

ARE YOUR EYES BAD?

Dr. M. F. STEIN,

THE FAMOUS SPECIALIST

Will cure you. Many people become all but totally blind and at an early age, simply because they pay no attention to their eyes. They notice a dimness and a soreness after reading awhile and when a miserable headache comes to them they ascribe it to any cause but the right one and take a pill. The real cause, but the misery, is that their eyes are weak and every time they read or write means an added strain and the eyes made still weaker. Consultation with a specialist means the ending of all misery and the saving to you of your eye-sight. Dr. Stein is reliable. You do not see him once and then look for him again in vain. He makes regular visits to your city. Come and see him and have your eyes scientifically tested free of charge, that you may have comfort when you read and write.

He will be at the
Lilley House, Tecumseh, Mich

Last evening thirty-five of Mr. and Mrs. A. Dewey's friends walked in on them and gave them a surprise. An oyster supper was served and the rest of the evening was spent in playing pedro and games. A. Dewey carried off the first prize for eating the most oysters, as he was the first at the first table and the last at the third table and then had to be carried away by the ladies.

J. M. Hiens & Co., who came here from Adrian and bought out Wallace Angell in the bakery business seems to be doing a first class business. They keep a bakery but their goods are strictly home made. They bake over 150 loaves of bread each day and their goods are sold at Avery's, Lowry's Williamson's and Moore's grocery stores. Mr. Hiens has been in the business for sixteen years, working twelve years for Bowerfind Sons and four years for Mrs. E. M. Angell, of Adrian.

Clarence Bliss, of Adrian, was nearly killed yesterday at the Lamb Fence factory. While he was spooling wire he became confused and placed his right foot into a coil of running wire. He was jerked off his feet and taken up to the shafting on the ceiling. The right foot was twisted around the shafting and mangled. When taken down he was insensible and was conveyed to his home in an ambulance. A physician was called and performed the amputation between the knee and ankle.

Mr. Smith, who runs the cheese factory up at Tipton, drove in town Wednesday at a rapid pace. His horse became frightened at a sign near J. Dewey's farm, one and one-half miles west of town, and, giving a sudden jump, broke the bit. Smith was powerless to hold the animal and it ran, keeping the road until it reached the business part of town. The horse started to run up on the sidewalk in front of Wallinger's saloon, but the carriage struck a hitching post and was upset, so as it was still attached to the carriage, it had to stop. Smith was not injured but badly frightened.

To the Monday Club.

A Monday Club member is in receipt of the following letter from a rural friend:

DEAR MADAM:

Knowing you to be interested in the Monday Club and all of its undertakings we write to ask you about next week's program as published in the HERALD. Does it really mean that you are going to give a "Cheap Ride" to London with excursion rates, or is it only one of those "steer a optican" shows? Will you please give us the price of the whole thing for if it is an excursion down The Strand and Rotten Row as you have advertised we want to take it in by all means. Are there any vacant places? We want to apply for membership right away. We have always considered your club up to date but this offer beats them all. When do you sale?—From a Prospective Member.

Whitney & Knowles' "Quo Vadis" at Adrian February 5.

Interest is already great at Adrian over the coming of Whitney & Knowles' splendid "Quo Vadis" company, which appears at the Croswell Tuesday, February 5. The merits of this company are too well known to all persons who keep posted to remind them that a theatrical event of more than ordinary importance is to be seen on the occasion referred to. Tecumseh people will no doubt move early in the matter of securing seats. Reference to this event will be made later on in this paper.

The Intelligent Censor.

Some time ago a young man of St. Petersburg, Ivan Fedowski, quarreled with his sweetheart and then took his grief out of the country. Not long since he wrote to the girl asking her to "make up" and telling her if she forgave him to insert a "personal" to that effect in a St. Petersburg paper not later than a certain date. The girl was repentant, too, and she promptly got the "personal" ready, and all would have been well had it not been for the lynx eyed censor, who believed it to be some sort of a nihilist message and refused to allow its publication. After awhile, however, the stern official was convinced that the "personal" was harmless, and it was printed four days late. It was a little while after when the girl received word that her lover, having failed to see the message in print on the day he had set, had shot himself two days before it saw the light.

A VOYAGE TO JAPAN.

Another of Walter Norris' Interesting Letters.

Headquarters Dept Visayas,
Iloilo, Panay, P. I., Dec. 4, 1900.

DEAR EDITOR:

I have at last arrived in the Philippines and have settled down to business after having spent two months and five days in getting here. I left Tecumseh September 6th and arrived at San Francisco four days later, just in time to help California with her jubilee celebration—the fiftieth anniversary of her statehood. The principal feature of the program was a grand parade of three or four hours' duration.

My trip across the continent was full of interest to me, although the continual flatness of the prairies gets a little tiresome. One thing I took especial notice of, that Nebraska, Bryan's state, seemed to be in a prosperous condition. All across it were arranged countless numbers of stacks of hay and grain with more in the process of gathering. I don't know whether it was because of McKinley's administration or some other cause, though judging from what we have heard here of the result of election, it must have been the former.

I spent nine days in San Francisco very pleasantly, although at first I wasn't much in love with San Francisco weather, it being too cold for comfort. But the residents of California informed me that September was their worst month and that their best season is winter.

One little trip I took from San Francisco was of great interest to me and may possibly be to some of your readers. I, accompanied by one of my fellow-passengers, crossed the bay to Sansalito and Mill Valley. We then took a trip by rail to the top of Mt. Tamalpais, an actual distance of about three miles, but which we took 14 miles to gain by means of the crookedest railroad in the world, through some of California's beautiful scenery, through dense woods and around dizzy cliffs and precipices when to look down gives one a fear of falling. Sometimes a huge rock directly in front of the engine which seemed to retard all further progress, would disappear as if by magic when, upon arriving, we continued to twist and squirm to scale its summit Indeed, although we had only one car, it was sometimes almost impossible to see the engine because of the turns in the road. At one place the road parallels itself five times, making what is called "the double bow knot" Upon arriving at the summit of the mountain we had a fine bird's eye view of San Francisco, the Golden Gate and country surrounding the city.

I also visited China town in San Francisco which was a novel sight, but comes to be an old story to one traveling westward, as every town or city in this part of the world has its Chinatown. And I think if a man were not a friend of the Chinese Exclusion law, he soon would be if he lived among the Chinese; not but what they are industrious enough, but it seems that they can't possibly leave off any old customs. They are the only people I have met thus far who haven't changed at all with the advancement of civilization, not excluding Filipinos.

September 18 about 1 p. m., we sailed away from San Francisco and bid adieu to our native land Our transport was the Thomas with about 1800 people on board all told. The most of these were soldiers, only about 200 being cabin passengers The Thomas is one of the largest transports in the service, but she is also one of the slowest. She is 480 feet long and rides the ocean so steadily that little or no motion is noticeable except in cases of storm. The ship has its own ice plant and electric light plant and we had all the comforts necessary and some of the luxuries when miles away from land.

As we drew away from the Golden Gate out into the ocean, we commenced to experience the motion of the boat and by evening some were ready to stick close to the rail while every now and then from below among the soldiers a cheer would arise as some fellow made a sneak for the rail and looked longingly, with a face full of anguish, into the dark depths of the ocean.

After seven days of peaceful riding of the ocean wave we reached Honolulu where we made a three days' stop for coal, and were all forcibly struck with the remarkable beauty Nature has contrived to strew about. We then started on our journey again, this time for a 15 days' run to Nagasaki, Japan.

As I have said, the Thomas is slow; so it necessitated the ready wit of the passengers aboard to while away the time pleasantly. And among our passengers there was a plenty of that and not so much monotony as one might think. We had on board various games, a library, a piano, an organ, a graphophone, an amateur actor and a preacher. We had two band concerts a day and sometimes in the evening a band concert at the stern of the boat and a prayer meeting at the bow. Then to bring the ladies into active service, a dance occasionally; also for those whose taste was so inclined (by the way, there were quite a number), sparring matches, mostly among the soldiers. Then finally, if possibly there were any who found nothing congenial among all these various ways of passing the time, we did have a few democrats on board and we managed to drum up a political argument with them occasionally. Now I hope none of my friends will mistake me for a republican. Some of us also formed a Spanish class and whiled away many hours both pleasantly and profitably. Then there is a good deal of enjoyment in watching the waves with their ceaseless roll I do not wonder the Old Ocean has inspired the poets. There is a sense of grandeur and greatness and potency about her that cannot be gained elsewhere Sometimes of an evening also, when there was an especially pretty cloud effect, the camera fiends, including myself, would watch Old Sol disappear into the sea like a ball of gold and we would snap him at the right moment Now if there is anyone who would not be satisfied with a selection from our list of pastimes, he must be a chronic kicker, indeed.

Our journey to Nagaski was attended with the same favorable circumstances we had had on the way to Honolulu. Every day was fine, there was little sickness and our huge family, gathered from so many different states and from a thousand anxious families, settled down together and became as fast friends as though we had known each other for as many years as we had days. Our worst enemies in the way of sea inhabitants were flying fish and porpoises which would scatter in all directions when the giant Thomas pushed her nose into their accustomed haunts as if wondering what new sea monster had come to devour them.

After we had been out from Honolulu a few days, we had passed among us a paper upon which to state whether we would like to go through the Inland Sea or not. Now the Inland Sea was not on our regular course, but as we had been told it was a sea trip among the southern islands of Japan and that it was an opportunity not to be overlooked, you may be sure there were very few "Nos." We then changed our course and headed in a northwesterly direction towards Kobe, Japan, where we were to obtain a pilot to get us safely through the islands.

After having arrived at that point, we started on our Inland Sea trip and commenced to enjoy what was to most of us our first view of the Orient. It is indeed a veritable panorama of magnificent scenery. Islands, islands—all shapes, all sizes, one continual succession of mountains and valleys, and the still water between, dotted here and there with fishing boats and sailboats of every description. On the mountains are always to be seen the prettily arranged terrace farms or gardens, one above another, up, up, to the very summit, which, viewed from the deck of the Thomas, looked like so many steps built heavenward. Multitudes of these mountains we passed with every now and then a village or city reposing snugly and peacefully in the valleys between. Almost every promontory and jut of land also contained its lighthouse, which, with its pure whiteness and background of luxuriant vegetation, formed as pleasing and cheerful a picture as its bright gleam on a dark night looks to the storm-tossed mariner

The weather was fair, the sea perfectly placid and, although we had been traveling for two weeks, no one seemed anxious to reach our stopping point. But all things have an end and so our journey of two days through this Japanese panorama was brought to a standstill by our arrival in Nagasaki harbor on the evening of October 13. Shortly after our arrival the quarantine officers came on board and looked us over and we were already to land in this wonderful island country at break of day.

As my letter is getting lengthy and for fear I may tax your patience, I will close with a very Merry Christmas and best wishes to the HERALD and all its readers, and my letter "to be continued." WALTER E. NORRIS.

A Clever Girl.

Odd food fancies are met at nearly every house. I know a hostess who uses rock candy for sweetening in her afternoon tea and maraschino cherries for flavor, one to each cup. Nobody else ever brews such delicious tea, her friends declare, and they never seem to understand why. The rock candy comes in neat packages of crystal which are dipped up by an antique sugar spoon.

Another young hostess made a specialty of cake and beverages in which she could serve whipped cream. She was under salary from the proprietors of flavoring extracts, which they were continually booming, and was supplied with the material which she demonstrated in her refreshments every afternoon. She was a popular girl and had instituted a tea hour before she became an advertising agent. She was devoted to cooking, and therein lay her value to her employers. She began with vanilla, made cakes flavored with it and put it in her tea. It adds a most fascinating flavor to the favorite feminine beverage. Then she added chocolate to her tea outfit and used whipped cream.

The next day she changed to lemon flavoring, then to almond and orange, and created such a degree of interest through her afternoons that questions began to be poured over her. There was her chance to speak a good word for the makers of the flavors, and she used it in such a clever way that their popularity was established without anybody suspecting her interest in it. You can readily see how valuable an assistant she was.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

About Gray Hair.

Gray hair is no longer regarded with horror even by persons who have reached the age that entitles them to it. Such people were always more apt to be worried over the change than persons prematurely gray who might be expected to mourn the premature loss of the characteristic of youth. Now people need give this sign of advancing years no thought, for it has been decreed that gray hair is the fashion.

Ada Rehan was the first woman in public life, it is said, to allow her hair to turn gray without making the slightest attempt to conceal what is commonly regarded in a stage career as a sign that the end has come or is at all events near. Other actresses have since accustomed the public to the idea of gray headed heroines. Miss Rehan of course always wore a wig on the stage, but Eleanora Duse plays Camille without the least attempt to conceal the fact that her hair has grown so gray as to give her scenes with Armand a slightly maternal suggestion. Signora Duse has carried naturalness on the stage farther than any other actress ever did, but its last point must be her refusal to act such a role with a wig and her course in presenting the rather curious spectacle of a young lover driven to such impassioned lovemaking by a very obviously gray haired woman. Such cases have undoubtedly happened, but they are exceptional, so Signora Duse is probably entitled to more credit as the creator of a new fashion than as an observer of theatrical proprieties.—Philadelphia Times.

If you want knowledge, you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it, and if pleasure you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil and not by self indulgence and indolence. When a man gets to love work, his life is a happy one.

WHAT'S IN A NAME.

Many Times Nothing—Sometimes a Fund of Knowledge.

It's a good old saying and a true one too, "Know all men by their works." The public have been imposed upon so many times by unscrupulous claims made for selfish means of profit, they look for something more substantial; they ask for deeds. The little conqueror has earned the reputation made in Michigan and no impostor can steal it. From north to south, from east to west, in every city, town and hamlet in the state, people stand ready to testify to merit. Gratitude for comfort brought to thousands of homes brings emphatic rejoicings and words of praise, the like of which has not been equaled in modern times. Is it a wonder the name Doan is a familiar one in every household? Is it surprising the public appreciate Doan's Kidney Pills and will not be led astray by the ingenious efforts of would-be competitors? A Detroit citizen tells here why the name of Doan is dear to him:

Mr. R. N. Elliott, of 143 High street, Detroit, says: "My knowledge of Doan's Kidney Pills dates back to five years ago. I was tortured with kidney troubles and inflammatory rheumatism. The doctor prescribed the pills for me which have since become so justly famous. Their use quickly eliminated the uric acid from my system and with its departure came the cure of the rheumatism and the end of the kidney troubles. It took but a few boxes to accomplish this end and I feel that I owe Dr. Doan an everlasting debt of gratitude for prescribing such a valuable remedy. I have taken great pleasure in recommending this medicine to a number of my friends. I always keep a box of these pills on hand so that, should I take a severe cold and feel that it is settling on my kidneys, a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills relieves all apprehension."

DESPERADO KUHNS CAPTURED

After a Desperate Struggle in Which Two Officers Were Wounded.

Cleveland, O., Jan. 18.—A special to the Plain Dealer from Logansport, Ind., says: Marvin Kuhns, the desperado who has terrorized northern Indiana for weeks and boldly defied the officers of two states, by a singular fatality finds himself in the Cass county jail, in the very town in which he made such a desperate battle for life and liberty on the afternoon of Dec. 10. Kuhns and his brother, who was released from the Columbus prison shortly after Marvin escaped, were taken after a desperate fight last night at Green Hill, a little town five miles south of Otterbein, west of Lafayette. Before the outlaw was overpowered he shot two men and was himself shot in the head. Emboldened by immunity from officers, Kuhns and his brother and a confederate stole a team at Plymouth Sunday night and started south. Ex Sheriff J. E. Marshall and Marshal T. J. Chaney traced them to Lafayette Wednesday evening and by telephoning neighboring towns located the men at Green Hill, a small village near Otterbein. An Otterbein posse surrounded the house and rushed in at midnight. Marvin was awake and seized a revolver at his bedside. Before he could fire, Elmer Switzer shot him in the face and the posse closed in. One man jumped from the second story window and escaped, but the brothers were overpowered after a struggle in which shots were exchanged. Wounded as he was, Marvin partially shook off the attacking party and shot H. Volt in the back and Lewis Haskins in the arm. Neither was fatally injured. The prisoners were brought to Logansport. Here Marvin was positively identified by the policeman who battled with him in December. His measurements and physical marks tally to a dot with the Bertillon description from the Columbus officials. He says if he had been given a fair show he would have cleaned out the posse. The wound in his face is not serious. The Plymouth authorities will likely prosecute him instead of returning him to Columbus.

CULLOM'S WALK-OVER.

All His Opponents Withdrew from the Senatorial Race.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 18.—The contest among Illinois republican candidates for the United States senate came to an unexpected close about noon Thursday by the announcement that former Gov. Tanner and Messrs. Cannon, Hitt and Prince had withdrawn from the race, leaving present United States Senator Cullom a walk over.

The announcement of Gov. Tanner's withdrawal came first and was shortly followed by announcements from the other candidates. The exact causes that led Senator Cullom's opponents to leave him a clear field are not announced further than that all the candidates and their friends, after several conferences, agreed that it would be difficult if not impossible to defeat Senator Cullom, and that it would be to the interest of party harmony as well as to their own interest to withdraw before the matter came to a vote before the caucus Thursday night.

Senator Cullom was renominated in caucus Thursday night by acclamation.

A Brutal Assault.

Shamokin, Pa., Jan. 18.—Martin Reich, aged 62 years, who lived alone at his home here, was the victim of a brutal assault by masked burglars early Thursday morning, who also subjected Reich to frightful torture to induce him to tell them where his earnings were hidden. The burglars, five in number, overpowered the old man and applied her-hot pokers to his body and feet until he finally told them where the money could be found. This amounted to $133.60. After dividing the money among them, the burglars pounced upon Reich and kicked him until he was almost dead. They then made their escape.

Christian Endeavor Celebration.

Portland, Me., Jan. 18.—The local committee in charge of the arrangements for the twentieth anniversary celebration of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, to be held here Jan. 31 to Feb. 3, have nearly completed their work. Assurances have been received from many prominent clergymen and laymen in both the United States and Canada that they will be present and take part in the exercises. The principal event of the four days' celebration will be the unveiling of a bronze memorial tablet on Williston church, the birthplace of the Christian Endeavor movement.

Getting Thin

is all right, if you are too fat; and all wrong, if too thin already.

Fat, enough for your habit, is healthy; a little more, or less, is no great harm. Too fat, consult a doctor; too thin, persistently thin, no matter what cause, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil.

There are many causes of getting too thin; they all come under these two heads: overwork and under-digestion.

Stop over-work, if you can; but, whether you can or not, take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, to balance yourself with your work. You can't live on it—true—but, by it, you can There's a limit, however; you'll pay for it.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the readiest cure for "can't eat," unless it comes of your doing no work—you can't long be well and strong, without some sort of activity.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.
If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

MR. QUAY'S RETURN

Made the Ocuasion of Unique Demonstration in the Senate.

ELABORATE FLORAL DISPLAY

Said His Resignation Thereof Was Not Accepted—Some Members of the House Admit Riding on Free Railroad Passes.

Washington, Jan. 18.—As a demonstration in honor of the seating of a single senator and as an elaborate and beautiful floral spectacle, the return of Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay, of Pennsylvania, to the senate Thursday was unique in the history of the body. Within the memory of the oldest senators nothing approximating the scene ever was witnessed in the senate on a similar occasion.

Mr. Quay's friends from Pennsylvania came to Washington by the hundred to witness his induction into office, and they brought with them floral offerings literally by the carload. While Mr. Quay's desk and the desks of other senators adjoining his were banked with costly and beautiful floral pieces, scarcely an appreciably quantity of the profusion of flowers his friends had provided could be displayed in the senate chamber.

The demonstration accorded to Mr. Quay when he entered the chamber amounted to an ovation. While he was receiving the congratulations of friends on the floor, the hundreds of persons who thronged the galleries rose as one and applauded him tumultuously. That Mr. Quay appreciated this distinctly personal tribute was quite evident. He glanced smilingly around the galleries, nodding familiarly to friends whom he recognized here and there.

The brief ceremony of administering to him the oath of office passed without special event, the president pro tempore having warned those in the galleries that it was against the rules of the senate for spectators to express either approval or disapproval.

During the day's session the army reorganization bill was discussed at length by Mr. Money (dem., Miss.), Mr. McComas (rep., Md.) and Mr. Bate (dem., Tenn.). The Mississippi senator devoted some attention to the practice of hazing at West Point, which he bitterly denounced.

Without proceeding further with the army bill, the senate at 4:45 p. m., on motion of Mr. Foraker, went into executive session, and at 5:05 m. adjourned.

This was an exceedingly [illegible] in the house. The entire day was [illegible] upon the bill to revise and codify postal laws, which is to be the continuing order, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports, until disposed of. It is a bill of 221 pages and is simply a revision of existing laws. Some disposition was manifested to inject into the measure some amendments to the present law in the interest of certain classes of mail employes, but such attempts were successfully resisted.

Just before the house adjourned, when no quorum was present, Mr. Wm. Alden Smith, of Michigan, offered an amendment to increase the pay of letter carriers of the first, second, third and fourth classes respectively to $1,200, $1,000, $800 and $600. The amendment was defeated on a rising vote, 19 to 33, but Mr. Smith made the point of no quorum and final action on the amendment went over.

Ninety-three pages of the bill were completed Thursday.

The house adjourned at 5:45 p. m.

Receptions to be Cancelled.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Although the president's progress toward recovery from his recent attack of grip has been uninterrupted, it is now probable that, acting upon the advice of Dr. Rixey, his physician, the official receptions which were announced for the winter, as well as the cabinet dinners, will be cancelled. One or two of the official dinners may be given later in the season, but it is believed that it would be imprudent for the president to undergo the fatigue of a long reception for some considerable time. No definite conclusion, however, has yet beenreached at the White House as to which, if any, of the formal functions will be given.

Naval Changes.

Philadelphia, Jan. 18.—Admiral Geo. W. Sumner, who on Saturday will succeed Admiral Silas Casey as commandant of the Philadelphia navy yard, arrived at League Island from the Port Royal naval station at noon Thursday. The ceremonies incident to the transfer of the station will take place Saturday morning. Immediately upon being relieved, Admiral Casey, with his wife and family, will proceed to Sandiego, Cal., where he will meet Admiral Kautz and assume command of the Pacific station, with the battleship Iowa as his flagship.

Transportation Interrupted.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 18.—According to a dispatch to the Novosti from Irkutsk, on the Angara, 30 miles from the northwest shore of Lake Baika, both of the Lake Baikal ice-breakers are at present unserviceable in consequence of injuries received, and the transportation of passengers or goods will be impossible probably for at least two months.

Still No Quorum.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Senator Foraker made another effort Thursday to secure the confirmation of James S. Harlan as attorney-general of Porto Rico, but on account of the want of a quorum, made no progress. Senator Pettigrew stated that he desired to discuss the nomination further, but desired to speak to a quorum.

Will Condemn Hazing.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Secretary Root was confined to his house Thursday with the grip, but as he was able to sign the routine official mail it was not necessary for any one to act as secretary in his stead. If he becomes worse, however, Lieut.-Gen. Miles will relieve him of the active duties connected with the administration of the war department. Secretary Root has not yet acted on the report of the Brooke court of inquiry in the cases of ex-Cadets Booz and Breth, and his illness will delay still further action in that matter. There is an impression at the department that the secretary desires to act before the congressional committee concludes its investigation of the same matters. There is every reason to believe that he will condemn the practice of hazing in unmeasured terms ond instruct the authorities at the military academy to adopt radical and extreme measures for its complete eradication from the academy.

"Opportune" once signified nothing more than "to be at the harbor." An opportune ship was a ship which had come to port.

A Deep Mystery.

It is a mystery why women endure Backache, Headache, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Melancholy, Fainting and Dizzy Spells when thousands have proved that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble," writes Mrs Pheobe Cherley, of Peterson, Ia., "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters cured me, and, although 73 years old, I now am able to do all my housework." It overcomes Constipation, improves Appetite, gives perfect health. Only 50 cents at C A. Wright's drug store.

A Caroline Islands Legend.

The Caroline islands group includes besides coral islands five mountainous islands of basaltic formation, beautiful and fertile with rivers and springs.

Among the many queer legends of these children of the Pacific there is none more highly improbable than their theory as to the origin of these islands and their inhabitants. They think they themselves were very strong in the water—in fact, they lived in it.

The story goes that a woman and her children were floating around on the reef when a man appeared from the west with a basket of soil on his shoulders. He had started out to make an island with a mountain on it. One of the children cried out to him, "Give us a little soil to make a place for our mother to rest, for she is very weak and cannot swim." He took out a handful of the earth and threw it down, making an island. As the man was going on his way over the water the son slyly made a hole in the basket, so as he proceeded on his way he left a trail of land behind. Suddenly he became conscious that the basket seemed light, and, looking around, he saw the land. In his anger he turned about and trod upon it, and thus the islands were formed.

Insisted on a Change.

The spick and span young officer who calmly takes command over veterans grown "gray in battle and victory" is sometimes an amusing person, particularly if a sense of his own importance is unduly developed.

On one occasion word was received in various South African camps that on such and such a morning every man in Officer ——'s army must change his shirt.

The Imperial Light horse, who formed part of the command, had only one shirt apiece, and that was on their backs. So a messenger was dispatched to explain. But the honorable and gallant officer, fresh from Sandhurst, knew his business.

"If the men of the Imperial Light horse have not got a second shirt," said he firmly, "let them change shirts with each other. My orders are imperative."

And There He Was.

"Yes," he said, "I think a man owes it to himself to choose a wife who can do housework, if necessary. Of course I wouldn't want my wife to work in the kitchen, but she ought to be able to do so. One never can tell what may happen. Girls sometimes leave suddenly, and fortunes are occasionally swept away. In my opinion, a girl does herself just as much honor in learning to do housework as in learning to play the piano or in studying 'Omar Khayyam,' and"—

"Oh, Mr. Spoodlekins," she cried, "excuse me for interrupting you, but such a funny thing happened this afternoon. I dropped the dishcloth and said to myself, 'There, I know somebody will come this evening!' And here you are!"—Chicago Times-Herald.

Helping the Enemy.

A coal heaver was getting in a load of coal in the suburbs of London. He was shoveling in the coals at a good rate when he was startled by a terrific yell from the house adjoining.

"Wot the dickens is the matter?" queried the coalman, starting up.

A disheveled looking individual made his appearance at the door.

"Matter, you thickhead!" shouted the man, frantically endeavoring to pull his hair up in clots by the roots, "you are putting the coal down the wrong hole. My wife's people live there!"—London Tit-Bits.

Lingering LaGrippe Cough.

G. Vacher, 157 Osgood St., Chicago, says: "My wife had a very severe case of lagrippe and it left her with a very bad cough. She tried a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it gave immediate relief. A 50 cent bottle cured her cough entirely." Price 25c and 50c. J. J. Orr.

Train up a hired girl in the way she should go and the first thing you know she's gone.

Pretty Children

"We have three children. Before the birth of the last one my wife used four bottles of MOTHER'S FRIEND. If you had the pictures of our children, you could see at a glance that the last one is healthiest, prettiest and finest-looking of them all. My wife thinks Mother's Friend is the greatest and grandest remedy in the world for expectant mothers."—Written by a Kentucky Attorney-at-Law.

MOTHER'S FRIEND prevents nine-tenths of the suffering incident to childbirth. The coming mother's disposition and temper remain unruffled throughout the ordeal, because this relaxing, penetrating liniment relieves the usual distress. A good-natured mother is pretty sure to have a good-natured child. The patient is kept in a strong, healthy condition, which the child also inherits. Mother's Friend takes a wife through the crisis quickly and almost painlessly. It assists in her rapid recovery, and wards off the dangers that so often follow delivery.

FALL COLDS

They Are Dangerous Because Hard to Cure.

VERY LIKELY TO LAST ALL WINTER.

We Know Something that Cures All Pulmonary Troubles.

IT IS OUR GREAT TONIC RECONSTRUCTOR, VINOL.

There seems to be an epidemic of colds.

It is strange how many people start in with a cold that they have contracted during the autumn months. Such colds are dangerous, for unless cured when the weather is warm it is very difficult to get rid of them when really inclement weather appears.

Do not, if you have a cold, go through this winter and let it pull you down. A racking cough may be the means of undermining your constitution, terminating in consumption, when there will be no hope for escape.

Cod-Liver Oil has always been the greatest known specific for consumption. Naturally Cod-Liver Oil has been given for colds which are regarded by many people as the first stage of this disease. There is no need of our telling you the drawbacks of Cod-Liver Oil; the vile, greasy mixture was so repellent that not more than one person in ten could take it. But Cod-Liver Oil did cure where it could be taken.

Now we have a cod-liver oil preparation that cures just as surely as did this vile remedy. We refer to Vinol. Anybody can take Vinol. It tastes delicious, and because it contains the active curative principles that made Cod-Liver Oil famous as the specific for consumption and other wasting diseases, it will be readily seen how valuable it is for all such troubles.

Here is one letter taken from many that are continually coming to our notice. Mrs. E. Coghlan, 122 Putnam Ave., Cambridgeport, Mass., says:

"Last September I contracted a heavy cold which terminated with tonsilitis, and later the grip. All winter I had a dreadful cough, and the doctor advised me to take several things, among them Cod-Liver Oil. I tried it for several months without obtaining relief. At last I heard of Vinol and gave it a trial. Five bottles cured me and I have had no troubles since."

When we talk of Vinol, we know of what we speak, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied.

LEGISLATIVE JUNKETS.

Speaker Carton Has Found a Very Difficult Problem to Solve.

SOLONS MAY HAVE TO ADJOURN

While the Committees Are Visiting the Various Institutions—Proposed New Laws.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 22.—Notwithstanding the firm stand taken by the presiding officers of the two houses at the opening of the session against legislative junketing, the present indications are that it may be absolutely necessary for the legislature to adjourn while the committees visit the various state institutions. In furtherance of the non-junket plan the house adopted a resolution instructing the committees to confer with Speaker Carton about their trips and authorizing the speaker to arrange these visits so that too many members would not be absent at the same time. Speaker Carton has found this a very difficult problem to solve in view of the fact that each member of the house is inclined to resent any interference with his desires in this direction, and the further fact that no such resolution has been adopted by the senate whose committees are inclined to make their visits at once and are desirous of having the house committees accompany them.

Already the joint committees on Marquette prison have departed to commence their investigation of the alleged shortcomings in the management of that institution, and will be absent for a fortnight or so. In addition to this the joint committees on fisheries have arranged to leave Saturday night for a trip to the various fish hatcheries.

An Enjoyable Trip.

Each of these committees will take away several legislators who are not members thereof, but will embrace the opportunity to make an enjoyable trip and it need not be surprising if it is reluctantly concluded that it may after all be as well to have the junketing all done with at the same time. As a matter of fact experience has proved that mighty little business will be finally disposed of while some thirty members of the two houses are absent. The Marquette prison committee promises to make the investigation of that institution very thorough, having taken along an attorney, Senator Murfin, a stenographer, etc.

The plan to furnish relief for the supreme court, which was mentioned in the first of this series of letters, has materialized, Senator Nichols, of Ionia, having introduced a bill to increase the number of justices from five to seven, and increase the term from ten to fourteen years so that one justice will retire every two years. The bill contemplats the election of three justices this spring, one to succeed Chief Justice Montgomery, whose term will expire this year, and two others to make the increase provided for. One of these justices is to be elected for 14 years, one for 12 years and one for 10 years.

The bill providing for a Michigan exhibit at the Pan-American exposition, as reported by the house committee on ways and means, fixed the appropriation at $40,000, and provides that $10,000 of this shall be used for a Michigan exhibit. The number of commissioners is reduced from five to three, and a cut is made in the per diem allowance for expenses of the commissioners. Even at this, there is some doubt of the bill passing.

Tax Bills Pour In.

Tax bills of all sorts and conditions continue to be poured into the hopper, and the stream bids fair to continue until the expiration of the fifty-day limit puts a stop to all bills. It will be some time before there is much crystalization of sentiments in favor of any particular measure. One of the latest bills on this subject is that of Representative Keer, of Houghton, who proposes to repeal the tax on all evidences of credit. Mr. Kerr has another bill which repeals the law taxing foreign corporations having property in this state, and still another which takes from the state tax commission, all authority over municipal or county assessments.

The first attempt to induce the house to pass the Dingley joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment fixing the salary of legislators at $750 per year in lieu of the present per diem, mileage and extras, was a failure, but another attempt to pass the measure will be made.

Two bills in which the general public will be more than ordinarily interested were introduced in both the house and senate a few days ago. They materially amend the laws governing the operations of building and loan associations in Michigan, one relating to domestic associations, or those organized under the laws of this state, and the other to the associations of other states which seek to do business in Michigan. Both bills were prepared under the direction of Chief Lord of the building and loan division of the secretary of state's office.

Investment of Surplus Funds.

Chief Lord would make it compulsory for domestic associations to pay the expense of operation from their earnings, instead of using a part of the installments for an expense fund. The bill provides also for the investment of surplus funds in approved state and municipal bonds, investments now being limited to loans to members, thus forcing many associations to keep idle many thousands of dollars at times. Provision is made for the consolidation of associations, and for associations going into voluntary liquidation. In case of an impairment of assets, the secretary of state is to take possession of the affairs of the association, first giving it twenty days in which to make good the impairment. If he does assume control he is to call a meeting of the stockholders for the purpose of having them elect a conservator from their number, and if they fail to elect, then the secretary of state is to have the attorney general apply for the appointment of a receiver, this step, however, to be taken only as a last resort. Under the present law loans are made to the highest bidder only, and this practice results in extraordinary large premiums being charged in some cases. It is proposed to give the boards of directors authority to fix the premium on written agreement with the borrower. A definite contract with the borrower as to the time of cancelling the mortagages is also provided for, and one of the most important provisions of the bill is that which provides for the creation of a reserve fund of not to exceed 5 per cent. of the outstanding loans.

For Protection of Shareholders.

The bill relative to foreign building and loan associations provides for the issuing by the secretary of state of authority to do business in Michigan on deposit with the state treasurer of $100,000 for the protection of Michigan shareholders. This bill also makes the secretary of state the official on whom service of process against foreign associations shall be made, provides severe penalties for persons who act as agents for unauthorized associations, and makes foreign associations subject to all the restrictions imposed upon Michigan associations.

The citizens of the upper peninsula and other remote sections of the state have tired of having packages sent by express carried all over this and adjoining states before reaching them several days after being consigned, when they could be transported direct in half the time. The trouble is that companies will not exchange packages. For instance, a package consigned from Cheboygan to Marquette is sent back to Bay City, thence to Chicago and then on to its destination. Representative Gordon has introduced a bill requiring companies to send freight by the shortest and quickest route, exchanging business when necessary to accomplish this, and pro rating the amount received for the service.

War Against Adulterations.

The war against adulterations is on again this year, and bids fair to be fiercely waged. The bill prohibiting the adulteration of white lead, which was defeated two years ago, has again been introduced. Michigan manufacturers secured its defeat by the last legislature by convincing the committees having it in charge that absolutely pure white lead wholly unmixed with zinc would be worthless. Senator Goodell has introduced a bill which prohibits the manufacture and sale of food products containing alum and other substances which are named. The primary object of the measure is to prevent the sale of so-called alum baking powders, and judging from the warfare which has been indulged in over this matter in the newspapers during the past few years, it is safe to predict that there is a merry time ahead if this bill is to be pushed with any considerable degree of vigor.

Van Buren is the greatest grape county in Michigan, and one of the greatest producers of this lucious fruit in the United States. It is also a local option county, a fact which hampers the grape growers to some extent. Grapes ripen with a rush when unexpected weather conditions prevail, and it is not always possible for the growers to ship the fruit as rapidly as it ripens, and the result is that large quantities spoil on their hands. Representative Adams, who represents Van Buren county in the legislature has introduced a bill which permits the manufacture of wine in the county, and its sale at wholesale.

May Know What He Is Drinking.

Another liquor law which has been introduced is in the interests of public health, having been introduced by Dr. Ames, chairman of the committee on public health, which has it in charge. It provides that all packages containing beer or whiskey bear a label setting forth the ingredients so that the drinker may know just what he is getting outside of.

Large quantities of liquors, especially beer, are sold on sleeping, dining and buffet cars, as all travelers well know. The companies operating the cars pay nothing for this privilege, and Representative McCollum has introduced a bill requiring them to pay an annual tax of $500. Representative McCall is also after sleeping, palace and drawing room car companies, which now practically escape all taxation. He has a bill levying a tax of one per cent on that proportion of their capital as is represented by their Michigan mileage.

Another of the fierce struggles of two years ago is to be re-enacted this winter. It will be recalled that the Aldrich bill, providing for the closing of theaters and other places of amusement on Sundays was beaten only after the hardest sort of a fight. Already similar bills have been introduced by Senator Holmes and Representative McCall, and there are indications that they cannot be defeated this year.

Anti-Cigarette Bill.

The anti-cigarette virus seems to have taken a strong hold on the legislators, a number of bills designed to curtail or altogether prevent the sale of these articles having been introduced. It is generally conceded that it is useless to endeavor to prevent their sale altogether, and that the better plan is to surround their sale with restrictions that will be as nearly prohibitive as possible. In order to accomplish this Representative Gordon has prepared a bill which requires retailers to pay an annual tax of $200, such retailers to be permitted to purchase cigarettes in original packages. This bill prescribes the dimensions of such original packages, and makes them of such liberal proportions that only very extensive dealers in the largest cities could afford to handle cigarettes. It is figured that under these conditions the great bulk of the sales to youths would be cut off and the worst of the evil overcome.

Representative McFarlane's proposition to tax bachelors seems to be generally regarded as a joke, although its author insists that he introduced the measure in all seriousness. The tax prescribed is $5 per annum for each bachelor over 30 years of age, and about the first individual who would have to walk up to the captain's office and settle should the bill become a law is the gentleman who introduced it, for he blushingly confesses that he is not married, and is absolutely without a prospect. He says his desire is to create a fund for the purpose of aiding needy students through the normal schools, and he sees no other way of doing it. Following the introduction of this bill Representative Ward gave notice of a bill taxing old maids who refuse their first offer of marriage.

War with Spain—Original—Allen Gray, Saginaw, $6. War with Spain—Widows—Minor of Albert A. Hall, Highland, $14.

Borrowed Money.

Jackson, Mich., Jan. 22.—A paroled convict made the acquaintance of A. B. Bowers, of Battle Creek, here on Sunday. Monday morning he borrowed $4.50 of Bowers until the banks opened, as he claimed, to make up $6 which he desired to pay a friend who was going away on an early train. The fellow gave the name of Frank Schultz although it is stated that he is Frank Gardner, who was sent from Detroit Jan. 27, 1899, for five years for forgery and paroled by Gov. Pingree. The prison officials are looking for him.

Brakeman Injured.

Jackson, Mich., Jan. 22.—Conrad Hoag, aged 45, a Michigan Central brakeman, while coupling hose to the air brake of a freight train at the junction, had his left foot crushed Monday night, necessitating amputation. A switch engine and cars are claimed to have bunted into the rear of the train on which Hoag was working.

TOOK SOME NOURISHMENT

The Improvement Merely Indicates a Postponement of the Inevitable—Believed She Will Live Until Thursday Unless the Unexpected Happens.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Jan. 22.—12:20 a. m.—The following is the full text of the midnight bulletin posted at Osborne house:

"There is no material change in the queen's condition. The slight improvement from the morning has been maintained throughout the day. Food has been taken fairly well and some tranquil sleep secured.

"JAS. REID,
"R. DOUGLAS POWELL,
"THOMAS BARLOW."

1 a. m.—Another day in the Victorian era, now so rapidly drawing to a close, passed without any great change in the condition of the queen. The slight improvement so frequently mentioned in the official bulletins merely indicates a postponement of the inevitable. The end may be a matter of days or only of hours, but the members of the royal family who are now dragging out a weary visit at Osborne house know that the death of her majesty is merely a question of a short time.

The most noticeable feature of yesterday was the satisfactory portion the queen spent in consciousness which she regained early in the afternoon and still retained at 10 p. m. At that hour she had not seen Emperor William, local rumors to the contrary notwithstanding. Royalty at Osborne thus had a chance to recuperate from the terrible ordeal undergone during the early hours of Monday. The correspondent of the Associated Press is informed that the members of the royal family were called to a room adjoining the queen's bed chamber no less than four times yesterday morning, and were kept in momentary expectation of being summoned to witness the end up to half past 5. Her majesty's physicians then had only a vestige of hope that they would be able to keep the queen's feeble life in existence until the Prince of Wales arrived.

To secure this result they resorted to the frequent use of brandy and champagne. These stimulants, used to an extent which only the greatest emergency justified, worked their process; and, when the Prince of Wales and Emperor William entered the castle grounds at 11:30 a. m. they found the queen a trifle better than had been expected.

The desperate remedies employed Monday morning to enable her majesty to live until her eldest son's arrival will not be used again to the same extent, for the doctors are fearful that the remedy might be almost worse than the disease. They trust to prolong her life by a moderate application of stimulants, combined with as much nourishment as can be assimilated. Such expedients as were employed during Sunday evening and Monday morning are not considered justifiable.

The queen's rally astonished no one more than her physicians; and, when at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon they heard her ask for chicken broth, their amazement almost equalled their delight. Privately, however, they build no false hopes upon these fading signs of what has been one of the strongest constitutions with which a woman was ever endowed.

Despite the favorable afternoon, the doctors dreaded greatly the period between 6 o'clock and midnight. When that was safely passed they seemed hopeful of her majesty living at least through another day, although the memory of the previous night's relapse kept their anxiety at high tension.

5 a. m.—Up to this hour no further bulletin has been issued.

The correspondent of the Associated Press here is informed that the queen's condition has undergone no change.

The queen is expected to live until Thursday morning unless unexpected complications occur.

London, Jan. 22.—8:03 a. m.—The Cowes correspondent of the Daily Express learns, unofficially, that the queen has taken nourishment freely since midnight.

London, Jan. 22.—8:37 a. m.—An official bulletin, issued at Osborne house at 8 o'clock, says: "The queen this morning shows signs of diminishing strength, and her majesty's condition again assumes a most serious aspect.

(Signed) "REID,
"POWELL,
"BARLOW."

The Feeling in Italy.

Rome, Jan. 22.—In the Italian senate Monday, Gen. Count Giuseppe de Sonnaz, commanding the fourth army corps, recalled the "warm friendship and sympathy that have always united the governments and peoples of Great Britain and Italy," and moved that the senate should ask officially for information regarding the condition of Queen Victoria and express heartfelt wishes for her recovery. Marquis Visconti Venosta, minister of foreign affairs, joined in the sentiments expressed by Count de Sonnaz and supported the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Sadness in the Dominion.

Montreal, Jan. 22.—Throughout the Dominion of Canada, among French Canadians as well as among the English-speaking citizens, there is but one feeling expressed, one of sadness at the serious condition of her majesty, and of anxiety as to the outcome. Prayers for her were said in most of the churches Sunday, and in the larger cities like Toronto, Montreal and Quebec, crowds have surrounded the newspaper bulletin boards, waiting for news. Already it has been decided to postpone a number of balls and social functions.

Pingree Contempt Case.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 22.—The Pingree contempt case is again before the supreme court, another application having been made Monday afternoon. Both Judges Wiest and Wisner are included in this application. The grounds on which the application is based are the same as in all previous proceedings.

Team Ran Away.

Adrian, Mich., Jan. 22.—Sheriff Wm. Shepherd was thrown from his buggy while returning from Deerfield, near the Wabash depot. His team became frightened at the cars and ran away. The tongue of the buggy broke and the sheriff was thrown out, sustaining severe bruises.

Fell on a Saw.

Hudson, Mich., Jan. 22.—Silas Orbitt, aged 54, a resident of Medina township, was horribly mutilated Monday afternoon by falling on a circular saw. His right arm was sawed off and his side and back cut to pieces. He died in a few hours.

Head Cut Off.

Pinckney, Mich., Jan. 22.—Monday morning Emet Monroe, aged 23, while trying to board the eastbound train as it was in motion, slipped and fell under the cars. The train severed his head from the body.

Charged With Arson.

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 22.—Oliver Van Zanlt is on trial in the circuit court charged with arson. He is an old man, but it is alleged that he set fire to the barn and buildings owned by Norman Strevel at Jeddo.

Gave Him Seven Years.

Jackson, Mich., Jan. 22.—Alexander McDowell, of Detroit, who burglarized a saloon here, being convicted, was Monday sentenced to seven years and six months in Jackson prison by Judge Peck.

Fell Down Stairs.

Pontiac, Mich., Jan. 22.—Charles A. Harrison started to answer the door bell Sunday night. He fell down stairs and broke two ribs. He may have received internal injuries.

Lingering LaGrippe Cough.

G. Vacher, 157 Osgood St., Chicago, says: "My wife had a very severe case of lagrippe and it left her with a very bad cough. She tried a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it gave immediate relief. A 50 cent bottle cured her cough entirely." Price 25c and 50c. J. J. Orr.

J. A. Lambert, of Rachel, N. C., writes: I heartily endorse Foley Kidney Cure. It does what you claim it will do, and there is nothing equal to it and I thank you for the good it has done me. Accept no substitute. J. J. Orr.

TAX COMMISSIONER

James C. McLaughlin, of Muskegon, Succeeds Campbell.

OTHER NOMINATIONS SENT IN

By Gov. Bliss to the Senate, Which Were Referred to Committee—Short Sessions of the Senate and House—Business Transacted.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 22.—The long term position on the state tax commission, now filled by Milo D. Campbell, of Coldwater, falls to James C. McLaughlin, a Muskegon attorney. His nomination was sent to the senate Monday by Gov. Bliss, and as a result Senator Kelly is shaking hands with himself.

Information as to whom the two remaining members of the commission will be is unobtainable at the executive office. Commissioner Freeman's reappointment is generally anticipated, however, and Geo. A. Newett's backers are still fighting for him. McLaughlin's appointment dates from Jan. 1.

The list of appointments announced includes three others, as follows: Henry A. Haigh, of Detroit, to succeed Judge McAlvay, of Manistee as member of the state board of health for six years from Jan. 31, 1901.

George E. Barden, of Otsego, member of the board of control of the state public school at Coldwater for six years from Jan. 1, 1901.

John D. Muir, of Grand Rapids, member of the state board of pharmacy for five years, from Dec. 31, 1900.

The appointments were referred to the committee on executive business.

Twenty taxpayers of Mackinac island sent a protest against the proposed change of charter to grant 30-year franchises.

A memorial was received from the Berrien county board of supervisors asking that evidence of debt be exempted from taxation.

The Chippewa county board of supervisors petitioned for a change in the game law.

Senator Fuller noticed two local bills, one amending Menominee's charter and another enabling Escanaba to borrow money; also a bill requiring that the names of all former state officers be printed in the state manual; also a bill amending the fish laws of Menominee county.

Senator Loomis introduced a bill relative to quieting the title of wornout timber lands in the lower peninsula and placing the title in the Agricultural college or board of regents of the state university. The lands will be placed under the control of the forestry commission to reforest and make them valuable. An associate bill creates the office of state fire warden, with deputies, to protect timbered lands from destruction by fire.

In the house Monday night Rep. Colby, of Detroit, gave notice of a congressional reappointment bill. His bill is not yet framed, but he says he contemplates altering the congressional districts in Wayne county but slightly, if at all.

Rep. Nevins gave notice of a bill making non-support of wives and children by the head of a family a felony instead of a misdemeanor. A similar bill was killed in the house judiciary committee two years ago.

Rep. Mack gave notice of a bill giving township boards authority to compel the construction of sidewalks the same as common councils in cities or the trustees in incorporated villages.

Rep. Walker gave notice of a bill to furnish better protection to veterinary surgeons.

IN CONGRESS.

Little Business of Public Importance Transacted in Either House.

Washington, Jan. 22.—No business of special importance was transacted by the senate Monday in open session. An executive session of more than two hours' duration was held and 66 pages of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill were completed before adjournment.

At 5:25 p. m. the senate adjourned.

The house Monday, after devoting some time to District of Columbia business, passed a number of bills under suspension of the rules. They were to provide a home for aged and infirm colored people out of the fund now in the treasury to the credit of deceased colored soldiers, amounting to about $230,000; to establish a branch soldiers' home at Johnson City, Washington county, Tennessee, and to increase the salary of the commissioner of education of Porto Rico from $3,000 to $4,000.

A bill to give citizens of foreign countries the right to sue in the court of claims for indemnity for alleged injuries, which had been recommended by the state department, was disastrously beaten.

At 5:05 p. m. the house adjourned.

Terrible Weather.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 22.—Terrible weather has prevailed on the north side of the island. Since Friday night a violent norther has been causing destruction of banana plantations on every side. In some of the parishes hundreds of acres of fruit have been ruined. The course of Bluff Bay river has been diverted and the swollen stream has already carried away two houses and is now threatening to wreck a large, thriving fruit district. The seas are running very high and have demolished the wharves. There have been many casualties among the small craft of the United Fruit Co., and other American fruit interests are suffering severely. The wind is moving to the northeast of the island with increased energy, carrying destruction in its path.

The Loan Subscribed.

New York, Jan. 22.—Zimmerman & Forshay, bankers, who had charge of the flotation of the Bavarian one hundred million mark loan in this country Monday received a cable announcing that the loan had been several times over subscribed. Allotments to the firm were made on the basis of 70 per cent on applications for large amounts and the full amount for small applications.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900, By Harold MacGrath.

"No; we will face it out. She loves you. Why not? So do I." He got off the bed and came over to me and rested his hands on my shoulders. "Jack, my son, next to her I love you better than anything in the world. We have worked together, starved together, smoked and laughed together. There is a bond between us that no human force can separate. The princess, if she cannot marry you, shall not marry the prince. I have a vague idea that it is written. 'The moving finger writes and, having writ, moves on.' We cannot cancel a line of it."

"Dan, you will do nothing rash or reckless?"

"Sit down, my son, sit down. Premeditation is neither rashness nor recklessness. Jack, life has begun with you. With me it has come to an end. When there is nothing more to live for, it is time to die. But how? That is the question. A war would be a godsend. But these so called war lords are a lazy lot or cowardly or both. Had I a regiment, what a death! Jack, do you not know what it is to fight the invisible death? Imagine yourself on the line, with the enemy thundering toward you, sabers flashing in the sunlight and lead singing about your ears. It is the only place in the world to die—on a battlefield. Fear passes away as a cloud from the face of the sun. The enemy is bringing you glory—or death. Yes, I would give a good deal for a regiment and a bad moment for our side. But the regiment non est. Still, there is left"—

"Dan, what are you talking about?" I cried.

Death—grim, gaunt and gray death, whose footstep is as noiseless as the fall of snow; death, the silent one, as the Indian calls him."

He knocked the ash from his pipe and stuffed the brier into his pocket.

"Jack, I am weary of it all. If I cannot die artistically, I wish to die a sudden and awful death. What! Do I look like a man to die in bed, in the inebriates' ward? For surely I shall land there soon! I am going to pieces like a sand house in a windstorm. I suppose I'm talking nonsense. After all, I haven't as much to say as I thought I had. Suppose we turn in? I'm tired. You see, those fellows moved me around today."

CHAPTER XIII.

Hillars and I stood in the middle of the road. He held the binoculars. "How many can you make out?" I asked.

"Four. All on horseback. There's a coach of some sort following on behind. But everything is blurred, and my hand trembles. The whisky here is terrible. Here, look for yourself," handing the glasses to me. "Tell me what you see."

"There's one with a white cap—ah, it is Count von Walden! There are two soldiers in the Hohenphalian uniform, cavalry. I do not know who the fourth fellow is."

"Describe him to me," said Hillars, trying to roll a cigarette with his trembling fingers. "Curse it"—throwing away the rice paper—"I've got so bad that I can't roll a cigarette! Well, what's he look like?"

"He's in civilian dress; has a little black mustache and an imperial."

"Look anything like Napoleon III?"

"You've hit it. Who is he?"

"They say he's Prince Ernst of Wortumborg," said Hillars, "but it is my opinion that he's the devil on a furlough."

"Then he is the man"— I began.

"He is. Your love affair is all over once he gets here, unless"— Dan looked at the sky as though he was undecided about the weather.

"Unless what?" I asked.

"Oh, just unless," said he. "I'd give £5 for a glass of homemade whisky."

"You've got a plan of some sort," said I. "Speak it out."

"It wasn't a plan; it was just an idea. It's gone now. Maybe it will come back later. Are you going to stay here or come with me and tackle a bottle of the innkeeper's Rhine wine? The German vinegar used to make you hilarious."

"What's the coach for?" I asked. "Are they going to carry us off like a couple of chickens?"

"I presume it is for her serene highness. I wonder how they found out she was here? Probably the lieutenant you were going to fight, but didn't, informed them. At any rate, the coach will not be for us. The prince will not bother with you and me while the princess is here. I don't know what they will do with us. Possibly nothing; possibly put us in jail. Come along; I'm thirsty."

It was late in the afternoon of the day following. I had not seen her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde—Gretchen. She had remained in her room, and all efforts of mine to hold communication with her had proved futile. I had stood at her door and supplicated. She had told me to go away. The innkeeper had scowled when I suggested that he carry a note to his mistress. He had refused.

"The princess receives no notes," he had said. "Gretchen—it was a different matter."

And Hillars had slept till after noon. It had been a bad morning for me. The wounded lieutenant had been carried away the night before, and there had not been anything for me to do but wander about—waiting.

"Will you help me with the Rhine wine?" asked Hillars.

"No. My head is fuddled enough as it is."

"Then you must let me do all the talking."

"And why you?"

"I shall know better how to irritate them," with a laugh. "They will not take any particular interest in you when they set eyes on me. Homo sum! I am the man they are looking for. They will find plenty of me. I shall be a syndicate in myself. Where they expect to find one man they will find a dozen, all alive and kicking. It will be good sport."

"What the devil are you up to?" I demanded.

"Wait and see; wait and see. Come, let us receive them in the hall. The affair must be conducted on the line of court etiquette. First, we shall try to avert hostilities by the aid of diplomacy. If that fails, the princess herself will be made to vindicate us. And why not?"

"You are not going to drag her in!" I exclaimed.

"My dear Jack, of course not. The prince and the count will do that for us. You understand that she is concerned in all that is to take place, do you not? Well, then, it will cost her but little."

"But this fellow, the prince!" I cried. "Let us get out while there is time."

Dan regarded me seriously.

"You aren't afraid of him. What do you want to run away for? My son, there will be some very good sport before this is done. You will miss it by running away."

"It's meeting the man who is to marry her—the woman I love. That is the reason."

"To marry her—the woman I love!" he repeated softly. "Yes, it is hard. But it isn't any worse for you than for me."

"Forgive me, Dan! You know"—

"Yes, yes; I know," crossly. "Hang it, can't I punch it into your head that I am taking all this trouble on your account? If it were not for you, do you suppose I'd wait? The prince shall never marry the princess. Will that satisfy you? Now, look pleasant, as the photographer says, for here they are."

The count entered first, then the prince, who was followed by two cavalrymen. Hillars and I stood silently by our chairs and waited. The prince, a man with a hooked nose, black eyes with half shut lids, regarded me curiously. He had the air of one amused. When his eyes grew accustomed to the semidarkness of the room, the count sounded a note of satisfaction.

"Ah, so you are here? You have given me a devil of a chase!"

"I return the compliment, Herr General," said Hillars, with a good humored smile. "But, may I ask, what the devil have you been chasing me for?"

For reply the count turned to the cavalryman. "Arrest that man and bind him!" he said.

"You might make the order wholesale," said I, stepping over to the side of Hillars.

"I told you there would be some sport," whispered Dan. He put his arm across my shoulders.

"And who, in the name of Weimar, are you?" bawled the count. He scrutinized me intently. Then a light of recognition broke over his face. "The other one! A nest of them!"

"Count," interposed the prince, seating himself at the table, "let me have a short talk with them before you act. There may be extenuating circumstances. Anything of this sort amuses and interests me. Let us use a little diplomacy in the matter."

"Yes," said Hillars; "let us be a little."

"And who can do it better than a journalist?" the prince laughed.

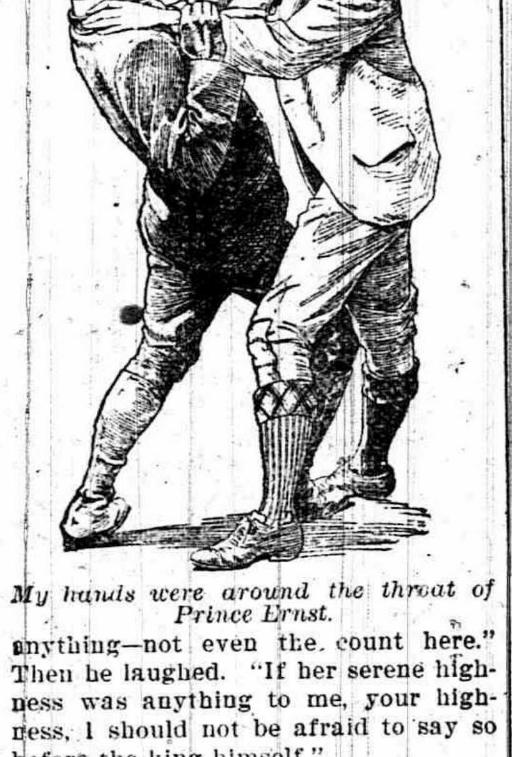
"Diplomatists," Hillars sent back.

"What is her serene highness to you?" resumed the prince.

"Nothing; positively nothing."

"Then you are afraid to acknowledge your regard for her?"

"I?" Hillars dropped his arm from my shoulders. "I am not afraid of anything—not even the count here." Then he laughed. "If her serene highness was anything to me, your highness, I should not be afraid to say so before the king himself."



My hands were around the throat of Prince Ernst.

"You impudent"— But a wave of the prince's hand silenced the count.

"Have patience, my friend. This is not impudence; it is courage and prudence. I believe," readdressing Hillars, "that once you were on the point of eloping with the Princess Hildegarde."

Hillars thrust his hands into his pockets. "So they say."

"And yet you deny your regard for her!"

"Oh, as to that affair," said Hillars easily, "it was the adventure more than anything else! It is not every man in my position who has such a chance. And then, perhaps, I saw a good newspaper story." The muscles in his jaws hardened, despite the airy tone he used.

"I see that there is nothing to be got from you." Then the prince directed his glance to me. "And you, sir; what is she to you? What is her serene highness to you?"

"She is everything in the world to me," said I.

The consternation which followed cannot be described here. The count stepped back dumfounded. Hillars regarded me as though he thought I had suddenly gone mad. The countenance of the prince alone remained unruffled.

"Count," he said, laughing, "it seems that the princess gathers lovers as a woolen coat does teasels. Her lovers—there must now be a legion!"

"You lie!" said Hillars, in an oddly suppressed tone. "You know that you lie."

The prince's lips drew to a thin line, but that was all. "Still, who will disprove it?" he asked.

"If you will allow me," said a voice behind us.

We beheld the princess framed in the doorway. There was a pallor and a look of utter weariness in her face. At the sight of her the count uncovered and the prince rose.

"Your arrival is quite timely," said he. "Here are two champions of yours. Come, which do you love?"

A fury sprang to my head, and I said: "You have too much confidence in our patience. I warn you that I have no fear of the sabers back of you."

The same sabers leaped from their scabbards and fell stiffly against their owners' shoulders instinctively.

"Has it come to this," said the princess, a superb scorn in her eyes, "that my honor must needs be defended by strangers and aliens?" For the briefest space her glance plunged into my eyes. She moved toward the prince. "And you, sir, are to be my husband?"

"It is the will of the king," said the prince, a mocking smile on his lips.

How I lusted for his blood!

"And, though my honor is doubtful," went on the woman I loved, "you still would marry me?"

"Your highness," said the prince, with a bow which entailed the sweeping of his hands, "I would marry you were your honor as"—

"What!" roared Hillars in English.

But he was a moment too late. My hands were around the throat of Prince Ernst of Wortumborg, and I was shaking him till his teeth chattered on each other like castanets. Surely I would have throttled him but for the intervention of the count and the cavalrymen. The count swung his arm around my neck, while the cavalrymen, their saber points at Hillars' breast, wrenched loose my hands. I stood glaring at him, panting and furious. He leaned against the table, gasping and coughing. Finally he recovered his composure.

"Count, I was wrong; you were right. These fellows are dangerous."

"I will fight you on any terms!" I fired back at him.

"I shall send you one of my lackeys," he replied. "Take them away, and shoot them if they resist!"

"Liberate the gentlemen," said Gretchen.

The count gazed at her in amazement.

"Liberate them?" he cried.

"I command it!"

"You?" said the prince.

"Yes. This is my principality; these are my soldiers. I command here."

This was a coup indeed.

"But we represent his majesty!" cried the count, still holding me by the throat. I was all but strangled myself.

"I care not whom you represent," said Gretchen. "I am obedient only to the king, not his minions. Release the gentlemen!"

The count's arm slowly unwound. Hillars pressed down the saber points with his hands and shook off the hand of one of the cavalrymen.

"If it be your highness' will," he said, "we will throw these intruders into the road. Might is right," waving his hand to the door which led to the barroom. The innkeeper and three others filed into the room grimly and silently. They were armed. For the first time the prince lost patience.

"This is all very well, your highness," he sneered. "You misunderstand the limits of your power to command."

"Not in any part," said Gretchen. "I am sovereign here notwithstanding the king's will is paramount to my own. These people are my people; these soldiers are fed of my bounty; this is my country till the king takes it back. You will act further at your peril."

CHAPTER XIV.

A bar of sunlight suddenly pervaded the room—red sunlight—lighting in its passing a tableau I shall never forget. Gretchen stood at her full height, her arms held closely to her sides and her hands clinched. On her face there was that half smile called consciousness of triumph. Hillars was gazing at her with his soul swimming in his eyes. And I—I had a wild desire to throw myself at her feet then and there. Over the hard set visage of the innkeeper the bar of sunlight traveled, over the scowling countenance of the prince, over the puzzled brow of the count, and, going, left a golden purple in its wake, which imperceptibly deepened. The prince was first to speak. "I protest," said he.

"Against what?" asked Gretchen.

"It is the king's will that you become my wife. He will not tolerate this attitude of yours. Your principality is in jeopardy, let me tell you."

"Does the fact that I have promised the king to become your wife detract from my power? Not a jot. Till you are my husband I am mistress here and after."

"As to that we shall see," said the prince. "Then you intend to keep your promise?"

"Is there man or woman who can say that I ever broke one?"

"Your highness, what are your commands?" It was the innkeeper who spoke. His fingers were twitching about the hammer of his carbine. He nodded approvingly toward me. My assault upon the prince had brought me again into his good graces.

Gretchen did not answer him, but she smiled kindly.

"Ah, yes," said the prince. "This is that Breunner fellow."

The innkeeper made a movement. The prince saw it, and so did I. Prince Ernst of Wortumborg was never so near death in all his life as at that moment. He knew it too.

"Your highness has a very good memory," said the innkeeper dryly.

"There are some things it were best to forget," replied the prince.

"I am pleased that your highness shares my opinion," returned the old fellow. The muzzle of the carbine was once more pointed at the ceiling.

The rest of us looked on, but we understood nothing of these passes. Even Gretchen was in the dark.

"We met long ago," said the innkeeper.

"Yes, but I have really forgotten what the subject of our discussion was," said the prince, regarding the innkeeper through half closed lids. "Perhaps he can explain."

"It is very kind of your highness," said the innkeeper, laughing maliciously. "But I am old, and my memory serves me ill."

The prince shrugged. "But we have drifted away from the present matter. Your highness, then, promises to bend to the will of the king?"

"Yes," said Gretchen. "I gave the king my promise because I had wearied of resistance, having no one to turn to—then. I shall marry you, though I detest you. But I shall be your wife only in name and not in the eyes of God."

"The latter sacrifice was not asked of you," smiled the prince.

"I shall depart this day for the capital," continued Gretchen. "I warn you not to inflict your presence upon me during the journey. Now go. The air while you remain is somewhat difficult to breathe."

The prince surveyed the menacing faces which surrounded him, then gathered up his hat and gloves.

"I see that your highness will be a dutiful wife," he said, smoothing the silk of his hat with his elbow. He blew into his gloves and carefully drew them over his hands. "A pleasant journey to your highness," he added. "Come, count. And these?" waving his hand toward Hillars and me.

"They have my fullest protection."

He smiled villainously, then walked to the door with a measured tread. At the door he turned. There was a flash of rage in his eyes, but he quickly subdued it.

"Auf wiedersehen!" with a sweeping glance which took in all of us and particularly me.

He passed out, the count following him soberly. The two cavalrymen thrust their sabers into the scabbards with a clank and made as though to follow.

"Wait," said Gretchen. "I shall have need of you. You will escort me to the station. Now you may go."

They saluted gravely. They appreciated the situation. The princess was their bread and butter.

"Your highness," said Hillars, "there has been a mistake."

"A mistake!" repeated Gretchen wonderingly.

"Yes; they have made you a princess, whereas they should have made you a queen. Will you forgive me the trouble I have caused?"

"It is I who must ask forgiveness of you," she said, with a sad smile. "You may kiss my hand, sir."

Hillars remained somewhat long over it.

"And how comes it that you gentlemen know each other?" she asked.

"Damon and Pythias, your highness," answered Hillars. "We were brought up together, and we have shared our tents and kettles. I recommend Pythias to you as a brave gentleman." Then he came to me. "You are a brave fellow, Jack," grasping my hand. "Good luck to you. I had an idea. It has returned. Now, then, innkeeper, come with me."

"With you, and where?" asked the innkeeper. If there was one thing for which he could not account, it was the presence of Hillars at the inn.

"Never mind where, but come," answered Hillars gayly. He bent and whispered something into the old fellow's ear. It was something which pleased him, for he screwed his lips into a smile and took the white hand of the whisperer in his brawny fist and nigh crushed it.

"Well, well! It doesn't matter where you came from. Here, you," to the trio behind him, "go back to the stables." They filed out. Then the innkeeper took Hillars by the arm. "Come along; time passes."

"And where are you going?" I asked anxiously. Hillars should not have passed from my sight but for Gretchen.

"We'll be back shortly," he answered. "You will know all about it then, my son."

He stood on the sill of the door, a handsome picture. His gray eyes sparkled, his face was full of excitement and there was a color in his cheeks. There was no sign here of the dissipated man of the night before. It was Hillars as I had seen him in the old days. But for his nineteenth century garb he might have just stepped down from a frame—a gallant by Fortuny, who loved the awakened animal in man. The poise was careless, but graceful, and the smile was debonair. His eyes were holding Gretchen's. A moment passed, another and another; then, "Long live and God bless her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde!" And he was gone.

And as he disappeared a shadow of some sort passed before my eyes, and a something dull and heavy pressed upon my heart. Presently came the sound of beating hoofs, and then all became still.

Gretchen and I were alone. Gretchen appeared to be studying the blue veins in her hands which she listlessly held before her. An interval of three or four minutes passed; still she remained in that pathetic attitude, silent and motionless.

"Gretchen," said I, "have you nothing to say?"

"Yes." Her eyes raised to the level of mine, and I saw that they were deep in tears. "Herr, I shall say to you that which I have never said to any man and that which I shall never say to any man again. I may say it now because it is sinless. I love you! I love you, and, loving you, God knows what the future without you shall be. Yes, I love you. Take me once in your arms and kiss me and let me go—forever."

Then, with a smile which partly shielded a sob, her arms went around my neck and her face lay close to mine. Heaven knows which was the greater, the joy or the pain.

"Gretchen, think!" I cried distractedly. "What is a prince or a king to you and me, who love?"

"There is honor," gently. She caressed my cheek with her fingers.

"Honor!" I cried vehemently. "Is it honorable to marry the man you do not love and break the heart of the one you do?"

She did not answer, but her arms fell from my neck, and she approached the window. The passing river was reflected in her eyes. Her reverie was a short one.

"Listen, herr. I will tell you why it is honorable. The prince and the king? I fear the one as little as I do the other. It is not the prince, it is not the king, it is not the principality. Herr, I have come near to being a very wicked woman, who was about to break the most sacred promise a sovereign can make. Before I came here a delegation of my people approached me. On bended knees they asked me not to voluntarily return the principality to the king, who was likely to give them a ruler rapacious or cruel or indifferent. And, while they understood what a sacrifice it meant to me, they asked me to bend my will to the king's and wed the prince, vowing that I alone should be recognized as their sovereign ruler. Since my coronation they said that they had known the first happiness in years. Herr, it was so pathetic! I love my people, who, after all, are not adopted, since I was born here. So I gave my promise, and, heaven forgive me, I was about to break it!

"There are some things, herr, which the publican does not understand. One of these is the duty a sovereign owes to the people. The woman in me wishes to follow your fortunes, though they carry her to the ends of the world, but the sovereign sees but one path—honor and duty. What is one human heart to a hundred thousand? A grain of sand. Herr, let mine be broken. I shall not murmur. Alas, to be a princess, a puppet in this tinsel show of kings and queens! It is my word and the king's will which have made my happiness an impossibility. Though I love you, I wish never to see you again. I shall be wife but in name, yet I may not have a lover. I am not a woman of the court. I am proud of my honor, though the man who is to be my husband doubts that."

"No, Gretchen," said I, "he does not doubt it, but he wishes me to do so. I believe in your innocence as I believe in your love."

Plague Raging.

Brussels, Jan. 22.—According to the Petit Bleu, bubonic plague is raging among the British troops in Cape Colony, and many deaths that are attributed to enteric fever and dysentery are really due to plague.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

ONCE SHE RECEIVED $3 A WEEK, BUT NOW SHE HAS A FORTUNE.

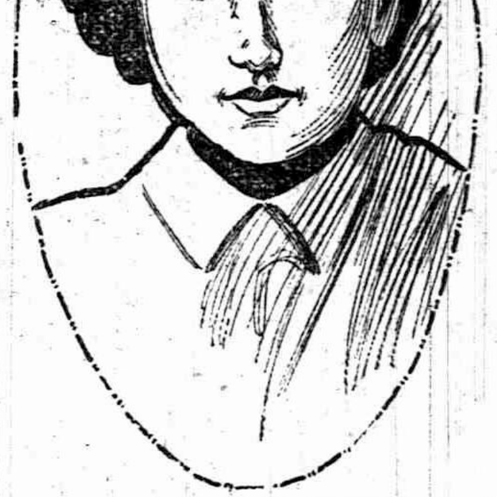
Two Sorts of Women—When Babe Is Teething—Mrs. Neve, Famous Traveler—The Bath and Longevity. Lady de Grey In Trade.

Miss Margaret Kelly, once a telephone girl in Boston, but now the owner of several of the richest claims in the Klondike country, has been visiting her old home in Boston. She lives at Atlin, on the Yukon, while in Alaska.

Miss Kelly was one of five young women who accompanied their brothers—John Kelly, Frank Lennihan, Edward Deneen, Fred Recke and William McGuire—from Boston to Atlin in the spring of 1896. The names of the girls were Nellie and Anna McGuire, Alice Lennihan, Maud Deneen and Miss Kelly.

"It is so long since we went in over the trail," said Miss Kelly, "that conditions have entirely changed now. Where the journey once involved much hardship, especially for women, it can now be made in luxury and at comparatively little cost.

"Mr. Lennihan was drowned by falling off a raft in 1898 and Nellie McGuire died of pneumonia last year. These deaths made our labors in that wild country seem hardly worth the cost, but so far as financial results are concerned we have done well.



MISS MARGARET KELLY.

"I had three claims up the river and sold one of these at a good figure the first year. Then the McGuire girls and myself opened a small hotel. By degrees we enlarged the hotel until in 1897 we sold it out for $11,000.

"Then we invested in more claims, one of which was taken away from us by the government because there was a flaw in our title. We worked two and cleaned up $40,000 in six months. Eventually we sold them for $400,000 cash and intended to start for Nome. Then word came that Nome was not so rosy a prospect as early reports had indicated, so we began closing out our other interests to return east.

"My former occupation was that of a telephone girl. I used to sit and say 'Hello!' all day long for $3 a week.

"There is still money to be made in the Klondike, but it will hereafter fall into the hands of organized capital, which now has control of the mines and of nearly every other valuable interest."

Royalty Has Measles.

Berlin, Jan. 22.—In consequence of attending the obsequies of the late Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar, a number of persons of high rank contracted the measles in the infected schloss. The duke regent of Mecklenburg Schwerin and the duchess, who is a daughter of the late grand duke, are down with the disease, as is also the young grand duke of Saxe Weimar himself.

The Chicago Tribune

s a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think. Is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but is independent in the best sense of the word. It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best, and Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West

James Montague is the veteran picture framer of the town, having been in the business for thirteen years. He carries a fine stock of mouldings and mat papers and can artistically frame anything from the baby's picture to a fine etching without losing his temper or breaking a glass. He has even been known to postpone a discussion of the political situation to give advice in regard to the framing of a family group or a picture cut from a illustrated seed catalogue. That these efforts are appreciated is shown by the number of pictures on hand, sufficient to stock a small art gallery.

Star Course, Thursday, January 24

The Ariel Ladies Sextette, the famous Smith sisters, including Miss Marguerite, the queen of child impersonators.

This unique and popular organization is composed of six sisters who have sung together from childhood.

There are four more attractions to come yet in the Star Course, all high grade: The Smith Sisters, the Carbury-Durno Company, Dr. Frank Crane and John Temple Graves. And the committee have decided to sell season tickets for these four attractions for the small sum of 50c. They are making this price in order that everyone who cares to attend can do so. Plenty of good seating will be provided.

John DeMotte: The Ariel Ladies Sextette are an ideal mixture of what Dr. Hawes calls "Music and Morals." Their concerts always leave a sweet refrain in your ear, and a nobler ambition is given the heart. If you haven't heard them, you ought.

Fred Emerson Brooks: Miss Marguerite Smith is in my opinion, the best child impersonator on the American platform.

Indianapolis, Ind., Journal: She has no equal in the world, as a delineator of child character.

Cleveland, O., Leader: She is a genius in her work which is always dainty, pleasing and artistic.

Blue Lodge Royal Entertainers.

A social and enjoyable meeting was held at the Masonic Temple on Friday evening. Manchester and Clinton Masonic Lodges having been invited to visit their Masonic brothers in Tecumseh, about 75 members came by special train, arriving here about 6:45. There were also present several from neighboring lodges, Dundee, Milan, Onsted and Milford, Mich., one from Brandon, Vt., and one from Nebraska, and about 125 members of Tecumseh Lodge.

The work of the order was exemplified by Manchester Lodge and in such a manner as to receive the highest praise from all who were present. They are not only well skilled in the work of the order, but they are a jolly good lot of fellows. The degree work was completed to the entire satisfaction of the candidate about 10 o'clock and from that time until after midnight was spent in a social way, including a banquet which was served to over 200 persons. The visiting brothers expressed themselves as being well pleased with the reception given them by their Tecumseh brothers.

The residents of Jefferson, Pittsford and Adams township have also raised over $400 for him.

A washing woman in this place this week was about to put the washing of a young lady customer into the washtub and feeling something in the toe of the stocking, investigated and found a roll of money consisting of $27. The money was sent to the owner of the stocking, who was surprised when handed the package, and inquired "did I leave that money in the stocking?—Dundee Reporter.

The Adrian Telegram says that a group photo in the show case of J. [illegible] Stevenson, the south Main street photographer, is attracting considerable attention. The photo shows Chas. S. Whitney, wife and baby in the center, flanked by two grandmothers, Mrs. Lucy M. Sickles and Channing Whitney and two great grandmothers, the mothers of Mrs Sickles and Mrs. Channing Whitney. It is a remarkable family gathering.

Hudson Post 18: Two young men named Baker and Baker were arrested yesterday by Deputy Sheriff Pease just as they were about to go south on the Cincinnati Northern train, their tickets having been purchased. They are accused of having taken $160 from John Williams, of Clayton. When arrested Baker had the money, but claimed he did not commit larceny, as Williams entrusted him with it. Officers Pease was ordered by the sheriff to detain the young men pending investigation.

Several of our married ladies were comparing the smart traits of their offsprings the other day. One said her little girl talked when she was a year old, another said that her little boy could say mamma and papa when he was ten months old. An old bachelor who was in the next room trying to read "chipped in" and said that wasn't anything wonderful. He had read in the Bible that Job cursed the day he was born. That settled it and the ladies adjourned.—Petersburg Sun.

JACK TAR'S GROWL.

A Story Illustrating the Sailor's Habit of Grumbling.

The author of "From Edinburgh to the Antarctic," writing of the sailor's habit of grumbling, says: "The dinners are all the same—that is to say, Monday's dinners are all alike, and what we have today we shall have this day six months hence. Jack's forefather this day 100 years ago had the same menu and made the same uncomplimentary remarks about the dishes, and 100 years hence on this day Jack's children will growl over their salt horse and plumless duff." The author also tells this "yarn" to illustrate that Jack's habit of grumbling can't be cured and must be endured:

Once upon a time there lived a skipper whose wife said to him that if she went to sea the poor men would never find fault with their food. Her husband took her with him on a voyage, and the good woman attended to the cooking in the galley herself.

The scouse was thick with fresh vegetables, the bread was white and without weevils, the meat was good, and the duff was almost half plums, but still the men growled.

Then the skipper's wife thought of the hens she had brought on board to lay eggs for her husband's breakfast. She took them out of the coop, wrung their necks with her own fair hands, plucked them, roasted them and sent them to the forecastle on the cabin china.

"Now the men," she said to herself, "will know how much we think of their comfort."

At eight bells she stole forward to the forecastle to listen to the praise of her skill as a cook. She looked down the hatch and saw a big black fist plunge a fork into the hen and heard a hoarse voice growl, "I say, Bill, what d'ye think this 'ere bloody fowl died of?"

A DOMESTIC JAR.

The Little Dialogue With Which the Proceedings Were Enlivened.

Here's a little dolly dialogue that was overheard in a $24 a month Capitol hill mansion one evening last week:

She—Why, oh, why, did I ever marry you?

He—Because I was a good thing.

She—You are becoming positively coarse.

He—Association.

She—You pay no attention whatever to my little wishes.

He—What's the use of chasing a car after you've caught it?

She—I believe you have been drinking again.

He—No such luck.

She—I'm in rags.

He—Well, we'll do a sketch. So'm I.

She—I haven't been to the theater for two weeks.

He—Yours is a sad story.

She—Brute!

He—Ours is a peaceful home.

She—Are you going down town tonight?

He—If I can swing you for car fare.

She—I have only $3 in my purse.

He—Hetty Green!

She—I saw a pair of high heeled patent leathers today, reduced to $8, that I must and shall have.

He—I'dje see any men's brogans for $1.39?

She—Why don't you get shaved?

He—Waiting for pay day.

She—Don't you know the rent and the gas will be due this pay day?

He—Then I'll cut out the shave.

She—I wish I had never left mamma, so I do.

He—Others, others!

She—I have a good notion to go right back to her this minute.

He—Have you got an umbrella?

She—Oh, you—you—g-g-government c-c-clerk! (Tears. Curtain.)—Washington Post.

The Neglected Voice.

The voice is the most common and at the same time the most complex of human faculties. When we listen to it, we realize nothing of the many influences at work in its use. Yet it represents the character, the mood, the temperament and the health of the individual when left to run in its own way. If uncontrolled, it will develop much as a flower garden will develop; the rank and weedy nature will come to the front, and the tones of exquisite beauty will be obscured. Bad daily habits in the use of the voice will give it many disagreeable qualities. If controlled, the voice will keep its weeds in the background and permit only its beauties to be known. If cultivated, the weeds will be taken out and the flowers developed.—Pittsburg Press.

An Unexpected Result.

"You know how superstitious Bloxham is?"

"Is he?"

"Yes; he picked up a pin in the street the other day with the point turned directly toward him."

"Go on."

"An hour afterward he received a telegram announcing the death of an uncle from whom he hadn't heard for several years."

"And the uncle died immensely rich and left him all his property?"

"Not much! He had to pay the funeral expenses."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Robbers Visit Adrian and Carry Off Silks and Satins.

Sunday night the gang of burglars, who have been making frequent visits to the towns about this part of the country, made J. V. DeFoe & Son at Adrian a little call. The intruders gained admittance through a hall on the second floor and by breaking open two doors they had everything their own way. Leaving the rest of the stock unharmed, they proceeded to the silk room where they selected a quantity of silk and satins, took them to the cloak room on the second floor and sorted them over. They were evidently judges of good silk as they selected about $1,000 worth of the best goods and carried it away.

The robbery was not discovered until the next morning when Will DeFoe came down to open up the store. He started to sweep out the silk department and noticed that the contents of the shelves had been disturbed. Sheriff Shepherd was notified and messages have been sent to every town within a radius of 100 miles, also to the police in Chicago, Detroit and other points, but no trace has as yet been found.

WINGS.

The gods but half reluctantly
Grant us the gift of song;
Yet, tawny throat, they give to thee
Pure notes and pinions strong.

To those blue worlds that arch above
We look, aspire—and fail.
Thou, thou dost mount the skies we love,
The stars we never scale.

Thou knowest not, winged soul, the fires
Of that old discord strange,
The vast and infinite desires,
The all too finite range.

So sing for us! Our throats are still,
And song no solace brings—
To whom the gods have given the will,
But not, alas, the wings!

THE DATE OF THE FLOOD.

Bible Facts on Which the Bishop Based His Question.

Some people had fun over the reported rejection of eight candidates for the African Methodist ministry in the south by the examining bishop because they could not tell the date of the flood. Nevertheless the bishop, who asked the question knew what he was doing. It may not have been a fair question, but there is a concise answer to it in the Bible, and he no doubt thought that the eight candidates, if they were well versed in the Old Testament, would answer it at once.

The date of the flood was 1,656 years after the birth of Adam, in the second month and the seventeenth day. It began then and continued for 40 days and nights. This is how it is figured: The third verse of the fifth chapter of Genesis reads thus, "And Adam lived 130 years and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image, and called his name Seth." Then in the sixth verse it is told that Seth lived 105 years and begat Enos. Adam, says the fourth verse, lived 800 years after the birth of Seth, and the latter after the birth of Enos lived 807 years. So it goes on. Enos begat Cainan when he was 90; Cainan begat Mahalaleel when he was 75; Mahalaleel begat Jared when he was 65; Jared begat Enoch when he was 162. Methuselah was born to Enoch when the latter was 65, and when Methuselah was 187 he begat Lamech, and Lamech's son Noah came into the world when the father was 182. This brings us down to the birth of Noah, which, according to the added ages of the several patriarchs at the time their sons were born, occurred 1,056 years after the birth of Adam.

In the seventh chapter of Gensis the eleventh verse reads as follows: "In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up and all the windows of heaven were opened." This was the flood, and it came to pass in the year 1656 after the birth of Adam.—New York Sun.

TOOK HIS ADVICE.

A Veterinary Surgeon of Battle Creek Tells About It.

How many times in life a few words of good advice, coming from a friend one can depend upon, will save us hours perhaps months of misery. The following which coming from Battle Creek will interest our readers. Dr. Oliver Guiteaux, veterinary surgeon of that city, a well known man there, as well as in Kalamazoo and Marshall, speaks of his experience with the little conqueror and result of a few timely words of advice, he says:

"I was standing in Amberg & Murphy's drug store in Battle Creek one day when a friend of mine came in and asked for a box of kidney pills. After he had made his purchase I said quietly to him, "You have made a mistake in buying those." His reply was "How is that? I said Doan's Kidney Pills are worth all the others put together. As he wanted my reasons for thinking so I told him my kidneys had bothered me for years, that I suffered from backache until I could scarcely stand it, that I had nearly every symptom to be found where the kidneys are affected, that I had used remedy after remedy including box after box of the one he had just purchased, and that until I used Doan's Kidney Pills I might have taken as many spoonfuls of water. In fact, I think some of them hurt me. A couple of weeks after this I met him on the street, when he said: "Doc., Doan's Kidney Pills are just as you represented. After using the box about which we had a conversation in Amberg & Murphy's drug store I was as bad as ever. I then procured Doan's and stuck to their treatment until they cured me."

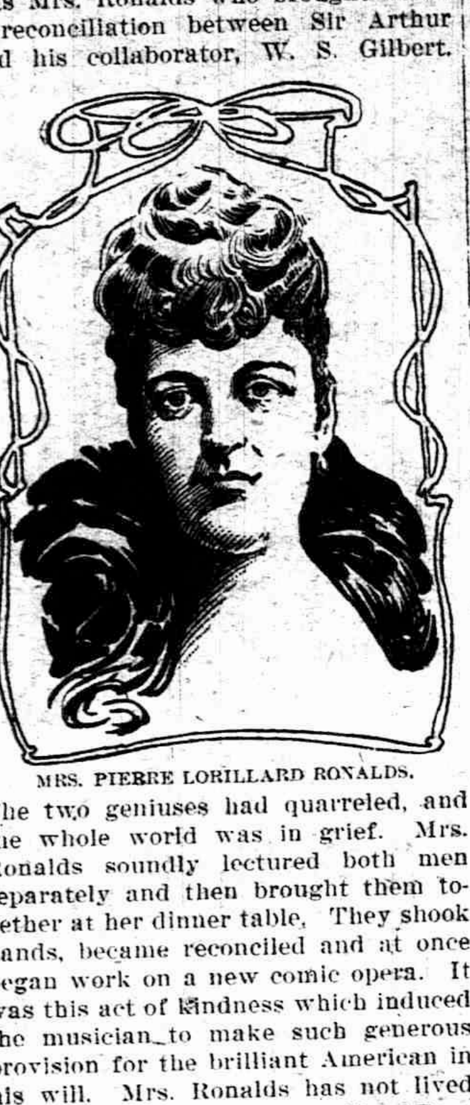
SIR ARTHUR'S FRIEND.

The Lady to Whom the Great Composer Bequeathed a Legacy.

Mrs. Pierre Lorillard Ronalds, the American lady to whom the late Sir Arthur Sullivan bequeathed a legacy and the original score of "The Lost Chord," has been a resident of London for 30 years and was one of the great composer's dearest friends. It was Mrs. Ronalds who brought about a reconciliation between Sir Arthur and his collaborator, W. S. Gilbert.



MRS. PIERRE LORILLARD RONALDS.

The two geniuses had quarreled, and the whole world was in grief. Mrs. Ronalds soundly lectured both men separately and then brought them together at her dinner table. They shook hands, became reconciled and at once began work on a new comic opera. It was this act of kindness which induced the musician to make such generous provision for the brilliant American in his will. Mrs. Ronalds has not lived with her husband, Pierre Lorillard Ronalds, for 31 years. She is now 69 and her spouse nearly 80. He has lived alone in his mansion at Newton, Conn., and only recently filed a suit for divorce to prevent Mrs. Ronalds inheriting her share of his estate. It was her prospect of a penniless old age that induced Sullivan to aid her. Mrs. Ronalds was formerly Mary Francis Carter of Boston.

Admiration With Limitations.

A man there is in this town whose most treasured possession is a short, fat wife. She is not cherished because she is short and fat, but it is undeniably part and parcel of her charm in the eyes of her devoted husband. And yet so "set" is man when a prejudice has once laid hold of him that this adoring benedict instead of being blind to all her defects and proud of all her graces put his foot down determinedly the other day and announced that as his beloved Clorinda never could put her feet to the floor in a car except when she was standing he would prefer her to catch pneumonia and die rather than wear a short frock. The short, fat wife wept, but he was obdurate. "I mean what I say, Clorinda. I'd rather let you go out in a blizzard with a train, my dear, than have your little feet dangling twixt skirt and floor in a public conveyance. Even if you got pneumonia and became another angel I could stand it better than to have you look ridiculous. And wings would be so much more becoming to you than a rainy day skirt."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Mrs. Wu Is Surprised.

"While we were living in England," writes the wife of the Chinese minister in Success, "I was often surprised at the ways of the English girls, but when I came here I found that American girls enjoy a still greater freedom. Perhaps it may have good results. In China girls are prevented from having any knowledge of the world until they are married, and for this reason they are always helpless and thoroughly dependent. Even after marriage they learn but little of real life unless they are very poor and are obliged to work hard. Now, American girls seem always to be able to take care of themselves. I am more and more astonished every day at the things American girls are able to do. They say there is hardly any profession which women do not follow and that sometimes they are more successful than men. When I write of such things to my friends in China, they can hardly believe me."

Rheumatism.

Nobody knows all about it; and nothing, now known, will always cure it.

Doctors try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, when they think it is caused by imperfect digestion of food. You can do the same.

It may or may not be caused by the failure of stomach and bowels to do their work. If it is, you will cure it; if not, you will do no harm.

The way to cure a disease is to stop its cause, and help the body get back to its habit of health.

When Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil does that, it cures; when it don't, it don't cure. It never does harm.

THE CHANGELESS PLAYS.

I've wandered to the theater, I've been to see the show;
I've listened to the same old jokes we heard long years ago.
The villain died the same old way—his death was hard and slow—
The last act saw his finish, Tom, like twenty years ago!

The heroine, she suffered, Tom; you should have heard her weep;
Her hair was golden in its hue, for peroxide is cheap.
She found the missing will, though, Tom; she always did, you know,
When we went to the theater some twenty years ago.

The jokes were just the same ones, Tom, about the ma-in-law,
Likewise the goat, the stovepipe and the female suffrage jaw,
And, yes, they sprung the one about the good old baldhead row;
It sounded as it used to, Tom, some twenty years ago.

The hero struts about the stage and hoarsely whispers, "Ah,
I see it all!" And then the crafty villain mutters "Bah!"
The play is just the same, dear Tom; the plot is thickened so,
It looks the same as when we went some twenty years ago.

The soubrette is the same, old boy; she has the same old wink.
Her cheeks are just as radiant; they have the same soft pink.
She's billed as Little Tottie now, and, say, she doesn't show
Her age as much as when she played some twenty years ago.

The songs are full of "mother, dears," the star takes all the stage.
The jokes and other dialogue show very little age,
But youngest of the lot, dear Tom, the soubrette's cheeks still glow
As pinkly as they used to do some twenty years ago.

Financial Dealings Of Dugway's Boy

He Tried Hard to Make Money, but Always Failed.

Dugway was out, but was expected back shortly, and Vance undertook to entertain the visitor. He was in a confidential mood.

"I've been tryin to make some money again," he said.

"So?" said the visitor. "But that's nothing new, is it?"

"Well, I don't know," replied the boy, curling himself comfortably among the pillows on the lounge. "I s'pose I try often enough, but it looks like I ain't a money maker. Pa says I am cut out for a confidence man, but I don't seem to get the best of him ever. Say, do you keep books, an do you know when you have too much money?"

"I never found out that I had too much."

"Well, pa has, an it makes him feel bad. When I go down to the office I see all kinds of money around—dollars an half dollars an quarters till you can't rest, an nobody seems to pay any attention to it, particular. I ast pa about it, an he said that he knew to a cent how much they was because he kept books an made them balance every night. I was wonderin whether he'd know the difference if I took a little of it, just what I needed. I don't like to ast pa for money."

"Why?"

Vance wriggled a little and bit his handkerchief. "Well," he said at last, "he always wants to know what I want to do with it."

"Impertinent curiosity. Why don't you get him to make you a fixed allowance—so much a week?"

"I did try. I wanted him to give me a nickel a day. I don't want a whole lot of money, but I like to have some. Ted Cunningham always has money, an when he wants me to pitch to a crack or anything I have to own up that I'm broke."

"Puts you in an embarrassing situation."

"I thought I would see whether pa could tell about his money, an so when Mr. Jones was gone to lunch an pa was in the back room I put the 50 cents that you gave me that day in with the other 50 cents in the tray. I didn't like to take any out, because I didn't know but it might be so. Then ma an me went home, but we had to wait dinner for pa that night, an then he didn't come for ever so long after we was through. Ma ast him what made him so late, an he said that he had been havin the dickens own time over at the office because Mr. Jones an him couldn't make the cash balance. There was 50 cents over. He looked awful mad about it, an ma didn't say anything more about him bein too late for dinner, an I didn't like to say about me havin put the 50 cents in, because I thought he wouldn't like it. I thought the best thing I could do was to tell ma, so I told her, an she said that I had better go to pa an tell him I was sorry an how it happened. I didn't do it, but I guess she did, because pa threw down my 50 cents at the breakfast table in the mornin an told me never to let him catch me at any such monkey tricks as that again or he'd make me need skin graftin. He said that he worked four hours on account of what I'd done, an it wouldn't have been so bad if there had been 50 cents too little. I ast him why, an he said that then he could have called it a mistake an paid the 50 cents out of his own pocket. I don't see why he couldn't have given the 50 cents away to somebody an said it was a mistake, do you?"

"It looks to me like false logic," said the visitor. "Did you make up your mind to fix it for a shortage next time?"

"I don't know what you mean. I didn't do anything. I told ma I wanted to make some money, an she told me to think up some way an she would help me if she could, and so I thought I might raise some chickens, so I went to Mrs. McClellan an ast her what she would sell me a dozen chickens for. She said that depended on what I wanted, whether it was Plymouth Rocks or Brown Leghorns or banties or what. So I said Plymouth Rocks, an she told me she would let me have a dozen of them for $25.

"I knew that I couldn't get that much money, an I thought I might just as well buy eggs an set them under a common hen."

"That was a bright idea."

"Yes; Mrs. McClellan told me it would be the best thing I could do, an then I could raise a dozen chickens an sell them for $25 myself. Ma gave me the dollar to buy the eggs an loaned me a hen what wanted to set. It takes a hen a awful long time to hatch chickens, though. I used to go out most every mornin an raise her up to see if she had got any, an she squawked an pecked at my hand. Gee! But it was about three weeks before I got any chickens, an then there was only three of 'em. That old hen wouldn't wait for the others to hatch, an when I broke 'em open to see if there was any chickens inside of 'em I wisht I had let 'em alone. I guess that old hen knew all right."

"What was the trouble?"

Vance held his snub nose expressively between his thumb and forefinger.

"I was slidin down the kitchen roof," he continued, "an I knocked a board down, an it fell on one of the chickens an squashed it dead, an the other two was both roosters. I wanted some money one time an I sold one of 'em to the lady next door for a quarter. That was all she'd give me for it. I told her it was a blooded Plymouth Rock, but she said she didn't mind that, just so long as it would make a good fry. I kept the other one all summer an then took it to Mrs. McClellan an ast her what she'd give me for it.

"She said that she'd trade me a pair of rabbits for it an I could make more money raisin rabbits than I could raisin chickens an the rabbits was worth $1 a pair. So I took the rabbits. One of them was named Dick an the other Lizzie. I used to like Dick the best. Ma wouldn't let me keep them up in my room, so I had to build a place for them out in the wood shed an keep them there, except when I turned them loose. They was awful cute. Lizzie used to eat dough out of my hand. She liked dough better than anything."

"Haven't you got them still?"

"No. I gave them away. I got kinder tired of tendin 'em, an they didn't have any little rabbits at all. I couldn't see how I was goin to make any money out of 'em, an when I said anything about it pa he'd laugh.

"I ast Mrs. McClellan about it, an she said that hers had had two or three litters since she sold me mine, an she couldn't see how it was. Pa said they didn't have lucky names, at least Lizzie didn't. He said she ought to have been named Willie or Pete."

"Then the rabbit business wasn't a success?"

"N'huh. I lost all I put into it exceptin the quarter I got from the lady next door for the little rooster."

"How about your mother?"

"Oh, she was only backin me. She knew she was takin chances. I wisht I had that dollar back, though. I need a dollar the worst way. Don't you know a good, easy way for a boy to get a dollar? I don't want to have to wait for it too long. I'd ast pa to give me one, only I ast him for one yesterday, an he wouldn't give it to me. I ain't goin to ast him again."—Chicago Record.

A Bit of Hoyt's Wit.

In his palmy, healthful days almost every act of Hoyt was an anecdote, and there were very many of his acts. One that will appeal particularly to theatrical people is told by an actor as follows:

"Hoyt made many friends, and some of them were real fast friends. Two of the fastest in both the affectionate and convivial sense he took with him in the production of one of his successful comedies in connection with the business management of the piece. Now, it is true of all theatrical management that there is always 'rivalry between the man ahead of the show' and the 'man back with the show' as to which will be the whole thing. After these two men had been on the road with the company for several weeks a strong rivalry grew up, and the man ahead of the show billed himself on the programmes as manager and the other as agent. Of course the reduced gentlemen 'kicked,' and to settle the dispute the man who was the whole thing wired Hoyt in some anger, 'I want to know how I shall bill —— on the house programmes.' Quick as a flash the answer came from Hoyt, 'Bill him as excess baggage.—Hoyt.'"—Kansas City Star.

Two Constitutions.

The Prince of Wales, even from his early years, was thoroughly "dosed" in English constitutional history, says a London correspondent. When quite a boy, he was daily "ground" in this branch of education and consequently grew to dislike it most cordially. The prince, tractable as he always was, once openly rebelled at this constant "grinding" and said to his tutor:

"I hate this study, sir! It is so dry!"

"Oh," replied the tutor, somewhat shocked, "but it is most imperative that you should know all about the constitution of the country you will one day have to rule and govern, most imperative."

"Yes, sir," smartly replied the prince, "the English constitution is important, I know. But what about my constitution?"

Patti's Autograph Fan.

In days to come the world will crowd to see Mme. Patti's autograph fan. Though comparatively plain, it is one of those few objects that gather value as time rolls on. Even now many of the signatures written across this dainty piece of workmanship could not again be repeated. The late empress of Austria, Alexander II of Russia, the old German emperor, William I—to these three signatures now attach a pathetic interest, the more so when it is remembered that the first two died by the hands of assassins. Mme. Patti was even fortunate enough to obtain not only the signature, but a long sentence, in Queen Victoria's flowing handwriting, "If King Lear spoke the truth when he said that a sweet voice was the most precious gift a woman can possess, you, my dear Adelina, must be the richest woman in the world."

Women Teachers Preferred.

Mrs. Susan B. Anthony wrote to the board of education of Virginia, asking whether there was any discrimination in favor of males in the public schools of that state.

The secretary of the board has answered that if there is any discrimination it is in favor of females, women doing five-eighths of the teaching in the public schools of the state, and that the courts recently recognized a woman as the head of the family.—Philadelphia Press.

His Limit.

"I'm getting along," said Mr. Cumrox. "I'm progressing slowly, but surely."

"In what?"

"Culture. I've been traveling around with Mrs. C. and the girls until I'm getting right refined. But there's one thing I don't think I'll achieve. I don't believe I'll ever be able to go into an antique store and tell the difference between bric-a-brac and junk."—Washington Star.

Too Refined.

"No," said Farmer Meddergrass, "that Boston feller that comes here to run the paper doesn't seem to get along very well. Our folks ain't much for style, an when he referred to a skin game as 'an epidermal pastime' they thought he was becomin a little too highfalutin."—Baltimore American.

HE WAS CONFIRMED.

James S. Harlan to be Attorney-General of Porto Rico.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The senate, in executive session Monday, confirmed the nomination of James S. Harlan to be attorney-general of Porto Rico. The final vote was reached after a discussion of more than two hours' duration, and when announced stood 43 to 21 in favor of confirmation. All the republicans cast their votes in the affirmative and two or three democrats voted with them.

The session was characterized by a spirited colloquy between Senators Chandler and Hawley, in which bitter personal language was used. The controversy grew out of a letter written by Senator Chandler in 1877, and which was read by Senator Pettigrew, concerning the controversy over the Hayes-Tilden election in which reference was made to the part taken by Senator Hawley and Justice Harlan (neither then occupying his present place) in the settlement of the Louisiana controversy of that time. In that letter Mr. Chandler stated that a commission, of which those two gentlemen were members, had been sent to Louisiana by President Hayes to destroy the Packard state government. This having been accomplished, Mr Chandler said the president then undertook to "recognize" the members of the commission, giving Gen. Harlan the appointment of an associate justice and offering Gen. Hawley the place of director of the Paris exposition, which the latter had declined Mr. Chandler said, because of the inadequacy of the salary.

When this point in the article was reached, Mr. Hawley interrupted in somewhat excited manner to denounce the statement as false, which he did in very emphatic and plain language. Mr. Chandler replied in like manner saying that the article had been prepared by him 23 years ago; that it had never before been contradicted, and that he still stood by it. He added that the whole subject was ancient history and announced his intention to vote for Mr. Harlan's confirmation Senators Spooner, Mason and Lindsay made brief speeches. Mr. Mason spoke of Mr. Harlan's qualifications as a lawyer and said that he did not think any the less of Justice Harlan because of his attachment for his family. Mr. Spooner said there appeared to be no opposition except that of Senator Pettigrew.

Referring to Senator Spooner's remarks, Mr. Pettigrew quoted extracts from editorials in a number of newspapers in reprobation of Mr. Harlan's nomination. He said he had no purpose to delay a vote and when he concluded the ballot was taken.

Senator Lodge gave notice that today he will move an executive session for the consideration of the Spanish treaty.

A Peculiar Accident.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The torpedo boat Bailey has come to grief again. The accident which disabled her in this case was peculiar. While lying at Newport, about to undertake a trial trip on the following day, the intense cold froze the water in her boilers, bursting a number of tubes. The boat has been sent back to New York for repairs and the trial board has been ordered home. It is probable that she cannot be made ready for another trial before spring.

Stole Registered Letter.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The chief inspector of the postoffice department has received a dispatch from Chicago stating that John Hansen, a railroad baggageman, has been arrested charged with larceny of a registered letter containing $2,000. The loss of this letter was reported by an Iowa railroad postal clerk Jan. 14. The dispatch says that the letter was found buried in Hansen's cellar at Hampton, Ia., and all the money was recovered.

Will Not Be Built.

Boston, Jan. 22.—The Hanley centerboard yacht, which was to be a competitor in the trial races of cup defenders, will not be built, according to the statement Monday night of one of the men who offered to give financial aid to the project. The reason given is that the men who intended to be the sponsors for the boat were divided over the matter of material, many wanting a metal hull, while others held to a wooden craft.

Lotteries Condemned.

Berlin, Jan. 22.—In the Prussian diet Monday, when the lottery question was under consideration, there was some criticism of the project, favored by Emperor William, for the erection of a German pantheon near the Schloss in Berlan by lottery. A number of the members sweepingly condemned state lotteries for whatever purpose instituted.

Jeffries in Training.

Cincinnati, Jan. 22.—James J. Jeffries, who is matched to fight Gus Ruhlin at convention hall Feb. 15, arrived Monday from New York and repaired to his training grounds. Accompanying him were his trainer, Bill Delaney, his brother, Jack Jeffries, his sparring partner, Bob Armstrong, and his secretary, J. P. Egan. The opponents of the fight, while not disclosing their plans, still declare their belief that the fight will not occur.

Paid His Respects.

Washington, Jan. 22.—Among the visitors at the White House Monday was Col. Russell Harrison, son of the former president, whose exit from the army has been widely commented upon. He called to pay his respects to Secretary Cartelyou and his old friends in the executive mansion.

An Estimate of Cost.

Washington, Jan. 22.—The secretary of war has transmitted to the house the report of the chief of engineers, containing the estimate of the cost of obtaining a channel 26 feet deep and 200 feet wide across the outer bar at Brunswick harbor, Georgia. The estimate is $200,000.

A Settler.

A 5-year-old boy went with his mother to make a call. The lady of the house, who was fond of children, told him she meant to ask his mother to let her have him. "Don't you think your mother would let me buy you?" she asked.

"No, ma'am," answered the little fellow; "you haven't got money enough."

"How much would it take?" she continued.

"Three hundred dollars," said the boy promptly, as if that would settle the matter at once for all.

"Oh, well, then," said the woman, "I think I can manage it. If I can, will you come and stay with me?"

"No, ma'am," he said, with decision. "Mamma wouldn't sell me anyhow. There are five of us, and mamma wouldn't like to break the set."—Buffalo Enquirer.

APPETITES

Created and Maintained by Vinol.

THAT THE FOOD IS DIGESTED IS ASLO EQUALLY NECESSARY.

We Recommend Vinol as an Appetite Creator.

WE GUARANTEE THAT VINOL WILL AID DIGESTION.

Vinol is the greatest aid to digestion that we have ever known.

It is because Vinol acts so beneficially upon the stomach that it accomplishes so much good.

Vinol contains the active curative principles that are found in cod-liver oil, without any oil or grease.

These medicinal elements act so favorably upon the stomach, that this organ obtains for itself the elements necessary for creating new flesh, muscle tissue and for making rich red blood.

When the stomach acts easily and naturally, a desire is created for good simple food and a good appetite is the sure result.

With cod-liver oil as formerly taken the medicinal elements which it contained were too often unable to counteract the harm that was done by the obnoxious grease that enveloped them.

Now that in Vinol we have those same elements separated from the vile-tasting fat, we have a tonic and rebuilder that is simply marvelous in its action.

The following is a letter that will explain itself:

"This is to certify that I have used six bottles of Vinol, and have found it of great value as an appetizer and tonic in general debility. I have received so much benefit from its use that I gladly furnish this testimonial in order that others may be induced to give it a trial and prove to themselves its recuperative powers."—MRS. ELIZABETH FEENEY, Waterbury, Conn.

We want every one in this place to know more about our Vinol, how it cures and what it cures. Certainly the greatest tonic and rebuilder we have ever sold.

We, therefore, cordially invite any one interested to call upon us, and we want all to bear in mind that we will gladly refund to any one who is not satisfied with the action of Vinol every cent they pay for it.

NEW STATE BOARDS

Bills Noticed in the Legislature Creating New Ones.

WANT STATE LIQUOR WARDEN

A Board to Examine House, Carriage and Sign Painters—House Clerk's Salary to be Fixed at $1,500 Per Year.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 25.—Although Michigan is generally regarded as a "board ridden state," bills for the creation of new state boards and inspectors, etc., continue to be rushed merrily into the legislature. In the house Thursday afternoon, Rep. Bushnell of Bronson, Branch county, noticed a bill "to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors." When asked for a statement as to the provisions of his proposed bill all Mr. Bushnell would say was: "The bill provides for a state warden to look after the sale of intoxicating liquors in Michigan. Some of my home people asked me to introduce the bill. I do not believe it will go beyond the committee on liquor traffic."

Rep. Bolton, of Alpena, introduced a bill similar to the barbers' examining board act, creating a new board to regulate house, carriage and sign painting in this state. The introducer says the proposed board will be self-supporting, the expense of maintaining it to be provided by license fees paid in by painters. The board of examiners is to consist of three members, each receiving $3 a day while working. The license fee is $3. Unless a painter secures a license from the proposed board he cannot practice his business, the bill says.

Rep. Kanouse, of Byron, noticed a bill to create a state apiary inspector, who is to receive $3 a day and expenses, but whose maximum yearly compensation is fixed at $500. The inspector is to be appointed by the governor for a term of two years. The proposed bill provides that the inspector shall burn bee hives that are affected with foul brood and that such foul brood shall not be given away or sold.

Rep. Hurst's bill giving upper peninsula members of the legislature extra compensation of $2 a day, the usual amount, went through by a vote of 68 to 5.

Chairman McCallum of the judiciary committee reported out the bill to fix a salary of $1,500 a year for the clerk of the house, a position now held by Lew N. Miller.

On Mr. McCallum's motion the house took a recess in order to give Clerk Miller an opportunity to explain the desirability, if not necessity, of fixing the compensation of the clerk of the house. Mr. Miller explained that while he had been receiving $3 a day according to the constitutional provision, the members of the house had been in the habit of resorting to irregular and doubtful means to further reimburse him for his services.

Clerk Miller said it required an experienced man to act as clerk of the house. He added: "This state provides here a large board of supervisors to legislate for counties, cities, townships and villages—work that in most, if not all other states, is not done by the legislature or general assemblies."

Later the house by a vote of 80 to 0, passed the bill fixing Mr. Miller's salary at $1,500 a year.

The Chandler house bill authorizing the Mackinac park commission authority to grant 30-year franchises to private corporations for supplying electric light and water, was passed.

The senate had stricken out Rep. Colby's amendment specifically reserving to the legislature the right to at any time amend or take away any and all privileges granted by the proposed act.

A motion that the house concur in the amendment was lost by a vote of 48 yeas to 30 nays, 51 affirmative votes being required. The vote was reconsidered, and later in the proceedings the senate's action was concurred in by a vote of 66 to 6.

Rep. Goodrich noticed a bill to appropriate $5,000 annually to defray the general office expenses of the state board of health.

Senators Away.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 25.—So many of the senators are away on junket trips to state institutions that there will not be a quorum of the senate this morning. Seventeen of the 34 senators are now away. The upper house will not meet again till 9 o'clock Monday night. Legislative committees left Thursday night to inspect the mining school at Houghton and the Newberry asylum. Senators Doherty and McMullen and Secretary Chilson, of the senate, left last night for Chicago to look after the purchasing of supplies, including furniture, for the senate chamber and committee rooms.

The house committee on state institution for the deaf and dumb at Flint, returned Thursday night. The authorities want the usual appropriation of about $75,000 and $10,000 additional for the support of the school; also $500 a year to send students to Washington school for the deaf and dumb.

Bills Signed.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 25.—Gov. Bliss Thursday night signed the bill appropriating $40,000 for a Michigan exhibit at the Buffalo pan-American exposition; also the bill repealing the act creating the board of jury commissioners of St. Clair county. The latter bill has been in the executive office for a week, but no protests against it have been made to the governor.

End of the World.

Battle Creek, Mich., Jan. 25.—Mrs. Ellen G. White, prophetess of the seventh day adventists, warns her people that there is no time to lose; that the end of the world is near, and that the people of the world must be warned to be prepared.

The Right Word.

"Why do you speak of him as a finished artist?"

"Because he told me he was utterly discouraged and was going to quit the profession. If that doesn't show that he's finished, I don't know what does."—Chicago Post.

EDITOR DEPORTED.

Geo. T. Rice, of the Manila Daily Bulletin, Sent to the United States.

Manila, Jan. 25.—Gen. MacArthur has ordered the deportation to the United States of George T. Rice, editor of the Daily Bulletin, a marine journal. Rice will sail on the Pennsylvania next Monday. The order characterizes him as a "dangerous incendiary and a menace to the military situation."

Rice's offence was the publication of allegations that Lieut. Commander Wm. Braunersreuther, captain of the port, had charged excessive pilotage and fees, a percentage of which he had kept for himself.

The report of Major Mills, inspector general, who investigated the allegations, completely exonerated the captain of the port and indicted the editor and the merchants who had given him information and who had been misled by figuring the rates upon the net instead of the gross tonnage, the latter being specified under the Spanish law.

Rice was summoned to the office of the governor general's military secretary and was called upon to promise that he would publish no more such articles. He declined to give such a pledge, but insisted that the article was truthful and took up a defiant attitude when threatened with deportation.

The deportation order was then issued, and Rice is now awaiting the departure of the Pennsylvania. When seen in jail Thursday he reiterated his statement that the charges were true and declared that in any event the severity of the sentence was unmerited.

Rice came originally from Redwing Minn., and was formerly a member of the Minnesota volunteers.

IN CONGRESS.

Little Business Transacted in Either House.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The senate Thursday devoted the day to the Indian appropriation bill and made only fair progress. The chief feature of the debate was a sharp attack by Mr. Pettigrew on the Dawes commission, which, he said, was extravagant and was accomplishing little in the way of results. An interesting announcement made by him was that he did not purpose to filibuster against any bill.

The shipping bill was not taken up but to-day will witness a speech on it by Mr. Depew. It then will give way to appropriation bills, Mr. Frye saying Thursday he did not wish to delay them. At the opening the senate adopted the Pettigrew resolution concerning the reported deportation of A. Mabini, a citizen of the Philippines, to Guam.

The senate adjourned at 5:10 p. m.

The house Thursday considered the naval appropriation bill all day and completed it with the exception of one paragraph. The item for increase of the navy will remain as reported, namely, two battleships and two cruisers.

Some opposition was manifested to any increase of the navy, and Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, sounded a note of warning as to the size of our annual appropriations, and added that with the present appropriation $310,000,000 would have been spent on our new navy, and we should stop.

After completing the bill, with the exception of a single paragraph, the house at 5:30 p. m. adjourned.

Smallpox Epidemic.

Toledo, O., Jan. 25.—A special to the Times from Crestline, O., says: In the Murray and Fisher families here there are 12 cases of smallpox. Owing to a row among the members of the board of health, no quarantine was established. The matter was called to the attention of Secretary Probst of the state board of health, and he has taken the matter in charge. Two members of the local board have resigned. The schools have been dismissed.

Denounced Alexander Lynching.

Topeka, Kas., Jan. 25.—Five hundred of the colored citizens of the state met here Thursday night and adopted resolutions denouncing the burning of the negro Alexander by the Leavenworth mob. The governor and the authorities of the state are called upon to see that complete justice is done to the lynchers and that no effort be spared to capture them and bring them to a speedy trial.

Deported Filipinos.

Washington, Jan. 25.—A cablegram received at the navy department from Admiral Remey, at Manila, announces the departure of the hospital ship Solace for Guam with ten Filipino political prisoners, deported by order of Gen. MacArthur and charged with having agitated and abetted the movements in the Philippines.

More Hazing Investigation.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Representative Sherman, of New York, Thursday introduced a resolution which was referred to the naval committee, providing for the appointment of a select committee of five members of the house to investigate hazing at the naval academy at Annapolis.

Oldest Yale Graduate Dead.

New York, Jan. 25.—Benjamin D. Silliman, the oldest graduate of Yale college, and member of the Brooklyn bar, died Thursday, in his 96th year, at his home in Brooklyn, of bronchial pneumonia. He was stricken last Wednesday.

BECOMING SERIOUS

The Uprising of the Creek Indians Growing Rapidly.

THREATEN TO ATTACK A TOWN

And the Inhabitants Appeal for Aid—Soldiers Being Hurried to the Seat of Trouble—Choctaws Are Rising to Destroy Railroads.

Muskogee, I. T., Jan. 25.—The Creek uprising is growing to dangerous proportions. Marshal Bennett has just received a telegram from Bristow, I. T., announcing that 600 armed Creeks, stationed two miles from there, are preparing to attack the town, and pleading for protection from the marshal. Marshal Bennett and Agent Shoenfelt are swearing in large numbers of deputies, whom they are forwarding to the scene of trouble. It is now feared they will reach the town too late and the mayor of Bristow has been instructed to swear in all the men necessary to protect the town. Soldiers are being hurried from Ft. Reno to the seat of trouble, but they will not reach Bristow before to-night, as they will arrive at Henrietta first and go overland. Indian Agent Shoenfelt will ask for more help, if it is found that one company of cavalry cannot handle the situation, for the Indians are dividing up into bands of 100. Marshal Bennett with six deputies is about to leave for Eufala, where Crazy Snake was seen Thursday, and will attempt his capture. The Snake band is within three miles of Bristow and is reported to have whipped two white men. The Dawes commission is fearful for the safety of its party of appraisers, headed by Representative Hackbust, of Leavenworth, Kas., who are in the Wetumpka district. Nothing has been heard from them for two days.

South McAlester, I. T., Jan. 25.—Wednesday's reports of a Choctaw uprising are fully confirmed. Scouts sent out from this city Wednesday night report that the disaffected Choctaws have a number of the Creek Snakes among them and they have been quietly organizing and arming for some time. They call themselves the Choctaw Snakes. They include all those Indians who are opposed to allotment and the conflict is between them and the treaty Indians. While non-citizens are not in danger, it is stated that the Snakes have planned to destroy all the railroads in their nation by burning bridges and section houses on a preconcerted night. They have deposed Gov. Duke and issued an order to all citizens to cease leasing or renting to whites. The first offense they will punish with 50 lashes, they say; ears will be cut off the second, and death for the third. They have organized and have leaders in every Choctaw county and claim to have a membership of 2,600.

United States Marshal Grady has sent the leaders word that arrests will follow the first violation of law, no matter what may be the result. He has wired the department for permission to swear in special deputies, and if this shall be granted he says he will be able to handle them and will not ask for troops.

There will be a meeting of the full bloods Saturday, and the marshal says he will attend it and give the Indians a talk. The Indians are riding over the country in bands of five or six, serving their notices. General Superintendent Harris, of the Choctaw railway, who was here Wednesday night from Little Rock, has enjoined especial watchfulness upon all employes of the line in the Indian Territory.

Greatly Appreciated.

New York, Jan. 25.—Business on the stock exchange was suspended for a moment a little before noon Thursday while President Keppler read from the rostrum the reply of the London stock exchange, thanking the New York stock exchange for its kindly expressions of sympathy on the death of Queen Victoria. The answer to the message of condolence sent by the New York chamber of commerce to the London chamber of commerce reads:

"London chamber of commerce greatly appreciates kind and sympathetic message of your country to British people in loss of their queen so much beloved in both countries.

(Signed) "ALBERT G. SANDEMAN,

Soldiers' Library.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The senate committee on the Philippines has decided to report favorably the bill providing for the maintenance of a soldiers' library at Manila. The resolution introduced by Senator Teller, providing for the printing of Filipino petition presented to the senate by him, was considered and an adverse report ordered upon it. The Stewart bill for the creation of a supreme court for the Philippines was discussed but the opinion prevailed that the time had not come for action in that direction.

Transports Discharged.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Five military transports, just returned to the Pacific coast from the Philippines, have been discharged, the government having no further need of their services. They are the Algoa and California, freight ships, and the Conemaugh, Flintshire and Leelenaw, animal transports.

Postmaster at New Orleans.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Senator McEnery called at the White House Thursday and advised the president that he favored the appointment of Frederick Earhart as postmaster at New Orleans to succeed Postmaster Pitkin, who recently resigned. It is understood that this appointment will be made.

Christine Nilsson's Novel Idea.

Mme. Christine Nilsson has discovered a novel use for old receipted bills and sheets of music. Both of these are made to serve the purpose of wall papers. A survey of the walls of her dining room, on which are displayed the receipted bills of hotels and shops all over the world, soon convinces the beholder that though great singers are very highly paid they are obliged to live at a most extravagant rate. Mme. Nilsson's bedroom is papered with the music of the songs and parts which she has sung during the course of her career.

THE ROYAL FUNERAL.

Will Take Place Feb. 2—Remains Will Stay at Osborne Until Feb. 1.

Cowes, Jan. 25.—The funeral of the dead queen will take place Feb. 2. So hampered have been the arrangements at Osborne that the body of Queen Victoria still lies in the bedroom where she died. The elaborate decorations necessary in turning the dining room in Osborne house into a chapelle ardente occupied so much time that, although the royal household waited hour after hour for the first private services it was found impossible to hold this yesterday.

All being well, however, the solemn function will be performed this (Friday) morning by the Bishop of Winchester in the presence of King Edward, Emperor William and almost every other member of the royal family.

The coffin was brought to Osborne house last evening and was taken through the queen's private gate, which had not been previously used since her death. Emperor William was the first person to see it. The coffined body will be transferred this morning to the dining room, now hung with deep purple. The dais is wreathed with the royal standard, and on each side are great candles. Madonnas by famous painters hang from the draped walls. In one corner magnificent wreaths from all parts of the world crush their blossoms one against the other. Among these the most beautiful are from Emperor William and Empress Augusta Victoria. Around the coffin chairs are arranged for the royal mourners.

Lord Pelham Clinton authorizes the statement that there will be no lying in state. However, there is good reason to believe that many persons will be afforded the privilege of seeing their dead queen as she lies in the gorgeously transformed dining room, where she will remain until Feb. 1. In the hope that this may be the case, the people are already pouring into Cowes. If they are disappointed in this respect they will at any rate be rewarded by witnessing a great naval display.

THE QUEEN'S ILLNESS.

Her Health Had Been Failing for the Past Year.

London, Jan. 25.—The British Medical Journal publishes an authoritative account of the last illness of Queen Victoria. It says the queen's health, for a year, had been failing, with symptoms mainly of a dyspeptic kind, accompanied by impaired nutrition and periods of insomnia, and later there were slight, transitory attacks of aphasia. In the general arterial system there were remarkably few signs of age.

After alluding to the symptoms of somnolence increasing the cerebral exhaustion which her majesty's strong will enabled her to hide from momentary visitors, the Medical Journal confirms the Associated Press information saying that Thursday her mental confusion was more marked and a slight fluttering was observed in the right side of her face.

Thenceforward aphasia and facial paralysis became permanent. It is important to note, the Medical Journal adds, that notwithstanding the great bodily weakness and cerebral exhaustion, the heart's action was steadily maintained to the last. The pulse was always regular and the temperature normal. In the last few hours paralysis of the pulmonary nerves set in. Beyond a slight facial fluttering there never was any motor paralysis.

To Improve Engineers' Condition.

Cleveland, Jan. 25.—A committee of the Marine Engineers' Mutual Benefit association will confer with representatives of the Lake Carriers' association, with the view of improving the condition of the engineers on the lakes. It is the intention of the engineers association to petition congress on the score of danger to lives in case the Lake Carriers' association fails to act.

Six Months' Imprisonment.

Boston, Jan. 25.—Arthur Oakes, who claims to be a son of Peter Oakes, a millionaire candy maker of St. Louis, was sentenced Thursday to serve six months imprisonment at Deer Island on a charge of assaulting his wife with a razor. It is alleged that Oakes attacked his wife after locking her in a room and forcing her to sign a confession of having been unfaithful to him.

To Raise Perry's Flagship.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 25.—In the state senate Thursday a resolution was adopted instructing Rhode Island representatives in congress to work for an appropriation for the raising and preservation of the Niagara, flagship of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, of this state, in the battle of Lake Erie.

HOSTILE ATTITUDE

The Situation of Americans in Venezuela is Critical.

AMERICAN COLONY PROTESTS

Against the Indifference With Which American Interests Are Regarded—A Mutiny of Venezuelan Troops—Sinking of a British Vessel.

Fort De France, Island of Martinique, Jan. 25, via Haytian cable.—The attitude of the government of Venezuela towards the Bermudese Asphalt company (American) is hostile, for the reason that the concessions recently accorded by the government have been given to people in touch with the government and who would like to resell them to the Bermudese company. The government having refused to accede to the request of the American minister, who demanded a suspension of action on the part of the new concessionists in taking possession of their grants strained relations between Venezuela and the United States resulted, and war vessels are expected to return to Laguira. If the Venezuelan government employs force to take possession of the asphalt like it is believed the United States auxiliary cruiser Scorpion will land an armed force.

The attitude of the Venezuelans toward Americans may be described as hostile. On the 15th of this month the Venezuelan troops in the Hoyo barracks at Caracas mutinied and killed their colonel, the lieutenant-colonel and seven men and then fled in various directions. Two hundred and ten of the men were captured again. There was no fighting in the town and the exact cause of the mutiny is not known.

No accurate details are obtainable regarding the sinking of the British sloop Maria Teresa by the Venezuelan gunboat Miranda.

It is supposed the Maria Teresa was on her way from the British island of Trinidad with a cargo of arms intended for the Venezuelan revolutionists, and that she was met by the Miranda, which, wishing to take possession of her, fired upon the Maria Teresa and by so doing set her on fire, after which she sank, according to one report. In the east the insurrection appears to be localized between Cumana and the extreme northeast of Venezuela. The insurgents have again taken possession of Cerupano and during the evening of Jan. 21 there was a tentative uprising in the neighborhood of Barcelona.

Advices which have been received here regarding the mutiny of Venezuelan troops in the Hoyo barracks at Caracas, say that the mutineers numbered 300. The outbreak took place at 8 o'clock in the evening of Jan. 14, and the colonel, two officers and four men were killed. The mutineers escaped, without arms, by different roads and got outside the capital. Half of them were subsequently arrested near Caracas and the others surrendered the next day.

Apparently there was no political cause for the outbreak. Inquiry showed that the men had been badly fed and were being exploited by the chiefs. The authorities of the capital seem to have been unaware of the incident.

The situation so far as it affects the Bermudese Asphalt company grows more critical every hour. All the negroes and other laborers are menaced and impressed by the local authorities or they desert, thus leaving the plant at the asphalt lake without assistance.

The American colony in Venezuela continues to protest against the indifference with which American lives and interests are regarded.

A Favorable Report.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Representative McCleary (Minn.), from the committee on library, Thursday reported favorably to the house the bill to appropriate $4,000 for a pedestal for a statue to the poet Henry W. Longfellow, which is to be erected in this city by the Longfellow Memorial association. The bill also carries a provision for the donation of a site upon one of the government reservations.

Vanderbilt Heiress Christened.

New York, Jan. 25.—The Vanderbilt heiress, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. K. Vanderbilt, born Nov. 23, was christened Muriel Vanderbilt Thursday in the private chapel of Archbishop Corrigan's residence. Clarence Mackay and Miss Isabel Kemp acted as godfather and godmother to the child. Rev. Father Thomas Murphy officiated.

Purchased Large Estate.

Caracas, Venezuela, Jan. 25, via Haytian cable.—A Hamburg syndicate has purchased the estate of the late President Crespo in the Orinoco district. It has an area of ten million acres and upon it there are 30,000 head of cattle. The syndicate intends to control the meat market of the West Indies and also the packing industry.

To Observe Sun's Eclipse.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The navy department has practically completed arrangements for sending a party of scientists to the island of Sumatra to observe the total eclipse of the sun on the 17th of May next. The expedition will be in charge of Prof. A. N. Skinner of the naval observatory. It will start from San Francisco between Feb. 20 and March 1 next.

Jumped the Track.

Pittsburg, Jan. 25.—The Cleveland & Pittsburg flyer, which left this city at 6 o'clock for Cleveland, jumped the track at Glenfield, 12 miles below here, the wreckage blockading all four of the Fort Wayne trains. Engineer Holland was probably fatally hurt, but the railroad officials say all passengers escaped injury.

Jupiter Warmer Than the Earth.

The gigantic mass of Jupiter has a much larger warmth than that of the earth. It is the result of the molecular movement produced by the compression of the strata and must be greater the more powerful the masses, and hence the larger the pressure of the strata is. Jupiter surpasses the earth in point of mass 307 times, and for this reason the inner temperature or individual warmth of the planet is probably high enough to evaporate the water upon the surface quickly, so that water vapor forms the principal substance of the atmosphere of Jupiter. Water vapor is an excellent reflector and readily accounts for the bright radiation of light emitted by the planet.—Professor Hughes in Chicago Tribune.

There is a good deal of buncombe in the assertion that the Army bill gives the president power to control the size of the army by increasing it 50,000 when he wishes. As a matter of fact, the bill created an army of 100,000 and merely gives the president power to reduce it if he sees fit. This is a very different thing.

BEN COLVIN DEAD.

Well Known Saginaw County Character Passed Away.

Saginaw, Mich., Jan. 25.—Ben Colvin, well known all over the state as "Uncle Ben," died at 4 o'clock Thursday morning at his home near Brant, this county. He contracted the grip on Jan. 13, but his condition was not serious and for the past two days he had been doing light work on his farm. Paralysis of the heart caused his death.

He was born in Cayuga county, New York, Aug. 3, 1827. His paternal ancestors were Scotch, and "Uncle Ben" was noted for the sturdy, uncompromising characteristics of that race. His mother was of Swiss origin. When 14 years old he earned $6 per month on the Erie canal. In 1849 he went to Salt Lake City, Utah, returning soon afterward to Lorain, O., where he engaged in railroading and farming. He and his wife, whom he married in 1850, in New York, as Miss Orvilla Hunt, located on 40 acres of land in Brant township in 1853, and he lived there ever since. His acreage increased to 300, and his stock farm is one of the best in this part of the state. He was married a second time to Miss Adelia Churchill.

In 1861 he started for the west, and enlisted while on the way in a Kansas regiment. Afterward he was transferred to the secret service as chief of a squad, Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama and Tennessee comprising his district. He was honorably discharged in 1865.

He was always active in public affairs. He was highway commissioner and justice of the peace from 1857 to 1860. In 1882 and 1884 he ran for congress on the greenback ticket, but was defeated. In 1896 he was elected a member of the state legislature on the democratic ticket, and was re-elected in 1898, but failed of a re-election last fall.

He leaves a widow and four daughters, Mrs. B. J. Webb, Mrs. J. Jennings, Mrs. Wm. Curtis, and Mrs. Jas. Aylwaid, all of Brant. There are 16 grandchildren and six great grandchildren.

After Trespassers.

East Tawas, Mich., Jan. 25.—Hon. D. E. Dick, state senator from Maryland, arrived here as a special agent for the United States, and Thursday morning, accompanied by H. C. Bristol and O. Fahseldt, left for the Au Sable river, where they expect to remain about five days investigating alleged trespassers on United States lands. During the summer Bristol discovered trespassing, and, through Mr. Dick, the government succeeded in getting several thousand dollars. The United States does not allow agents to settle, as does the state. No settlement can be made for mere stumpage but the full value of material where found is required. The state settles for lands adjoining the United States lands for $2 for Norway and $4 to $6 for white pine. For the same timber and from the same person the United States got $8 for Norway and $12 to $15 for white pine.

Trouble Over a Stairway.

Lapeer, Mich., Jan. 25.—Several weeks ago Mayor Schlegel, through City Attorney Loughnane, secured an injunction restraining Frank T. Hadley, as agent for Mrs. Moore, from building an outside stairway leading into the Moore property. The matter was argued before Judge Smith this week and he took until next Monday to give an opinion. Thursday the contracting parties caught the marshal napping and built the stairway. Mayor Schlegel claims it is a violation of the ordinance, and has called a special meeting of the council and will ask them to order the stairway removed.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900,
By Harold MacGrath.

"It is sad, is it not," said she, "that we must go through our days loving each other and all the world standing between? I have never loved a man before. I did not want to love you. I did not know that I loved you till I saw that your life was in danger. Yet I am glad that I have lived for a brief second, for till a woman loves she does not live. I am brave; do you be likewise. I shall go back to the world, and who shall know of the heart of fire beneath the ice? Not even the man I love. Kiss me. It is the last kiss I shall take from the lips of any man."

And it seemed to me that our souls met in that last kiss, melted and became one. Her hands dropped to her side, and swiftly she sped from the room.

She had entered the coach. The cavalrymen were perched upon the box. There was a crack of the lash, and the coach rolled away. I watched it, standing in the road. A cloud of yellow dust partially obscured it from view. Half a mile beyond rose a small hill. This the coach mounted, and the red gold of the smoldering sun engulfed it. Was it a face I saw at the window? Perhaps. Then over the hill all disappeared and with it the whole world, and I stood in emptiness, alone.

Gretchen had gone.

CHAPTER XV.

I was wandering aimlessly through the rose gardens when the faroff sound of galloping hoofs came on the breeze. Nearer and nearer it drew. I ran out into the highway. I saw a horse come wildly dashing along. It was riderless, and as it came closer I saw the foam of sweat dripping from its flanks and shoulders. As the animal plunged toward me I made a spring and caught the bridle, hanging on till the brute came to a standstill. It was quivering from fright. There was a gash on its neck, and it was bleeding and turning the white flakes of sweat into a murky crimson.

"Good Lord!" I ejaculated. "It's one of the cavalry horses. Hillars or the innkeeper has been hurt."

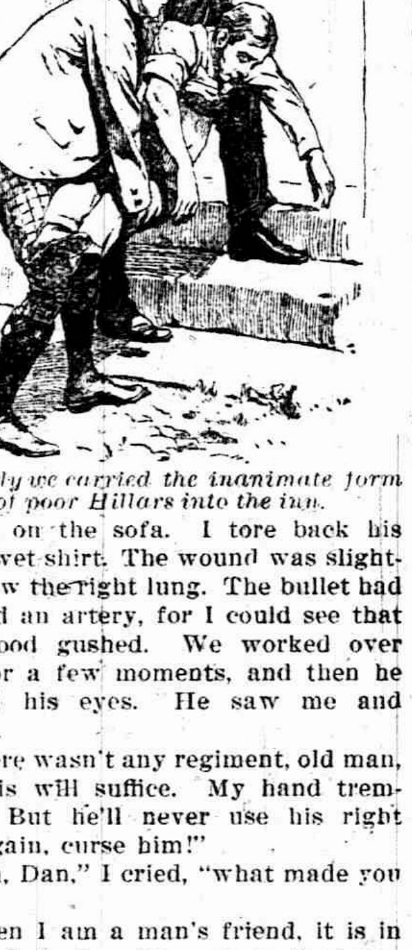
I was of the mind to mount the animal and go in search of them when Stahlberg, who had come to my assistance, said that I had best wait. A quarter of an hour passed. Then we could see another horse, perhaps half a mile away, coming toward the inn at a canter. From what I could see in the pale light, the horse carried a double burden. A sheet of ice seemed to fall on my heart. What had happened? Had Dan and the prince come to blows? Alas, I could have cried out in anguish at the sight which finally met my gaze. The innkeeper held the reins, and propped up in front of him was Hillars, to all appearances dead.

"Gott," cried the innkeeper, discovering me, "but I am glad to see you, herr! Your friend has been hurt, badly, badly."

"Heavens!" I cried. The hand and wrist of the innkeeper which encircled Hillars were drenched in blood.

"Yes; a bullet somewhere in his chest. Help me down with him. He is not dead yet. I'll tell you the story when we have made it comfortable for him."

Tenderly we carried the inanimate form of poor Hillars into the inn and laid it on the sofa. I tore back his blood wet shirt. The wound was slightly below the right lung. The bullet had severed an artery, for I could see that the blood gushed. We worked over him for a few moments, and then he opened his eyes. He saw me and smiled.



Tenderly we carried the inanimate form of poor Hillars into the inn.

"There wasn't any regiment, old man, but this will suffice. My hand trembled. But he'll never use his right arm again, curse him!"

"Dan, Dan," I cried, "what made you do it?"

"When I am a man's friend, it is in life and death. He was in the way. He may thank liquor that he lives." The lids of his eyes contracted. "Hurts a little, but it will not be for long, my son. I am bleeding to death inside. Jack, the woman loves you, and in God's eyes, princess or not, she belongs to you. You and I cannot understand these things which make it impossible for a man and a woman who love each other to wed. Let me hold your hand. I feel like an old woman. Give me a mouthful of brandy. Ah, that's better! Innkeeper, your courage is not to be doubted, but your judgment of liquor is. Anyway, Jack, I suppose you will not forget me in a week or so, eh?"

"Dan!" was all I could say, bending over his hand to hide my tears.

"Jack, you are not sorry?"

"Dan, you are more to me than any woman in the world."

"Oh, say! You wouldn't—hold me up a bit higher; that's it—you wouldn't have me hang on now, would you? I haven't anything to live for, no matter how you put it. Home? I never had one. The only regret I have in leaving is that the prince will not keep me company. Put an obol in my hand, and Charon will see me over the Styx.

> "And when, like her, O Saki, you shall pass
> Among the guests star scattered on the grass,
> And in your joyous errand reach the spot
> Where I made one, turn down an empty glass!

"Well, hang me, Jack, if you aren't crying! Then you thought more of me than I believed; a man's tears mean more than a woman's. A man must die, and what is a year or two? How much better to fold the tent when living becomes tasteless and the cup is full of lees! The prince was a trifle cruel, but perhaps his hand trembled too. Innkeeper, you're a good fellow."

"Herr is a man of heart," said the grizzled veteran sadly.

"Tell Jack how it happened," said Dan. "It hurts me."

On leaving me, Hillars and the innkeeper, after having taken a pair of pistols, had mounted the cavalry horses despite the protests of the owners, and had galloped away in pursuit of the prince and Count von Walden. They caught sight of them a mile or so ahead. They were loping along at a fair speed. It took half an hour to bring the two parties within speaking distance. Although the prince and Von Walden heard them, they never turned around, but kept on straight ahead. This made Hillars' choler rise, and he spurred forward.

"One moment, gentlemen," he cried. "I have a word with you!"

They galloped on unheeding. When Hillars got in front of them, they merely veered to either side.

"Ah!" said Hillars, choking with rage. With a quick movement he bent and caught the bridle of the prince's horse. The count, seeing that the prince was compelled to rein in, did likewise. The prince looked disdainful.

"Well, what is it?" asked Von Walden. "Speak quickly. Has your scribbling friend run away with her highness?"

"My remarks, most noble and puissant count," said Hillars, bowing satirically to the neck of his horse, "I shall confine to the still more noble and puissant Prince of Wortumborg."

"This is an unappreciated honor," sneered the prince.

"So it is," replied Hillars lightly. "When an honest man speaks to you, he is conferring an honor upon you which you, as you say, cannot appreciate. It appears to me that your

"What time did she come into your office the other day?"

"It must have been after 11."

"Then it happened about 11:15." Pembroke's eyes were dancing. "Do you—er—think there are any others?"

"Thousands," said I, "only"— I turned the end of my cigar around to see if the light had proved effective.

"Only what?"

"Only she won't have them."

"Then there is really a chance?"

"When a woman is not married, there is always a chance," said I wisely. "But let me tell you, cousin mine, she has a very high ideal. The man who wins her must be little less than a demigod and a little more than a man. Indeed her ideal is so high that I did not reach it by a good foot."

Pembroke looked surprised. "She—ah—rejected"—

"I did not say that I had proposed to her," said I.

"If you haven't, why haven't you?"

"It is strange." As his face assumed an anxious tinge, I laughed. "My dear relative, go ahead and win her, if you can. You have my best wishes. She is nothing to me. There was a time—ah, well, we all can look back and say that. If it isn't one woman it's another."

Sunshine came into Pembroke's face again. "Ideal or not ideal, I am going to make the effort."

"Success to you!" patting his shoulder. He was good to look at, and it was my opinion that Phyllis might do worse. We miss a good deal in this world by being overparticular.

We were coming into Trafalgar. Nelson stood high up in the yellow fog.

"Nature is less gracious than history sometimes," mused Pembroke, gazing up. "She is doing her best to dull the luster of the old gentleman. Ah, those were days when they had men."

"We have them still," said I. "It is not the men, but the opportunities which are lacking."

"Perhaps that is so. Yet, it is the great man who makes them."

I was thinking of Hillars. "I would give a good deal for a regiment and a bad moment for our side." There was no mighty column in his memory, scarcely a roll of earth. "What do you want to do?" I asked. "Shall we hail a cab and drive to the park?"

"Just as you say, if it is not interfering with your work."

"Not at all."

"Have a cigar," said Pembroke after we had climbed into the cab and arranged our long legs comfortably. The London cab is all very well for a short and thin person. "These came to me directly from Key West."

"That is one of the joys of being rich," said I. "Gold is Aladdin's lamp. I have to take my chances on getting good tobacco in this country."

"Talking about gold"— he began.

"Don't!" I entreated.

"I was about to say that I drew on my bankers for £20,000 this morning."

"You intend to go in for a figure abroad, then?"

"Oh, no. I deposited the money in another bank—in your name."

"Mine! Deposited £20,000 in my name?" I gasped.

"Just so."

"I understood you to say, because you thought me to be a gentleman, that you weren't going to do anything like this? Have I done something to change your opinion?"

"Of course not. And I never said that I should not do it. You may or may not use it—that is as you please. But, so far as I am concerned, it will stay there and accumulate interest till the crack of doom. It isn't mine any more. If I were not almost your brother, I dare say you might justly take offense at the action. As it is," complacently, "you will not only accept the gift, but thank me for it."

"How old are you?" I asked.

"Exactly 25."

"I thought that you could not be older than that. Aren't you afraid to be so far away from home?"

Pembroke lay back and laughed. "You haven't thanked me yet."

"I must get a new tailor," said I. "What, shall I pay a tailor to make a well dressed man out of me, and then become an object of charity? Do I look, then, like a man who is desperately in need of money?"

"No, you don't look it. That's because you are clever. But what is your salary to a man of your brains?"

"It is bread and butter and lodging."

He laughed again. To laugh seemed to be a part of his business. "Jack, I haven't a soul in the world but you. I have only known you three days, but it seems that I have known you all my life. I have so much money that I cannot even fritter away the income."

"It must be a sad life," said I.

"And if you do not accept the sum in the spirit it is given I'll double it, and then you'll have trouble. You will be a rich man, then, with all a rich man's cares and worries."

"You ought to have a trustee to take care of your money."

"It would be a small matter to bribe him off. Jack, of course you do not need the money now, but that is no sign you may not in the days to come. I have known many journalists. They were ever improvident. I want to make an exception in your case. You understand; the money is for your old age."

"Let me tell you why a newspaper man is improvident. He earns money only to spend it. He has a fine scorn for money as money. He cares more for what a dollar spent has bought than what five saved might buy."

"Poor creditors!" was the melancholy interpolation. I passed over this and went on: "It is the work which absorbs his whole attention. He begins at the bottom of the ladder, which is in the garret. First, he is running about the streets at 2 and 3 in the morning in rain and snow and fog. The contact with the lower classes teaches him many things. He becomes the friend of the policeman and the vagabond. And as his mind grows broader his heart grows in proportion. It is the comparing of the great and small which makes us impartial and philosophical. Well, soon the reporter gets better assignments and shorter hours. He meets the noted men and women of the city. Suddenly from the city editor's desk his ambition turns to Washington. He succeeds there. He now comes into the presence of distinguished embassadors, ministers and diplomatists. He acquires a polish and a smattering of the languages. His work becomes a feature of his paper. The president chooses him for a friend. He comes and goes as he wills. Presently his eye furtively wanders to Europe. The highest ambition of a journalist, next to being a war correspondent, is to have a foreign post. In this capacity he meets the notable men and women of all countries. He speaks to princes and grand dukes and crowned heads. In a way he becomes a personage himself, a man whom great men seek. And he speaks of the world as the poet did of the fall of Pompeii, 'part of which I was and all of which I saw.' Ah," as my mind ran back over my own experiences, "what man with this to gain would care for money, a thing which would dull his imagination and take away the keen edge of ambition and make him play a useless part in this kingly drama of life!"

"I like your frankness," said Pembroke. "I have no doubt that journalism is the most fascinating profession there is. Yet you must not accuse the rich of being ambitionless. I have known of rich men losing their all to make papers for men who are ambitious to be foreign correspondents." The young fellow was brimming with raillery. "I have never tried to run a newspaper, but I am, notwithstanding your tirade, ambitious. I am desirous to wed Miss Landors."

The cab was now rolling along the row.

"A truly great ambition," I admitted. "After all, what greater ambition is there than to marry the woman you love? Philip, I will accept your gift in the spirit it is given, and I'll make use of it in the days to come when I am old and rusted. I understand your motive. You are happy and wish every one to be."

"That's the idea," said he, leaning back and spreading an arm behind my shoulders.

"But not all the money in the world nor all the fame, for that matter, would make me happy." Gretchen was so far away! "Very well, we'll go to Paris together. That is as far as I go. To follow her you will have to go alone."

"And why can't you go the rest of the way?"

"Work. I must be back in town in three days. You must not forget that I have had my vacation. There is plenty to be done."

"Now that you are comparatively wealthy, why not give up the grind, as you call it?"

"The truth is I must work. When a man works, he forgets."

"Then you have something to forget?"

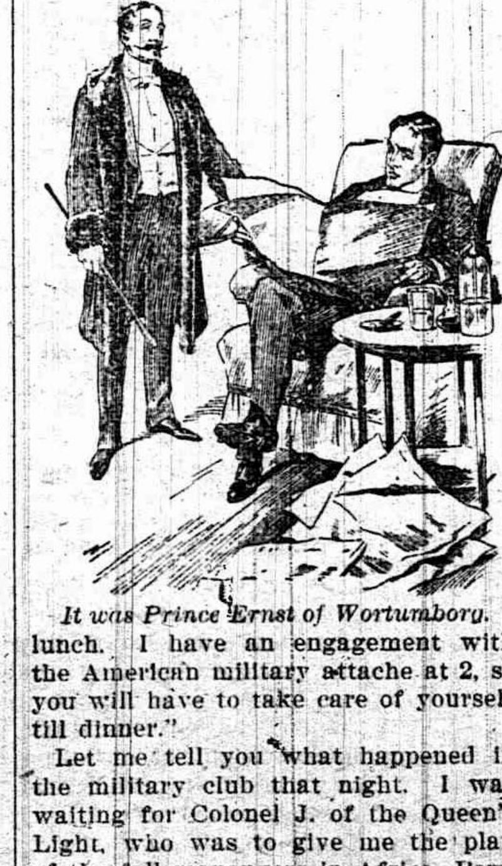
"Every man who has reached the age of 30 has something to forget," said I.

I was gloomy. In my pocket I had the only letter I had ever received from Gretchen. Every hour fate outdoes the romancer. The story she had written for me was a puzzling one. And the finis? Who could say? Fate is more capricious than the novelist. Sometimes you can guess what he intends for an end; what fate has in store, never. Gretchen's letter did not begin as letters usually do. It began with "I love you" and ended with the same sentence. "In November my marriage will take place. Do not come abroad. I am growing strong now. If I should see you, alas, what would become of that thin ice covering the heart of fire? We have nothing to return, you and I. I long to see you. I dare not tell you how much. Who knows what the world holds hidden? While we live there is always a perhaps. Remember that I love you!"

"Perhaps," I mused absently.

"Perhaps what?" asked Pembroke.

"What?" I had forgotten him. "Oh, it was merely a slip of the tongue." I poked the matting with my cane. "It is high noon. We had best hunt up a lunch. I have an engagement with the American military attache at 2, so you will have to take care of yourself till dinner."



It was Prince Ernst of Wortumborg.

Let me tell you what happened in the military club that night. I was waiting for Colonel J. of the Queen's Light, who was to give me the plan of the fall maneuvers in Africa. Pembroke was in the billiard room showing what he knew about caroms and brandy smashes to a trio of tanned Indian campaigners. I was in the reading room perusing the evening papers. All at once I became aware of a man standing before me. He remained in that position so long that I glanced over the top of my paper.

It was Prince Ernst of Wortumborg. He bowed

A MODERN SAPHO.

They are gone; all is still! Foolish heart, dost thou quiver?
Nothing stirs on the lawn but the quick lilac shade.
Far up shines the house, and beneath flows the river;
Here lean, my head, on this cold balustrade!
Ere he come, ere the boat, by the shining branched border
Of dark elms shoot round, dropping down the proud stream,
Let me pause, let me strive, in myself make some order,
Ere their boat music sound, ere their broidered flags gleam.
Last night we stood earnestly talking together;
She entered; that moment his eyes turned from me!
Fastened on her dark hair and her wreath of white heather;
As yesterday was, so tomorrow will be.
Their love, let me know, must grow strong and yet stronger;
Their passion burn more, ere it ceases to burn.
They must love, while they must, but the hearts that love longer
Are rare; ah, most loves but flow once and return!
I shall suffer, but they will outlive their affection;
I shall weep, but their love will be cooling, and he,
As he drifts to fatigue, discontent and dejection,
Will be brought, thou poor heart, how much nearer to thee!
For cold is his eye to mere beauty, who, breaking
The strong band which passion around him hath furled,
Disenchanted by habit and newly awaking,
Looks languidly round on a gloom buried world.
Through that gloom he will see but a shadow appearing,
Perceive but a voice as I come to his side,
But deeper their voice grows and nobler their bearing
Whose youth in the fires of anguish hath died.
So, to wait! But, what notes down the wind, hark, are driving?
'Tis he! 'Tis their flag shooting round by the trees!
Let my turn, if it will come, be swift in arriving!
Ah, hope cannot long lighten torments like these!
Hast thou yet dealt him, O life, thy full measure?
World, have thy children yet bowed at his knee?
Hast thou with myrtle leaf crowned him, O pleasure?
Crown, crown him quickly, and leave him for me.

—Matthew Arnold.

HIS SECRET SIN.

The Skeleton In the Closet of Mr. George Gregory.

Mr. George Gregory sat in his private office surveying with anything but a pleasant countenance some papers that lay on the desk before him. Mr. Gregory, the head of the well known city firm of Gregory, Jackson & Co., was a man of about 55 to 60 years of age, rather massive of form and decidedly heavy of face. He thoroughly understood the art of getting money by trade, and his substantial house and grounds at Surbiton testified to the truth of this; but, to credit him with any amount of imagination, to judge by his face, would have been a foolish thing to do.

How utterly astonished and amused his friends would have been could they have seen the correspondence which lay before him at that moment! But not even his wife and daughter knew his secret; not even did his confidential clerk or the junior partner know anything of the mysterious packets which from time to time arrived at the office addressed to "Harold Vincent, Esq., 113A St. Mark's Buildings, E. C.," but the postman who brought such packages dropped them into the private box of office 113A, and Mr. Gregory alone had the key.

Mr. Gregory picked up for the third or fourth time a typewritten letter and read to himself as follows:

> THE CHEAPSIDE MAGAZINE.
> LONDON, July 27, 1899.
>
> Dear Sir—After reading your story, entitled "The Detective's Dilemma," I have no alternative but to return it. The matter and style are as feeble as the others you sent. You appear to be very young and to possess an utter lack of grasp of matters or ideas. I do not wish to discourage you, but your line is evidently not literature, and I should advise you not to waste any more time in scribbling such effusions as you have been sending here. Yours faithfully, THE EDITOR.
>
> Harold Vincent, Esq.

Mr. Gregory brought his fist down upon the table with a crash.

"Well," he ejaculated, "I've had a good many rejections, but never one that came up to this. It's worse than a printed form! I never heard such impudence in all my life! And to think that such an idiot as this should deprive the public of the chance of reading really good things and probably get as much as my junior clerk for doing it! But they're all a set of fools," he added savagely as he unlocked a drawer in his writing table and disclosed a bundle of rejected MSS. that had evidently done long and serviceable duty—through the post.

However, before he left his office that afternoon he again unlocked that fatal drawer, sorted out another MS., put it in an envelope and deliberately directed it to the editor of The Cheapside Magazine, 682 West Fleet street, E. C.

"I'll try him again," he muttered savagely, "but I won't condescend to answer his letter. If he doesn't accept this, he's the biggest fool in all London, for it's the very best thing I've written."

As he went to the station he posted it. The next morning the editor found it with a batch of others. He opened it casually, glanced at its contents and exclaimed: "Another! Well, that'll lie by till I get back from my holidays."

It was about a month later. The August sun was pouring down his warmth upon the sand cliffs of healthy Cromer. The beach was crowded with visitors. The golf links were positively dangerous with the continuous fusillade of white balls. Seated on the grassy cliff top, just at the edge of the links, looking down on the quaint old town, was a bright, merry looking girl of about 20, with a face decidedly pretty, the more so because of the pleasing smile that played around her dark eyes and mouth.

Her companion was a tall, good looking young man of some 30 years of age. He was dressed in flannels, with a straw hat on the back of his head.

"Only another week and I must be back at work," he was saying, "but it's been a delightful holiday. I never thought when I ran down here to see the Johnsons for a couple of days that I should have staid so long or enjoyed myself so much."

She avoided the admiration of his eyes and gazed into the dim distance.

"I, too, have enjoyed my holiday very much, Mr. Ashleigh."

"May I say," he continued, after a short pause, "that I hope this happy holiday of ours need not come to an end, Miss Gregory? You know what I mean."

She raised her eyes and looked at him with a radiant smile.

"It need not, so far as I am concerned," she said softly.

And the August sun beamed down upon them with a huge smile. It had seen this sort of thing at the seaside before, but it was a joyous novelty to them.

* * * * * * *

"Mother will be getting quite anxious about us," said the girl as they retraced their steps to the town, "and it's Saturday afternoon too. Father will be coming down."

"I suppose I shall have to seek an interview with him," said Frank Ashleigh. "Will he be very terrible, do you think? And what will Mrs. Gregory say?"

"Oh, mother will be all right. She half suspects already, I believe. And, as for father, you've seen him several times now, and I fancy he has a good opinion of you. There's only one thing that he's sure to be particular about, and that is the question of income."

"I haven't any fear on that score," replied Frank Ashleigh. "I'm getting a good salary for my editorial work and a nice little sum for odd scribbling."

So the next evening the great interview came off. Mr. Gregory had been duly prepared and coaxed and prevailed upon to ask Frank Ashleigh in to dinner. He had also called upon the Johnsons and been assured that Ashleigh was a model young man and in receipt of a good income.

After some humming and hawing on both sides the subject was duly reached and discussed.

"May I ask what your income is, Mr. Ashleigh?" said the old gentleman.

"Well, altogether I am drawing nearly $4,000 a year."

The other poured out a glass of port and drank it with a satisfactory gulp.

"You are in the publishing trade, are you not?"

Frank Ashleigh smiled.

"I am partly an author and partly an editor."

"Eh? What's that you say?"

"I make between $1,000 and $1,500 a year by writing"—

"How the dickens do you do it? How, in heaven's name, is it done?" cried George Gregory in unbounded admiration. "Why, I—never mind. Go on," he added.

"And then I get $2,500 a year for my editorship."

"Twenty-five hundred a year! Man alive! Why, it's more than I pay my chief cashier! Is this income likely to continue?"

"I expect a rise next year. The firm which owns the magazine seems to appreciate my work."

"And what periodical do you edit, pray?"

"The Cheapside Magazine."

"What! You—you are the editor of The Cheapside Magazine? Upon my word, this is too much, sir. A young man like you too!"

Frank Ashleigh looked at him with astonishment.

"May I ask what you mean?" he began.

"I mean this, sir—that the idea of your marrying my daughter is preposterous—most preposterous. No; I won't hear another word. If I'd known about it sooner, you should never have set foot inside this house or spoken to my daughter. Never mind, sir—I say, never mind. It's done now."

"What's done?"

"Never mind. Good evening, sir. Your hat's in the hall, and the hall door opens into the street. I don't want to see you again."

"I shall write to you about this, sir," said the indignant suitor as he rose to go. "I am justified in demanding an understanding."

"Confound him!" muttered the irate old gentleman when he was gone. "Write to me, will he? He's written quite enough already, the impudent scoundrel!"

Of course, there were tears and entreaties galore that night, but the old man was obdurate.

"I tell you, Lucy, I won't hear of it. I've got my reasons. No, I won't tell you why. Lucy must not see the fellow. I won't have it—there!"

And when he reached town the next day he sat down and wrote to his wife, telling her he wished her and Lucy to come home at once. He planned this out on his journey up. And he inclosed a severe little letter to Lucy, telling her again that she was on no account to see Frank Ashleigh any more.

But she did, all the same. And a sad little girl she was when Ashleigh met her on the sands between Cromer and Overstrand.

"I can't understand it, dearest," he said. "I assure you I haven't the slightest idea what your father has against me."

"Nor have I, Frank. He won't say. But look at this dreadful letter I've had from him."

Ashleigh took the letter and looked at it. The next moment he uttered a shout of astonishment.

"Is this your father's writing?" he asked.

"Of course it is."

"113A St. Mark's buildings, E. C. Lucy—Lucy—is that his business address?"

"Yes."

"It's all right now, Lucy. Give me a fortnight, and I'll undertake to get your father's consent to our engagement."

The following Tuesday morning Mr. George Gregory found an envelope in his private box addressed to "Harold Vincent, Esq." He tore it open and produced a typewritten letter as follows:

> Dear Sir—I have much pleasure in informing you that I have accepted your story, entitled "The Stolen Diamonds," for publication in The Cheapside Magazine. Proofs will be sent you in the course of a few days. I am glad that my letter of last month did not discourage you and must congratulate you on your very marked improvement in style and diction. Yours truly,
>
> THE EDITOR.

Mr. Gregory could scarcely believe his own eyes as he read. At last! He had succeeded in getting a story accepted.

A week went by, and then one morning Mr. Gregory found a fat envolope waiting for him, addressed to "Harold Vincent." It contained the proofs of his story. From morning until night he gloated over them. He corrected them with black ink, with red ink and with blue pencil. He posted them in a registered envelope, and he went back to his suburban villa delirious with happiness.

"A letter for you, papa," said his daughter very demurely.

She knew the writing; so did he. It read as follows:

> My Dear Sir—Since my return to town I have been anxious to call upon you to ask an explanation of the misunderstanding which arose between us at Cromer. I still most firmly and respectfully urge my claims as a suitor for your daughter's hand, and I think it only pure justice to myself to ask for an explanation of your sudden animosity toward me. Therefore I propose calling upon you this evening at a little after 8. Yours truly, FRANCIS ASHLEIGH.

Lucy watched her father as he read it.

"A most straightforward and businesslike letter," he muttered to himself. "He is quite right to take such a course. I was abrupt with him. Lucy, my dear," he added, "this is a letter from Mr. Ashleigh, asking me to see him tonight. Are your sentiments toward him unchanged?"

"Yes, father dear. Are yours?"

"My dear child, you don't understand business. Sometimes it is necessary to put young men to the test."

An hour later Mr. Gregory and Frank Ashleigh were closeted together in the study.

"Well, well," said Mr. Gregory at the conclusion of the interview. "You must excuse what happened, but a parent's feelings, young man—a parent's feelings are not always to be controlled, and—and—I completely broke down under them on that occasion. But I meant nothing, my dear boy, absolutely nothing. We all make mistakes sometimes and you were mistaken in me, you know. And now let us join Mrs. Gregory and Lucy. They'll both be glad to see you, especially Lucy."

* * * * * * * *

"Your story will appear in the November number."

So wrote the editor of The Cheapside Magazine to Harold Vincent in answer to a letter of inquiry.

On the morning of the 1st of November Mr. Gregory bought the new Cheapside Magazine.

And then he read his story. Somehow or other he wasn't satisfied with it after all. He read it again. No, it certainly did seem a little feeble.

Next evening Frank Ashleigh came to dinner.

"I've had an awful wigging over a story I've published," he said, "and I've caught it hot from the firm. I tried to do the author a kindness," went on the editor, "but this is what comes of it. The worst of it is, he's sent me another batch of stories. What am I to do to them?"

"Burn them—I mean return them," said Mr. Gregory.

They were returned and burned.—Harmsworth Magazine.

The Arch of Chinese Origin.

The Chinese structures that impress the engineering observer most strongly are the bridges, the pagodas, the city walls and certain details of building construction. The arch, that beautiful structure from the scientific as well as the aesthetic point of view, is generally believed to be of Roman origin. It was not known to or at least never used by the Greeks, and although the shape appears in certain specimens of Hindoo architecture it is of false variety—that is, a succession of protruding corbels. In China, on the other hand, we find it of most widespread and general application, and examination shows that the principles involved are thoroughly understood. The universal use of the design in all parts of the country and the undoubted antiquity of so many of the existing examples clearly demonstrate that it long antedates any possible foreign suggestions and go a long way to establish it as of Chinese origin, a department, however, which, like printing and gunpowder, never passed beyond the national borders.—Engineering Magazine.

The End of the Storm.

"After a long rainy day," said Mr. Goslington, "with the rain falling ceaselessly and with seemingly every prospect of its keeping on falling all night and the next day and all the next week, when I have stopped looking out of the window to see if it was going to clear up and have settled down, with curtains drawn, to comfort and a book, I hear, after nightfall, somebody passing by in the street whistling. That means always just one thing—the storm is over, and the weather has begun to clear, and when I go to the window and look out now I see that the sidewalks begin to show dry patches; not only has the rain ceased, but things have already begun to dry up.

"I have never known this sign to fail, and I have never known a long-drawn storm whose final happy clearing away did not set some cheerful hearted person whistling."—New York Sun.

The Chicago Tribune

is a newspaper for bright and intelligent people. It is made up to attract people who think. It is not neutral or colorless, constantly trimming in an endeavor to please both sides, but it is independent in the best sense of the word. It has pronounced opinions and is fearless in expressing them, but it is always fair to its opponents.

Matters of national or vital public interest get more space in THE TRIBUNE than in any other paper in the West.

For these reasons it is the newspaper you should read during the forthcoming political campaign.

THE TRIBUNE'S financial columns never mislead the public.

Its facilities for gathering news, both local and foreign, are far superior to those of any other newspaper in the West.

It presents the news in as fair a way as possible, and lets its readers form their opinions.

While it publishes the most comprehensive articles on all news features, if you are busy the "Summary of THE DAILY TRIBUNE" published daily on the first page gives you briefly all the news of the day within one column.

Its sporting news is always the best and Sunday Pink Sporting Section is better than any sporting paper in the country.

It is the "cleanest" daily printed in the West

Last evening the Ariel Ladies Sextette, or the Smith Sisters as they are better known here, made their second appearance before a Tecumseh audience and the Star Course committee made no mistake in their selection of this entertainment. The sisters have the art of music thoroughly mastered and every number on the program showed talent. In the closing number, a chorus, "Intermezzo" (Calvaleria Rusticana), their voices blended almost as one. Miss Marguerite Smith, the child impersonator, charmed everyone. She is said to have no equal as a delineator of child character and her impersonation of "Patsi" certainly proved this statement.

RAILROAD NEWS.

Rumors of the sale of the C. H. & D. to the Vanderbilts are again revived. Two years ago negotiations of this character were pending, but what was considered by the prospective purchasers to be an unreasonable price, was asked. This they refused to give.

Having recently purchased the Cincinnati Northern, in some quarters it is thought the Vanderbilts are attempting to force the Woodfords to sell. By extensive improvements, it is claimed, that the Vanderbilts could make the Cincinnati Northern a formidable competitor of the C., H. & D. With this line the Vanderbilts could cut off a large slice of Western Michigan business, which now comes to Toledo and goes south over the C., H. & D. It could be sent from Jackson over the Cincinnati Northern.

Another circumstance which indicates that the Vanderbilts are trying to bring the Woodfords to terms is the delay in reorganizing the Cincinnati Northern. In the event that they should secure control of the C. H. & D., the Michigan division of the Cincinnati Northern could be annexed to the C. H. & D.

Another reason for the postponement of the Cincinnati Northern's reorganization is that the possession of the C H. & D. will materially modify the manner of handling it. Without the C. H. & D the Vanderbilts may decide to put several millions into the Cincinnati Northern and build it up to the standard of their other lines.—Toledo Blade.

W. O. Hunt has resigned his position as traveling freight and passenger agent for the Detroit & Lima Northern and will accept a position with the Lamb Fence Co. at Adrian. He has been connected with the road over four years. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt left yesterday for a ten days' trip to Philadelphia, Pittsburg, New York and Washington.

Wednesday night the Cincinnati Northern depot at Ridgeway was broken into and things were scattered about generally. It is thought to be the work of boys. An attempt was made to force the door to the passenger room, but this failed, and they burst in the ticket office window, but found nothing to carry away.

The Downing Reception.

Mr. and Mrs. Downing gave an informal reception after the concert last evening to the Smith sisters, old friends from their former home. A most delightful hour was enjoyed by all in which these young ladies proved themselves as entertaining in the parlor as on the stage. The Smith Sisters have travelled for nine years in every state in the Union excepting California.

They were persuaded to sing a lullaby, a most exquisite rendering, which filled the guests with admiration. Then Miss Marguerite captured all hearts anew with "The Bear Story," one of her inimitable child impersonations. A very appetizing lunch was served and all agreed the Downings' reception was an unqualified success and was one of the nicest social events of the season.

The Show Dog.

Rightly or wrongly, the fancier has been accused of spoiling every breed with which he has had anything to do not only in the case of dogs, but poultry, and the charge may not be altogether without foundation. Points, as with horses and cattle, may be and doubtless are excellent in their way, but to breed for exaggerated peculiarities, as in the case of the bulldog—many of them can hardly walk—is productive of no good at all. At one time dogs were so much got up for show that many of their real characteristics were quite changed, and in course of time the kennel club wisely drew up a code of rules "as to the preparation of dogs for exhibition."

Those well versed in the mysteries of shows need not be told of the many expedients resorted to; but the fact of ten rules having been promulgated for the governance of shows under Kennel club rules proves how much artificiality once existed in the showing of dogs. The law would not have been drafted had it not been that the practices forbidden were indulged in. The rules forbid the use of coloring, whitening or darkening matter, chemical preparations for the coat, oily or greasy substances, destroying the tissues of the ear or mutilating the lining membrane of the mouth; but dew claws may be removed from dogs of all breeds. All dog lovers are glad that this making up for show is put a stop to, for nothing could well be more reprehensible or deteriorative of the value of the various breeds of dogs.—Saturday Review.

Immoral Music.

It may be soberly questioned whether certain styles of music that are much in vogue do not, on the whole, exercise a debilitating and even immoral influence, says Waldo S. Pratt in The Atlantic, not because they are technically poor, but because their very beauty and charm enable them to instill a peculiarly insidious miasmatic poison of sensuality or of luxurious indolence or of downright pessimism. How is the student to be put on his guard against these deadly forms of delight or be taught to offset their influence by other forms that express a sturdy, noble and trustful ideality except through processes of education? It is toward the establishment of manly and righteous standards in every field of spiritual experience that a college system should always strive, and, just as this has already been done in our colleges for literary art and in some measure for the arts of design, so should it be for the great art of tone.

This, too, is a comparatively new ideal in musical education, but one whose importance is already clearly seen by our more thoughtful musical workers. It is the sight of it that gives them assurance and self respect in their work and a missionary enthusiasm for their beloved art. Sooner or later something of the same high regard for music and its educative values will penetrate the minds of those who administer the colleges of our land and will lead them to see that such a contention is neither extreme nor unpractical.

Churchgoing Animals.

There is a dove in Lewiston, Me., which has been a regular attendant at church for eight or ten years, being attracted by the music, of which it is very fond. After church the dove is taken to the Sunday school class by a boy and seems to enjoy the proceedings. Unlike many churchgoers, the weather makes no difference to the dove, but every Sunday, summer or winter, it is at its post on the organ.

There is a church bell on Salt Lake City's east side that seems to have a peculiar attraction for the dogs in the vicinity. Each Sabbath morning, as soon as the bell begins its noise, many of the canines in the neighborhood prick up their ears and start in single file for the church. Arriving there, they array themselves in front and start on a yowling obligato. This beautiful vocal effect is persevered in as long as the bell keeps going, and when it stops the dogs feel that their duty has been done and, dropping their ears and voices, start home again.—Lewiston Journal.

Singular Accident.

Bay City, Mich., Jan. 25.—A singular accident happened at 10:30 Thursday morning, which sent Frank Timm, of Eighteenth street, to the hospital with a pair of badly bruised and sprained legs. He was hauling a load of ice, and sitting on a chunk. While crossing Water street his load became unsteady. When he pulled up suddenly he was carried by the falling ice under the horses' feet, where other lumps fell upon him. He was trampled by the horses and finally run over by the wagon.

Killed Himself.

Battle Creek, Mich. Jan. 25.—Theodore Barnes, aged 30, who had charge of the dining cars of the Grand Trunk road nights, shot himself through the heart Thursday forenoon. Last November Miss Adda Harrison and Barnes were married. Lately they separated and Barnes brooded over the fact. He killed himself at his boarding house. He was born at Kalamo, Eaton county. An inquest will be held.

Neck Broken.

Gladstone, Mich., Jan. 25.—Wm. McDonald, an employe of the Northwestern Cooperage & Lumber Co., was killed Thursday while unloading logs at the mill tracks. He was standing on the end of a car and missed his hold with a cant hook, falling to the ice, a distance of about ten feet. His neck was broken and death was instantaneous.

Slowly Ebbing Away.

Waltham, Mass., Jan. 25.—At her home in this city Mrs. Nathaniel P. Banks, widow of the former governor, congressman and general, is now lying seriously ill and her death is expected at any time. Her strength is slowly ebbing away, due to old age, for she is 81. At the time of the Prince of Wales' visit to Boston Mrs. Banks was the first lady of the state, her husband then being governor of the commonwealth, and she was one of the ladies who had the honor of dancing with the prince, now king, at the grand ball.

Another Salt Cure.

Pana, Ill., Jan. 25.—Mrs. Brazil Hayward, residing east of this city, was thought to be dying Wednesday. The physicians in attendance administered a tablespoon of salt warm water hypodermically. Thursday evening the patient was apparently out of danger.

His Limit.

"I'm getting along," said Mr. Cumrox. "I'm progressing slowly, but surely."

"In what?"

"Culture. I've been traveling around with Mrs. C. and the girls until I'm getting right refined. But there's one thing I don't think I'll achieve. I don't believe I'll ever be able to go into an antique store and tell the difference between bric-a-brac and junk."—Washington Star.

BRAVE LIFE SAVERS.

AN EXTRAORDINARY RESCUE ON THE SHORE OF LAKE SUPERIOR.

The Hardy Surfmen Defied Wind and Water and Ice In Their Three Perilous Trips Through the Breakers and Over the Reefs.

Lieutenant Worth G. Ross, United States revenue cutter service, tells in St. Nicholas of an extraordinary rescue on the shore of Lake Superior. A schooner and steam barge were stranded at Marquette, and after making heroic efforts all day long to succor the survivors the would be rescuers telegraphed to a regular life saving crew. Some one proposed this as a last resort. It seemed like a forlorn hope, for the nearest station was then at Ship Canal, 110 miles distant.

However, the chance, meager as it looked, was considered worth taking, and arrangements were at once begun to bring the lifeboat and its crew. A telegram, which had to be carried six miles by a tug, was sent to the keeper of the station telling of the peril of the sailors. The managers of the railroad offered a special train to bring the surfmen and their apparatus to Marquette.

As soon as the keeper received the message he and his men, with the lifeboat, wreck gun and all necessary appurtenances, were taken on the tug, which steamed as fast as she could to Houghton, where was waiting a train, consisting of an engine, a passenger coach and two flat cars. It took the life savers but a short time, with the helpers who volunteered, to put the apparatus on board the cars and secure it, after which the train sped swiftly out into the night on her merciful errand, followed by the resounding cheers of the crowd of persons who had come upon the scene.

Perhaps no life saving crew had ever before started out on a journey so exceptional. They were stirred to the noblest impulses by its intense significance and had determined among themselves to do or die in the perilous task before them. Although the track was heavy with snow, the powerful locomotive raced on at high speed through the driving tempest, at times almost reaching the rate of a mile a minute.

The coating of snow made the engine and cars look strangely grotesque as the train pulled into the railway station at Marquette after a run, with its necessary stoppages, that had never been matched under the circumstances. It was nearly midnight when the crowd of expectant and cheering men helped the life savers and their appliances from the cars. Wagons and sleighs had been provided to take them to the lake and also a plentiful supply of food for the half starved sailors when they should be brought ashore.

After a hard trip along the dark beach in the wash of the surf, which was thick with driftwood, the station crew finally arrived abreast of the vessels. A throng of people were there before them, anxiously awaiting their arrival. The bonfires, which had been kept burning, gave needed light to the workers, and, in view of the great seas that were tumbling in, it was thought best to attempt first a rescue by means of lines. One was fired over the steam barge amidships, but it appears that the sailors were prevented from getting it by the rush of breakers across the decks.

The keeper now decided to use the boat. There were two reefs to pass, over which the waves were dashing with frightful fury. The lifeboat crossed the first one, shipping three seas on the way, but the rudder becoming disabled the men were obliged to return. While repairs were being made another shot was fired over the vessel, but no one reached the line.

At daybreak the boat was again launched, and by strenuous and undaunted exertions the oarsmen held to their work, succeeded in crossing the reefs, alive with foaming breakers, and got alongside the barge. By this time the lifeboat was sheathed with ice, the seas having frozen on the planking, and, being thus weighted down, it was considered prudent to take in only nine of the vessel's crew. With these a start was made for the shore, which was regained after another valiant and perilous passage.

Two more trips were made to the wrecks by the life savers, their boat at times being flooded and partially beaten back and once nearly thrown end over end on the reef. The men themselves were drenched with icy water, which made their work much harder to endure.

Their heroic and indomitable efforts were crowned with full success, every one on the two vessels, 24 in all, being saved. Many of these were almost frozen and nearly starved and were immediately taken by the citizens to the fires on the beach, where there was food.

I cannot do better here than to quote from the report of the general superintendent of the life saving service touching this memorable achievement of the ship canal crew: "To have come rushing through the night and tempest over so many snowy leagues to the rescue of a group of despairing sailors and then, with hearts greater than danger, to have gone out again and again through the dreadful breakers and brought every man ashore was a feat so boldly adventurous that the current accounts of it in the public journals roused at the time the whole lake region to intense enthusiasm and sent thrills of sympathy and admiration through the country."

Not So With Hers.

There is one thing on which the women folks all agree, that the man's overcoat will do just as well as not for another winter.—Atchison Globe.

Hauptmann and His Hobby.

Gerhart Hauptmann, the famous German playwright and author, must have been born under a lucky star. In the first place, while young he inherited a large fortune; then, and still while young, he married a wealthy woman. Of late years his income has been largely increased by the profits from his plays. He has a hobby that his means allow him to gratify. That hobby is the building of villas. He began by building one in Silesia, a second he erected in the vicinity of Berlin and the next he planted in the Riesengebirge. He is at present building a fourth near Dresden.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

To Punish Johnny.

Francis Parkman, the historian, had a Mosaic idea of justice. A friend met him one day walking along the street leading a street boy with either hand. "What in the world are you doing, Parkman?" asked his friend. "I found that Johnny here had eaten all of the apple instead of dividing with his little brother. I am going to buy another for the younger boy and make Johnny watch him while he eats it."

TOOK HIS ADVICE.

A Veterinary Surgeon of Battle Creek Tells About It.

How many times in life a few words of good advice, coming from a friend one can depend upon, will save us hours perhaps months of misery. The following which coming from Battle Creek will interest our readers. Dr. Oliver Guiteaux, veterinary surgeon of that city, a well known man there, as well as in Kalamazoo and Marshall, speaks of his experience with the little conqueror and result of a few timely words of advice, he says:

"I was standing in Amberg & Murphy's drug store in Battle Creek one day when a friend of mine came in and asked for a box of kidney pills. After he had made his purchase I said quietly to him, "You have made a mistake in buying those." His reply was "How is that? I said Doan's Kidney Pills are worth all the others put together. As he wanted my reasons for thinking so I told him my kidneys had bothered me for years, that I suffered from backache until I could scarcely stand it, that I had nearly every symptom to be found where the kidneys are affected, that I had used remedy after remedy including box after box of the one he had just purchased, and that until I used Doan's Kidney Pills I might have taken as many spoonfuls of water. In fact, I think some of them hurt me. A couple of weeks after this I met him on the street, when he said: "Doc., Doan's Kidney Pills are just as you represented. After using the box about which we had a conversation in Amberg & Murphy's drug store I was as bad as ever. I then procured Doan's and stuck to their treatment until they cured me."

Doan's Kidney Pills for sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Mailed by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

BABY'S PORTRAIT.

[Sketched by his mother.]
A little head of shapely mold,
Two baby eyes so bright and bold,
A dainty little nose;
Two little cheeks so round and fair,
With tiny dimples hiding there
Like dewdrops in a rose.

A little mouth so fragrant sweet,
A tiny dimpling chin so neat,
And both just made to kiss;
Two cunning ears each in its place,
A baby forehead set with grace,
Whose photograph is this?

Two sturdy shoulders, broad and square,
Two chubby hands so fat and fair,
And cunning feet so coy;
A roguish smile for you and me,
Sweet baby ways; now, don't you see
The portrait of our boy?

—Pearson's Weekly.

TAKING IN MR. MOODY.

How His Confidence Was Abused by the Natives of Bethany.

When D. L. Moody went to Bethany during his travels in the east, he was very soft hearted over all the multitude of beggars there, not only because the place is so unusual, but because he was moved by its beautiful traditions. He gave quantities of "backsheesh" and then asked if any of the children had the names of Mary and Martha. Yes, indeed, they had. And that opened his pockets again.

The news of his generosity spread through the village, and new claimants came until his visit seemed likely to result in a fight for existence. The case was getting desperate, and he told the dragoman to call for silence while he made an address. Then he said:

"I have come 8,000 miles to see this little village of Bethany. It was a place my Master loved to visit, and I have come to see it because he loved it. I am very glad to meet you all, but now I want to be alone. I have no more backsheesh, and I bid you goodby."

A fine looking boy of 16 replied to the address. He spoke fluently and with the grace of an orator. Mr. Moody was delighted with the beginning of his oration, but not with its conclusion.

"We are glad to see the gentleman and his friends who have come so far, but the gentleman must not think that his actions are equal to the importance of his visit. Six thousand miles is a long way to come, and the gentleman must have sacrificed much to make the visit. In consequence it is natural for us to expect that he would be munificent in backsheesh. This he has not been, and we now expect that he will give us a great deal more."

Mr. Moody was so disgusted that he abandoned the situation entirely and hurried away with his friends.

"I did think," said he, "that boy had a soul above backsheesh."

"And did you think, too, that some of the children were named Martha and Mary?" he was asked.

"Certainly. Why not?"

Nothing; only they were all boys."—Youth's Companion.

The Average Lawsuit.

There is nothing more ridiculous than the average lawsuit. Two men dispute over a few dollars and go to law. Both are sure to lose. Their neighbors are dragged in as witnesses, and the costs amount to 10 or 20 times the amount in dispute. Frequently these lawsuits ruin families and start quarrels that last for years. Some men claim it is "principle" that actuates them in these lawsuits. It is bullheadedness, pure and simple. It is nearly always easy to "split the difference."

Another bad feature about these lawsuits is that the county is put to considerable expense, and men willing to work are compelled to sit on the jury. Settle your disputes without going to law. If the man with whom you are disputing is not willing to "split the difference," he will probably accept a proposition to leave it to three neighbors.—Atchison Globe.

Rheumatism.

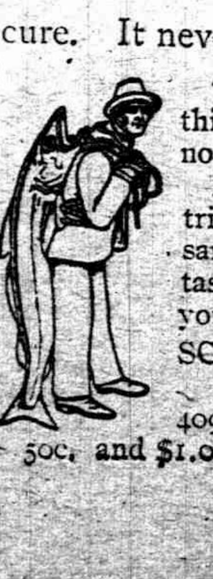
Nobody knows all about it; and nothing, now known, will always cure it.

Doctors try Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, when they think it is caused by imperfect digestion of food. You can do the same.

It may or may not be caused by the failure of stomach and bowels to do their work. If it is, you will cure it; if not, you will do no harm.

The way, to cure a disease is to stop its cause, and help the body get back to its habit of health.

When Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil does that, it cures; when it don't, it don't cure. It never does harm.



The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

THEY SWARMED.

On the morning of Jan. 17 the Lady Bees of Glenn Hive took flight from their home and lighted at the home of Mrs. Etta Thomas. After a short rest they resumed their journey the objective point being the home of the retired R. K., Mrs. Ellen H. Richart, where they were safely hived at 11:30 a. m. They immediately took possession of the kitchen and dining room and began storing honey from the good things they had already provided for a bountiful dinner.

After the hungry Bees had been fully satisfied, they brought forward a beautiful rocking chair, which was presented by the F. K. in behalf of the Hive, to the retired R. K. The gift was very thankfully received. And each year as the years go by the chair will be more and more highly appreciated. Long live the ladies of the Maccabees.

Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1 00 at C. A Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

Advice From a Butcher.

"What the newspapers should do is to devote less space to describing what people should wear and more to what they should eat," remarked the butcher. "Fashionably dressed women come in here every day who don't know lamb from mutton or a hen from a rooster. No wonder men have dyspepsia! I find that men know more about the quality of food stuffs than women do. Many of the latter don't even know the few simple tests that might help them to distinguish an old fowl from a young one, and about meat they're greener yet. A young woman came in here the other day and asked for two pounds of veal cutlets. I showed her the loin I proposed to chop the cutlets from, and she remarked, 'Yes; that's very nice, but isn't it rather thick to fry?'"—Philadelphia Times.

Two Great Objects.

"They say," remarked the very cynical person, "that in this corrupt and superficial age the great object is not to be found out."

"That shows you have very little experience with bill collectors," answered the impecunious friend. "My great object is not to be found in."—Washington Star.

WANTED A RECEIPT.

The Old Lady Insisted Upon Following Instructions.

The old lady was not used to traveling on the Broadway cars. She had evidently spent her youth and middle age in the rural regions, but doubtless she called old Ireland home. The conductor, who differed little from the rest of his kind, came through the car calling for fares. The old woman held out her hand, in which a nickel was tightly clutched, then drew it suddenly back as if she had made some mistake.

"I want my 'resate' first," she said in a rich Doolian dialect.

The conductor paid no heed; but, holding out his hand, demanded, "Fare, please."

"But I want my 'resate,'" she repeated.

"No receipts, lady," said the stolid conductor. "I'll have to have your fare."

"My son told me not to give up any money without getting a 'resate,'" insisted the old woman stoutly.

The kind lady with the sweet face and Paris clothes proffered the assurance that it was "all right," that nobody got receipts.

"See, I pay my fare without one" she said, giving the conductor a dime and the woman a reassuring smile.

But the woman was stubborn. "I want my 'resate,'" she reiterated.

The conductor mechanically held out a nickel to the kind lady of the Paris gown, but she shook her head, nodded toward the old woman and smiled. The conductor without a word passed on through the car, which lurched and swayed through Union square. She of the "resate" shook her head grimly, settled herself back in her seat and held on to the nickel, determined not to relinquish it without the necessary acknowledgment.—New York Mail and Express.

BEAUTIES OF A GLACIER.

Scenes That Are Likened to Visions of a Glorified City.

The fascinations of a glacier are as witching as they are dangerous. Apostolic vision of a crystal city glorified by light "that never was on land or sea" was not more beautiful than these vast ice rivers, whose onward course is chronicled, not by years and centuries, but by geological ages, says a British Columbia correspondent of the New York Post. With white domed show cornices wreathed fantastic as arabesque and with the glassy walls of emerald grotto reflecting a million sparkling jewels, one might be in some cavernous dream world or among the tottering grandeur of an ancient city. The ice pillars and silvered pinnacles, which scientists call seracs, stand like the sculptured marble of temples crumbling to ruin. Glittering pendants hang from the rim of bluish chasm. Tints too brilliant for artists' brush gleam from the turquoise of crystal walls. Rivers that flow through valleys of ice and lakes, hemmed in by hills of ice, shine with an azure depth that is very infinity's self.

In the morning, when all thaw has been stopped by the night's cold, there is deathly silence over the glacial fields, even the mountain cataracts fall noiselessly from the precipice to ledge in tenuous, wind blown threads. But with the rising of the sun the whole glacial world bursts to life in noisy tumult. Surface rivulets brawl over the ice with a glee that is vocal and almost human. The gurgle of rivers flowing through subterranean tunnels becomes a roar, as of a rushing, angry sea, ice grip no longer holds back rock scree loosened by the night's frost, and there is the reverberating thunder of the falling avalanche.

Made Up For Lost Time.

When President Kruger sailed for England some years ago, he was the object of much concern to his fellow passengers on board the liner from Cape Town, many of whom were consumed with curiosity when they noticed his absence from the dinner table for the first four days out.

On inquiry they found that the careful Transvaaler spent the dinner hour on deck, where he ate biltong and biscuits. When asked his reason, he testily replied, "I have no money to fool away on expensive eating, like you Englishmen."

The correspondent who tells the story and who was on board at the time adds. "You should have seen the old man trying to make up for lost time when it was explained to him that his passage money included his meals on board."

PALE WOMEN

A Bloodless Face Indicates Trouble.

Watery Blood a Menace to Health.

WE KNOW HOW PALE PEOPLE CAN GET RICH RED BLOOD.

COME AND LET US TELL YOU ABOUT VINOL.

When blood is watery and thin, or, as doctors would say, lacks red blood corpuscles, it is a sign that much is radically wrong.

We would advise everyone who has such symptoms to start at once to take a proper remedy to overcome this trouble.

That remedy is Vinol, the greatest and most modern tonic and rebuilder.

Vinol owes its virtue to the fact that it contains in a highly concentrated state the active curative principles extracted from cods' livers, the same elements that have made cod-liver oil famous for wasting diseases.

These medicinal elements are dissolved in a delicious table wine so that Vinol is most palatable.

None of the vile-smelling obnoxious grease that characterizes cod-liver oil and frequently makes it an impossible remedy for those who should take it, is found in Vinol.

We could relate many instances where Vinol has done good and restored the roses of health to the pale cheeks of the sufferer.

The following is a fair sample of the way people write in regard to Vinol:

"For several months I suffered lassitude and tired all the time. Also a sinking feeling in my stomach, which nothing would relieve, and I was pale and weak. As an experiment I tried Vinol and if I wrote pages I could not tell all it has done for me."—MRS. A. K. LA PRUSCH, Amesbury, Mass.

Because we know Vinol so well, and because we know so surely what it will do, and how it will accomplish the good it does in a scientific way, we unreservedly endorse and recommend it, and in every instance guarantee to refund to any one what they pay us for Vinol if they do not find it entirely satisfactory.

ON A TRAIN.

Case of Smallpox Discovered on the Detroit & Mackinaw.

East Tawas, Mich., Jan. 29.—A lumberman whose name cannot be learned at present and who hails from Saginaw, went to Messrs. Gardner & Richard's camp near Rose City last Thursday. He was taken ill and a physician who examined him advised his immediate return home. He took the train on the Rose City branch of the Detroit & Mackinaw railroad, and the conductor of the train, being suspicious of the disease, telegraphed to East Tawas. Dr. D. C. Howell, the railroad's physician, went to Emery Junction to intercept the train, but the sick man had entered the smoker of the train bound to Bay City. When the train reached East Tawas he was examined by Dr. Howell, who pronounced the disease smallpox, and he was immediately put back on the train and in the same seat he occupied while coming from Rose City. The windows were closed and the passengers taken into the smoker. Then at the rate of 35 miles an hour the train passed through Tawas City and East Tawas and was side-tracked at the "Y" near the park out of town.

The man is now in the building occupied by the rafting crew of N. Mills. Fred Tifer will nurse him. Considerable fear is expressed, as many persons have been exposed. Many are applying for vaccination. Dr. Thompson telegraphed to Detroit for 100 points.

St. Louis, Mich., Jan. 29.—Alma is excited over a smallpox case. A woodsman who returned from Vestaburg exposed a large number of the citizens at the Milliken house and four inmates have been quarantined. People there are reported to be rushing to get vaccinated.

Made Restitution.

Mt. Clemens, Mich., Jan. 29.—Austin Peay, of Richmond, this county, who has been in jail here for the past month charged with negotiating forged paper at the Macomb County Savings bank at Lenox, will be arraigned in the circuit court to-day. Peay, who secured about $2,000, has made full restitution and expects that he will be dealt with leniently, as a petition signed by a large number of citizens of Richmond has been presented to the judge, asking for leniency, on the grounds of Peay's previous good reputation, and the fact that the losers by his forgeries have been reimbursed.

Peay comes from a prominent Kentucky family, and was a brother-in-law of Gen. Lawton. At Richmond, where he lived with his family, he represented the Equitable Life Insurance Co. and was considered one of the smoothest insurance solicitors in the state.

To Be Isolated.

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 29.—The Henry jury will be in charge of a special officer, and they will be boarded with Sheriff Maines at the jail. This is the first time in the history of the county where such precaution has been taken with a jury in a criminal case, except where the charge was murder. Henry is charged with larceny from the person and his pal, who was accused of the same crime, was convicted. This is the second trial, the former jury disagreeing. There was a rumor to the effect that the other jury had been tampered with, and to avoid any such difficulty this time, the panel of jurors was not given out until the last moment.

Prophecy Quickly Fulfilled.

Coldwater, Mich., Jan. 29.—William Foster, of Girard, dropped dead in the road two and a half miles north of this city. The case is a singular one Ed Bates, a tenant on Foster's farm, brought a load of hogs to the city, owned jointly by Bates and Foster. Foster learned of the removal of the hogs, started for Coldwater and met Bates, who was returning home. The men had some words, when Foster remarked:

"I am going to die," and sure enough he fell back dead. Foster was about 45 years of age, and subject to heart trouble.

Broke His Leg.

Stark, Mich., Jan. 29.—While returning home from drawing ice Monday afternoon, Louis Krumm's horses became unmanageable and ran away, colliding with another team of horses. Mr. Krumm was thrown violently to the ground and his leg broken.

Victim of a Runaway.

Reading, Mich., Jan. 29.—Frank Blair, a Cambria blacksmith, was seriously injured in a runaway in this village. His buggy seat gave way and he was thrown several feet, being picked up in an unconscious condition.

Damage Suit.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 29.—Mary E Switzer, of Ypsilanti, has commenced a $20,000 damage suit against the Detroit, Ypsilanti & Ann Arbor railway for injuries received while alighting from a car at Ypsilanti.

Pugilist Soaked.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 29.—In justice court Monday "Kid" Berridge, the pugilist, was sentenced to pay a fine of $20 or go to jail for 30 days for stealing an overcoat.

Attempted Murder.

Chicago, Jan. 29.—Enemies of Jos. Wilhoff, a detective of the Evanston Anti-Saloon league, planned to murder him and attempted to execute the crime Sunday night at Wilhoff's house, 914 Fletcher street. Concealed near the rear door of the detective's house, three men waited for him to come out, and when he made his appearance he was seized from behind, felled to the ground and stabbed in the region of the heart. Wilhoff, although he had received threatening anonymous letters, had continued his duties of securing evidence against the "blind pig" keepers of Evanston. Several arrests will probably be made to-day.

Broke the World's Record.

Chicago, Jan. 29.—The Anson bowling team Monday night broke the world's bowling record by averaging a fraction over 991 in a championship game.

Something very similar to the telephone was used in China 1,000 years ago.

Lingering LaGrippe Cough.

G. Vacher, 157 Osgood St, Chicago says: "My wife had a very severe case of lagrippe and it left her with a very bad cough. She tried a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar and it gave immediate relief. A 50 cent bottle cured her cough entirely." Price 25c and 50c. J. J Orr

J. A. Lambert, of Rachel, N. C. writes: I heartily endorse Foley Kidney Cure. It does what you claim it will do, and there is nothing equal to it and I thank you for the good it has done me. Accept no substitute. J. J. Orr.

MANY SOLONS ABSENT.

The State Legislature Is Running with a Very Light Attendance.

TAX BILLS PILE UP RAPIDLY.

Relief for the Supreme Court Is a Subject That Is Agitating the State Lawmakers.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 29.—As predicted in my last letter the legislature is running with a very light attendance this week. Three committees are absent from the senate, and with several senators absent because of sickness, the two-thirds vote necessary to give bills immediate effect, etc., is not available. The attendance in the house is also light, but considerable work will doubtless be accomplished by both bodies, and the wisdom of doing away with the long adjournment of previous years will be demonstrated. The fact that the long adjournment was taken advantage of by the members who desired to have a good time at state expense, thus necessitating the doing of most of the institution visiting after reconvening is probably the best argument in favor of its abolishment.

Tax laws are piling up at a somewhat rapid rate, and if the increase keeps up to the expiration of the 50 day limit for the introduction of bills, the legislators cannot complain of having an assortment from which to make a choice. Senators Kelly and Nichols have united in the drafting of a bill which is a sort of an offset for the Atwood bill, providing for the taxation of railroad companies.

Applies Only to Railroads.

The combination measure likewise applies only to railroads, its authors being of the opinion that it is better to tax telephone, telegraph and express companies specifically instead of on an ad valorem basis. It differs from the Atwood bill in numerous particulars, the most important of which is that it does not create a new board to assess the property, but provides that this shall be done by the state tax commission. It further provides for an appeal from the assessment by the commission to a board consisting of the tax commissioners, attorney general and governor, the principal object of this provision being to make the administration responsible for the proper execution of the law. It is figured that the influence of the governor will go a long way toward securing absolutely fair treatment for all interests involved.

The only specific tax bill thus far introduced is one presented by Senator Robson, of Ingham. It applies to the four classes of corporations mentioned, and makes the auditor general the assessing officer, designating the members of the tax commission, the attorney general and the state treasurer a board to review the assessments. The assessment is to be based on the market value of the stocks and bonds of the companies. The value of the property is to be determined by its commercial value, the price for which the stocks and bonds sold on April 30th of the year in which the assessment is made. The senator has not yet fixed upon the rate of taxation to be applied.

Campaign of Education

The tax committees have not yet got down to business, but will probably commence the consideration of these various bills in a few days. In the meantime a campaign of education is on. Prof. M. E. Cooley, who recently appraised the value of the property of railroads and other corporations. President Campbell of the state tax commission, Hon. T. J. O'Brien, of Grand Rapids, a prominent railroad attorney, and Attorney General Oren having been invited to address the legislators on various phases of the subject.

For a long time there has been friction between the physicians of the state board of health over regulations relative to the reporting by the former to the local health officers of all cases of communicable diseases dangerous to the public health. The trouble arose over the question of what authority should determine what diseases should be reported. Representative Goodrich has introduced a bill which aims to remove all doubt in this connection by specifically authorizing the state board of health to add to the list from time to time such diseases as it deems dangerous.

Mob Violence Becoming Too Common.

Representative Hardy, of Ingham, is impressed with the belief that cases of mob violence are becoming altogether too common and that they are being heard of in the north more frequently than is desirable. With a view to discouraging their appearance in this state he has introduced a bill which makes a county in which a person dies as the result of injuries received at the hands of a mob, responsible in damages to the heirs of such person. The amount of damages is gauged according to the population of the county in which the injuries are inflicted.

The reform wave which commenced with the introduction of numerous bills designed to discourage the use of cigarettes is spreading. The latest reform measure to put in an appearance was introduced by Mr. Gordon, of Marquette, who also has an anti-cigarette bill. The upper peninsula man's latest measure prohibits the manufacture, sale, rental or use of slot machines.

A couple of bills, which on their face appear to be of much importance, have been noticed, but the persons responsible for them are not inclined to tell what their provisions will be. One of which Mr. Hallenbeck has given notice, provides for the regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors, and another, noticed by Mr. Vandercook, prescribes the policy of the state toward foreign corporations and also the regulations under which such corporations will be permitted to do business in Michigan. The contents of these bills will not be known until they are introduced.

Relief for the Supreme Court.

A subject which is agitating the legislators as much as any other is that of furnishing relief for the supreme court, reference to which has previously been made in this correspondence. The senate judiciary has held several sessions to consider the Nichols bill which increases the number of justices from five to seven, and the term of office from 10 to 14 years, but has not yet reached any conclusion. Through an erroneous publication the impression has been created that the bill seeks to increase the terms of the justices now on the bench. This, of course, is not the case, as such a provision would be clearly invalid. Inasmuch as the constitution, which provided for the creation of the present supreme court as the successor of the old court made up of circuit judges, provided that the term of the members should be eight years, many persons were of the opinion that the legislature could not legally provide for a longer term. It appears, however, that this question was raised in 1897 when the membership of the court was increased from four to five and the term from eight to ten years, and the unanimous opinion of the lawyers and court at that time was that the constitutional provision mentioned related only to the first eight years of the life of the court. In response to the request of the senate made on motion of Senator Helme, Attorney General Oren has within the past few days officially expressed a similar opinion. The fate of the bill is problematical, legislators being opposed to the change proposed.

Of Interest to Farmers.

The farmers of Michigan will be interested in some of the demands made by the Michigan Millers' Association at their annual meeting here a few days ago. The members spent much time in discussing the probable cause of the short crops of wheat which Michigan has produced in recent years. Some attributed it to soil exhaustion due to lack of fertilization and care on the part of the farmers, while others were of the opinion that the introduction of strong foreign grades of wheat would overcome the difficulty. The association, therefore, formally requested the legislature to make an appropriation of not to exceed $1,000 with which to defray the expenses of an expert to be sent abroad for the purpose of selecting varieties of wheat to be experimented with at the Agricultural College experiment station with a view to determining which are best adapted to Michigan soils. The question of adulteration of mill feed was discussed at length, the statement being made that fully 65 per cent of the feed shipped into the state by the oat meal trusts is adulterated, and the legislature was asked to provide for the inspection of feed by the dairy and food commissioner. The introduction of so-called health foods has made such inroads on the sale of flour, that the association decided to have published 1,000,000 pamphlets setting forth the food value of wheat bread.

Aid for the State Fair.

Another effort is being made this winter to secure state aid for the state fair. It has been several years since this matter has been brought to the attention of the legislature, but little headway having been made on previous occasions. Other states help the fair association very materially. The officials of the Michigan fair are asking for annual appropriations of $5,000 to be offered as premiums for Michigan products. The association is now out of debt for the first time in years, and wants to remain so.

Michigan will make an exhibit at the Pan-American exposition. This much has been settled by the enactment of a law appropriating $40,000 and providing for the appointment by Governor Bliss of five commissioners to arrange for the exhibit. The bill provides that $10,000 of the amount shall be used in constructing a Michigan building, and the balance for the exhibit. Governor Bliss will exercise great care in selecting the commission, his desire being to secure the service of representative men who can secure the possible exhibits in the various lines of horticulture, agriculture, manufacture, mining, etc.

All hope that the present legislature would change the method of compensating legislators has been abandoned, several attempts to have the house pass the Dingley joint resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution to effect this change having proved unsuccessful. As finally amendment the resolution provided for a salary of $1,000 for the term in lieu of per diem, mileage and all extras. It is barely possible that another attempt to pass the resolution might be successful, but it is doubtful if it is made.

The Sunday Marriage Industry.

The ministers and other citizens who are opposed to the Sunday marriage industry as it flourishes at St. Joseph during the summer excursion season, have made a start toward its extermination, Representative Lugers having introduced their bill which requires that marriage licenses be procured at least five days in advance of the solemnization of the marriage. Representatives of the sections which profit by the industry will work hard for the defeat of the bill. They insist that the situation as regards the alleged evils of the system has been greatly overdrawn and misrepresented.

The anti-imitation butter and oleomargarine bills are making satisfactory progress to all appearances. It was only one day last week that Representative Waterbury introduced his bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of imitation butter of any description, the bill, however, not applying to oleomargarine in its natural color and sold in a manner as to apprise the purchaser of its nature. In less than thirty-six hours the house committee on state affairs had made a report recommending the passage of the bill which is now on the general order and will be considered at once. This bill has the endorsement of the State Dairy association. Senator Tobson has introduced an entirely new oleomargarine bill. It provides that all cakes or rolls of oleomargarine and the packages containing them shall be distinctly labeled, and absolutely prohibits the sale of oleomargarine in bulk. There has also been introduced a bill prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine to resemble butter, so that all phases of this question have been covered to the satisfaction of the dairymen and farmers of the state. Just what shape the bills will be in when finally passed remains to be seen.

JAMES V. BARRY.

Crusade Against Negroes.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 29.—Cities and towns along the Ohio river have begun a crusade against the negroes. The entire trouble dates back to the lynchings of the negroes at Rockport and Booneville for the murder of the white barber Simmons at Rockport last month. The board of safety of this city has ordered the police to arrest all strange negroes and bring them before the city police judge. If they cannot give any reason for being here they will be sentenced to the rock pile. It is estimated there are 2,000 colored men in this city who absolutely refuse to work. They spend their time in the low saloons and dives of the city and live the best way they can. On election day they are in the market for the highest bidder. Other towns in Indiana along the river are taking steps to drive the worst element of negroes away. In some towns no negro is permitted to remain. Vigilance committees have been appointed at Grand View, Enterprise, Tell City and Leavenworth. Since the recent trouble at Newburg many of the colored people have left that town.

His Limit.

"I'm getting along," said Mr. Cumfox. "I'm progressing slowly, but surely."

"In what?"

"Culture. I've been traveling around with Mrs. C. and the girls until I'm getting right refined. But there's one thing I don't think I'll achieve. I don't believe I'll ever be able to go into an antique store and tell the difference between bric-a-brac and junk."—Washington Star.

MICHIGAN MATTERS

Senator Helme has Intrduced ths Oren Railr ad Tax Bill.

YOUNG LADY'S PLUCKY ACT

She Chokes a Tramp Who Attempts to Hold Her Up and Worsts Him—Two Children Perish in a Burning House—Other State News.

Lansing, Mich., Jan. 29.—Senator Helme, the only democratic member of the upper house of the legislature, recently paid a mysterious visit to ex Gov. Pingree in Detroit. This fact probably explains his action of Monday night in introducing in the senate the Oren bill to tax railroads and union railroad and depot companies on the ad valorem basis that failed to pass at the last special session in 1900.

Senator Murfin, of Detroit, introduced a bill "to authorize any railroad company to sell, lease or convey its property or franchises to any other railroad company. Senator Murfin says his bill is merely to correct the title of the present act on the subject.

The Kelly-Nichols bill to tax railroads on the ad valorem system was introduced.

Senator Piersen introduced a bill to "Abolish the office of commissioner of mineral statistics."

Senator Loomis introduced a bill appropriating $30,000 to erect a state monument in the military park of Chickamauga and Chattanooga.

All the business done in the senate was the introduction of six bills.

She Choked Him.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 29.—Miss Alice Manwarring, a senior literary student, while going to her home on Chubb street, Monday evening, was held up by a young tramp at the Ann Arbor railroad crossing. She grabbed the fellow and choked him until he was willing to quit, and then she went on her way unmolested. She takes the matter as a joke more than a serious affair, and was not the least bit excited while telling her story.

Act of Vandalism.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Jan. 29.—Vandals destroyed the plate glass front of the new city building Sunday night by hurling a rock through it. The glass had just been placed in position and is entirely ruined. There was much opposition to the purchase of the building, and the vandalism is thought to be the result of spite work. The office of the city clerk was also ransacked, and the safe's lock was tampered with.

Walked in His Sleep.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Jan. 29.—Christopher Gothe dreamed that two men were trying to kill him and while in a sonambulistic state, smashed his bedroom window, kicked off a heavy wire outside screen, and walked up the street in his night clothes. When awakened by neighbors, his feet were frozen and blood flowed from numerous bad wounds made by glass. He is under the doctor's care.

Killed by an Engine.

Flint, Mich., Jan. 29.—George W. Ofield, an undertaker, aged 45, stepped in front of a yard engine Monday morning and was almost instantly killed. Both legs were cut off above the angle and his head was crushed in. Steam from an engine attached to a freight train standing on the crossing prevented him from seeing the approaching engine. He leaves a widow and two sons. Mr. Ofield came here from London, Ont., several years ago, and was prominent in fraternal circles.

Children Perish.

Bessemer, Mich., Jan. 29.—The residence of Louis Beissel caught fire from the explosion of a lamp and was burned to the ground, his two children aged 4 and 6 respectively, being incinerated. Mrs. Beissell saved the others by throwing them out of a second story window. She is in a critical condition. Beissell carried no insurance.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Michigan pensions were granted Monday as follows: Original—John Ferguson, Grand Rapids, $6; Wm. W. Bennett, Jackson, $8. Additional—Henry Manwaring, Ottawa Lake, $8. Renewal and increase—Lycurges J. Wheeler, Plainwell, $12 Increase—James R. Clark, Watervliet $30; Coleman W. Doolittle, Bellaire, $8; Philip Bullion, Union, $8; Samuel Braden, Lake Odessa, $14. Reissue—Asa Smart, Gresham, $17; Erastus M. Hinman, Hastings, $10. Reissue and increase—Orlando M. Cole, Pittsford, $24. Widows—Maria Allen, Milan, $24; Mary Code, Decatur, $12; Jessie Riddle, Reed City, $8; Almeda E. Hallett, White Pigeon, $12; Charlotte A. Wise, Ovid, $8.

Claimed to Be from Michigan.

Montpelier, O., Jan. 29.—The badly mutilated body of a stranger was found a mile west Monday, lying near the Wabash tracks. He lodged here the night previous and said that he lived at Adrian, Mich., although he gave no name. He was of medium height and weight, had black hat and mustache and a tattooed star on the back of the left hand. Nothing was deduced from the inquest that would lead to his identification or the cause of death. Adrian has been notified.

Two Miners Killed.

Ishpeming, Mich., Jan. 29.—Matt Hammond, a miner employed at the Cleveland Cliffs mine, was killed Monday afternoon by a fall of ground. Fred Johnson was also killed Monday afternoon by a premature gunpowder blast at the Lake Superior Iron Co.'s hematite mine.

Christine Nilsson's Novel Idea.

Mme. Christine Nilsson has discovered a novel use for old receipted bills and sheets of music. Both of these are made to serve the purpose of wall papers. A survey of the walls of her dining room, on which are displayed the receipted bills of hotels and shops all over the world, soon convinces the beholder that though great singers are very highly paid they are obliged to live at a most extravagant rate. Mme. Nilsson's bedroom is papered with the music of the songs and parts which she has sung during the course of her career.

There is nobody quite so busy as the editor who tries to publish a ten page newspaper in a four page town.—Washington Post.

SEVERE STORMS

Have Done Considerable Damage to Property in Germany.

Berlin, Jan. 29.—Hurricane-like snowstorms prevailed in many parts of Germany, and during the last 24 hours considerable damage has been done. The weather is particularly violent on the East Frisian coast, where the city of Leer and the neighboring districts were struck by a tidal wave. At Frankfort-on-the-Main snow was falling heavily Monday evening, and dispatches from Bremen say that a strong northwest wind is driving the water into the Weser until it nearly reaches the edge of the dykes.

A freight train near Dresden was partly hurled from an elevated track on the line from Potschappel to Wilsdruff and five cars were badly wrecked.

The river Saho and its tributaries have overflowed, threatening railway traffic, and high water is threatened in the Silesian streams.

Telegraphic communication with England is badly interrupted, cablegrams arriving many hours late.

FROM THE KLONDIKE.

Severe Weather and the Country Free from Smallpox.

Port Townsend, Wash., Jan. 29.—The steamer Victoria, which was reported disabled in Alaska, arrived last night from Skagway. A train arrived from White Horse Jan. 26, bringing 50 Klondikers, most of whom came down on the Victoria. Sixty thousand dollars in dust was brought by the passenger.

Returning passengers report that the Klondike is free from smallpox and the quarantine has been raised. No deaths from the disease have occurred in the Yukon valley, and not a case has been reported in six weeks.

The cold wave continues to sweep the Yukon valley. Telegraphic advices received at Skagway Jan. 24 announce that the temperature at Dawson was 54 below zero.

The damage to the steamship Senator, which went ashore on the southeast end of Shelton island Jan. 22, is slight.

Sentenced to Prison.

New York, Jan. 29.—Edwin Arden Noblett, who was convicted of grand larceny in the first degree last Friday, was sentenced Monday to eight years and a half imprisonment. Noblett lived in West Orange, N. J., and had a brokerage office in Nassau street, this city. He advertised for a buyer for half the business, and Edward H. and Walter C. Watson, who had come on from Maysville, Ky., answered. Noblett said he had done a $46,000 business in 1898 and the Watsons paid him $5,000 February last in a check and later gave him another check for $5,000. Then they found they had been cheated and Noblett was arrested.

Excited Little Comment.

Berlin, Jan. 29.—The announcement of the appointment of Emperor Willias as a field marshal in the British army has been received by the press with comparatively little comment. The Berliner Neueste Nachrichten, conservative, sees in the compliment "evidence of the friendly personal relations between the emperor and the king." Notwithstanding the kaiser's wish that the anniversary of his birth should not be observed, many celebrations occurred Sunday in different parts of Germany.

Have No Information.

Caracas, Venezuela, Jan. 29 (via Haytian cable).—The Venezuelan government professes to have no information regarding the reported seizure of British subjects in Pate island by an armed expedition from the Venezuelan gunboat Augusto, or the reported occupation of Guiria on the Gulf of Paria, by the insurgents. The British and American legations also assert that they have no definite knowledge on either subject.

Killed in a Collision.

New York, Jan. 29.—Three Italian laborers were killed by the collision of a passenger train with a gravel train on the West Shore railroad at Weehauken Monday. The gravel train, on which were the laborers, was being pulled on a siding to get it out of the way when the passenger engine struck it. The engineer and fireman of the incoming passenger train jumped from the cab and escaped without injury.

To Purchase Temple Farm.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 29.—In the assembly Monday night Mr. Morgan, of Kings, introduced a resolution urging the New York representatives to the United States congress to use their influence in securing the passage of the bill now pending before that body to secure the purchase of Temple Farm in York county, Va., by the United States government. The Moore house, on the Temple farm, is where the surrender of Cornwallis occurred.

New Training Ships.

Washington, Jan. 29.—The naval board on construction Monday prepared estimates of cost and outlined the work for constructing two new training ships for the navy. The vessels are to have a steaming speed of between 9 and 10 knots each, on a displacement of about 3,000 tons, besides having a complete sailing equipment. One is to be built of wood and the other of steel.

Transports Arrived.

Washington, Jan. 29.—The quartermaster general is informed that the transports Wyefield, Westminster and Federica arrived at San Francisco Monday from the Philippines and are being inspected with a view of their discharge from the government service.

Will Be Held Feb. 15.

Montreal, Jan. 29.—The United States and Canadian combined skating championships, which were postponed out of respect for the late queen, will be held on Saturday, Feb. 16.

To Punish Johnny.

Francis Parkman, the historian, had a Mosaic idea of justice. A friend met him one day walking along the street leading a street boy with either hand. "What in the world are you doing, Parkman?" asked his friend. "I found that Johnny here had eaten all of the apple instead of dividing with his little brother. I am going to buy another for the younger boy and make Johnny watch him while he eats it."

The infancy of British manufacturing was nursed by engineers from Holland, who superintended the erection of wind and water mills.

THE TECUMSEH HERALD
SEMI-WEEKLY.

HE WENT TO SLEEP

An Engineer's Mistake Caused the Death of Five Trainmen.

ANOTHER SERIOUSLY INJURED

He Mistood the First Section of a Train for the Last—Two Engines and Ten Loaded Cars Demolished in the Collision.

Baltimore, Jan. 29.—A special from Parkersburg, Va., to the Morning Herald says:

Five persons dead and one severely wounded, two engines and ten loaded cars wrecked is the result of a mistake of a train crew Monday afternoon between Petroleum and Volcano Junction on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. It was the old story of the engineer being asleep at his post and mistaking the first section of a passing train for the second. Thinking both had passed, he pulled his train into the main track and sped onward to what would seem to have necessarily been his death.

The dead are: J. B. Watkins, engineer train No. 98, from Grafton; W. W. Cunningham, fireman of No. 98, recently from the second division; M. Courtney, of Parkersburg, brakeman on No. 98; J. T. Bailey, of Parkersburg, fireman on No. 87; J. G. Bailey, Kenawaha, brakeman on 87.

The injured: —— Davidson, of Grafton, engineer on 87, burned and cut and bruised; will recover.

The Herald correspondent has just returned from the scene of the wreck. The scene was indescribable. All the five men pinned under the wreck were dead and only one of the bodies had been found. He was J. G. Bailey, whose body was crushed so as to be unrecognizable and could only be identified by his watch, which stopped at 1:05 p. m. On account of the inaccessibility of the place where the wreck occurred it was impossible to bring the body to Parkersburg, and it will be held at Petroleum until the trains get through to-day.

The accident occurred in a cut on a curve on a heavy down grade and at the end of a bridge. That anyone was saved at all is almost a miracle. The third section of No. 87 was on the siding at Petroleum, with orders to wait there till the second section of No. 98 passed east. Engineer Davidson, who escaped with slight injuries, was the engineer on No. 87 and went to sleep on the siding.

When the first section went by he thought it was the second section, and started out on to the main track. His fireman and forward brakeman, both of whom were killed, must also have been asleep, for they allowed him to take the train out. The conductor of the first 98, after he passed saw Davidson pulling out and tried to wave him to stop, but failed. The conductor of the fourth 97, seeing the third section pull out, ran forward after it as fast as possible, his engineer whistling down brakes, and the conductor of the wrecked train ran over the tops of the cars till he reached the next car to the last one wrecked in his attempt to stop the engineer, but none of them attracted his attention in time.

Conductor Lang managed to jump in time to save himself.

All passengers on the east and westbound accommodations were transferred at the wreck, but the fast trains were sent around by Moundsville and the Ohio River railroad.

Brakeman Leslie Davis, whose day it was to go out on 98, owes his life to the call boy's failure to find him, and Courtney was substituted and went to his death.

Will Not Resign.

London, Jan. 29.—There is not the slightest foundation, the Associated Press is officially informed, for the statement that Lord Salisbury will resign. Further, it is officially set forth that the premier's absence from Osborne at the time of the death of Queen Victoria was due to the urgent request of King Edward, who feared Lord Salisbury's health might be impaired by the trying journey, as sea trips, particularly, go hard with the premier. Besides, it was bitterly cold at Cowes. The most cordial relations prevail between King Edward and Lord Salisbury.

To Pay Travel Allowances.

Washington, Jan. 29.—Representative Hull has introduced in the house a bill for the payment of travel allowances on the discharge from the volunteer army of officers and men who reentered the service in the Philippine islands.

An Irishman's Ruse.

In the pioneer days of Victoria, B. C., a Hibernian drayman, whose property abutted on to that of a merchant, was very much disgusted to find that the merchant's chickens were constantly in his little garden patch and would root up his flowers and vegetables.

Appeals to the merchant, who was a patron of the drayman, were of no avail, so the following ruse was adopted:

Our friend from the Emerald Isle purchased some eggs and placed them here and there in his garden. He then awaited the merchant's wife, who would call the chickens to feed them, and in full view of the lady picked up the eggs and put them in his hat.

The lady asked Mike what he was doing.

"Oh, getting a few eggs for my breakfast," said he.

"Well," said the lady, "you have no chickens. The eggs are mine."

"Oh, sure are they, mum. Then what do they do in my garden? Anything on my premises is my own."

After this the fence was made chicken proof, and Mike had no more trouble.—London Tit-Bits.

A Helpful Suggestion.

"Kin yeou tell me, young feller," inquired Mr. Reuben Hay of Four Corners, "where hereabouts I kin git me a good farmer suit?"

"Why, there's a good pharmaceutist not two blocks away," replied the young fellow blithely.—Harper's Bazar.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900, By Harold MacGrath.

"May I claim your attention for a moment?" he asked.

Had I been in any other place than the club I should have ignored him. I possessed the liveliest hatred for the man. "If you will be brief."

"As brief as possible," dropping into the nearest chair. "It has become necessary to ask you a few questions. The matter concerns me."

"Whatever concerns you is nothing to me," I replied coldly.

He smiled. "Are you quite sure?"

I had turned the sword on myself, so it seemed. But I said: "I answered some of your questions once. I believe I was explicit."

"As to that I can say you were—startlingly explicit. It is a delicate matter to profess one's regard for a woman before total strangers. It is not impossible that she would have done the same thing in your place. Her regard for you"—

I interrupted him with a menacing gesture. "I am extremely irritable," I said. "I should regret to lose control of myself in a place like this."

"To be sure!" he said. "This is England, where they knock one another down."

"We do not murder on this side of the channel," I retorted.

"That is unkind. Your friend was a very good shot," with a significant glance at his useless arm. "But for my arm and his nerves, which were not of the best order, I had not lived to speak to you tonight."

"So much the worse for the world," said I. "Your questions?"

"Ah, who was that remarkably beautiful woman under your distinguished care Thursday evening?"

"I see that our conversation is to be of the shortest duration. Who she was is none of your business," rudely. I unfolded my paper and began reading.

"Perhaps, after all," not the least perturbed by my insolence, "it were best to state on paper what I have to say. I can readily appreciate that the encounter is disagreeable. To meet one who has made a thing impossible to you sets the nerves on edge." He caught up his opera hat, his cane and gloves. He raised the lapel of his coat and sniffed at the orchid in the buttonhole.

Some occult force bade me say, "Why do you wish to know who she was?"

He sat down again. "I shall be pleased to explain. That I mistook her for another who I supposed was on the other side of the channel was a natural mistake, as you will agree. Is it not strange that I should mistake another to be the woman who is so soon to be my wife? Is there not something behind this remarkable, unusual likeness? Since when are two surpassingly beautiful women, born in different lands, of different parents, the exact likeness of each other?"

Now, as this was a thing which had occupied my mind more than once I immediately put aside the personal affair. That could wait. I threw my paper on to the table.

"Do you know, sir," said I, "that thought echoes my own?"

"Let us for the moment put ourselves into the background," said the prince. "What do you know about her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde, her history?"

"Very little. Proceed."

"But tell me what you know."

"I know that her father was driven to a gambler's grave and that her mother died of a broken heart and that the man who caused all this wishes to break the heart of the daughter too."

"Scandal, all scandal," said the prince. "Who ever heard of a broken heart outside of a romantic novel? I see that the innkeeper has been holding your ear. Ah, that innkeeper; that innkeeper! Certainly some day there will come a reckoning."

"Yes, indeed," said I. "Beware of him."

"It was 20 years ago," said the prince. "It is beyond the recall. But let me proceed. Not many years ago there was a prince, a very bad fellow."

"Most of them are."

"He married a woman too good for him," went on the prince, as though he had not heard.

"Another is about to do likewise."

"There was some scandal. When the princess was born, her father refused to believe her to be his child. Now, it came to pass, as they say in the Bible, which I assure you is a very interesting book, that there were vague rumors immediately after the birth of Princess Hildegarde that another child had been born."

"What!" I was half out of my chair. "Another child?"

"Another child. The fact that the prince swore that when children came he would make them counterparts of their kind and loving father lent color to the rumor that the princess had had one spirited away to escape this threatened contamination. And one of the nurses was missing. Whither had she gone remained a mystery and is still a mystery, for she never has returned. Did she spirit away the other child, the other girl? I say girl advisedly. If there had been a son, the mother would have retained him. Two years after this interesting episode the princess died, and dying, confessed the deception. But the curious thing is nobody believed her. Her mind was not strong, and it was thought to be a hallucination, this second child. Now, let me come to the present time. Twins are generally alike. One mirrors the other. When they mature, then comes the deviation, perhaps in the color of the hair and the eyes. Behold, here are two women but for their hair and eyes were one. Tell me what you know of the other." He bent forward with subdued eagerness.

"Do you think it possible?" I cried excitedly.

"Not only possible, but probable. She is a princess; at least, she should be."

Then I told him what I knew about Phyllis.

"America! Born in America! It cannot be." He was baffled.

"I have known her for eight years," said I. "She was born in America as certainly as I was."

"But this likeness? This rumor of another daughter? Ah, there is something here I do not understand. And this uncle of hers, this Wentworth. Who is he?"

"A retired banker, very wealthy and at present with the American ministry at your own capital."

"To him we must go, then." He rose and walked the length of the room, stopped a moment at the chess table in the corner, then resumed his chair. "You are wondering, no doubt, what it is to me, all this?"

"I confess you have read my mind correctly."

"Then listen. I am a prince without a principality—a prince by courtesy, my brother ruling the principality of Wortumborg. Thus being without a principality, I am necessarily without revenues. I must replenish my very low exchequer by a marriage—a marriage not so distasteful as it might be." He met my darkening eyes with serenity. "Since Thursday night I have not been so certain of my wife's dowry. If there are two princesses, twins, they must govern jointly, or one may abdicate in favor of the other. Her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde is the one who will be most likely to relinquish her claims to Hohenphalia. If your friend is proved to be her sister"—He stroked the orchid reflectively.

"Well?" I cried, my pulse quickening.

"I shall withdraw my claim to the hand of the Princess Hildegarde. I do not care to rule half a principality or share half its revenues. There are better things left than that. It is my hope, however, that no proofs can be found and that your banker-diplomatist will show conclusively that his niece was born in America. Until this question is definitely settled my fortunes shall not undergo any risks. This is what I wanted to say to you, why I wanted to know who your friend was. Will you help me to get at the bottom of things? We are both concerned. The result will mean all or nothing to you and me. Ah, believe me, but you are a favored mortal. The friendship of the one and the love of the other! No, do not look angry. With all my sins, it cannot be said that I lack frankness and truthfulness. You love the Princess Hildegarde. I offer you an equal chance to win her. Is not that remarkably good nature? Till the affair is settled my marriage is postponed. Now, to our personal affair. You cannot blame me if I give you all my honest hatred. I am at your service after, of course, the respective positions of the princesses are assured. I should take more pleasure in shooting you or running a sword through your body than I took in the affair with your friend. His courage was truly admirable. I had nothing against him. But you have grievously wounded my self love. We forgive all wrongs but that. I warn you that the affair will not be conducted after the French mode. You have perhaps a fortnight in which to improve your marksmanship. The matter which shall carry us abroad will conclude within that time. I shoot and fence with my left hand as well as I did with my right."

"I shall be only too happy to meet you," I replied. "I prefer the pistol, there is less exertion, and it is quicker."

"You shall have every advantage," said the prince. "You will have that to nerve your arm which I shall not have—a woman's love." With a bow which was not without a certain dignity and grace he walked from the room.

Phyllis a princess! Gretchen free! I sent for my coat and hat and went out. I forgot all about my appointment with Colonel J—— of the Queen's Light and that I had left Pembroke playing billiards in a strange club, where I myself had been but a guest. The crisp October air blew in my face as I rapidly walked up the mall, and it cooled the fever in my veins. But my mind ran on rather wildly. Gretchen free! Phyllis a princess! Gretchen's little word, "perhaps," came back and sang into my ears. Yet, win or lose, I was to meet the prince in mortal combat. If Phyllis was not proved Gretchen's twin sister, I should care but little for the prince's bullet. On the other hand—well, I should trust to luck. Before I was aware of my destination I stood fumbling the key in the door of my apartment. I wanted my pipe. At 11 by the clock Pembroke came in.

"Hang your apologies!" he said.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"Phyllis," said I, "do you remember the day we first met?"

We were in the morning room of the Wentworth mansion at B——. Phyllis, Pembroke and I sat before the warm grate, while Mrs. Wentworth and Ethel stood by one of the windows comparing some shades of ribbon. My presence at B—— was due to a wire I had sent to New York, which informed headquarters that I was on the track of a great sensation. The return wire had said, "Keep on it."

"When first we met?" echoed Phyllis. "Why, it was at Block Island."

"Oh," said I, "I do not refer to the time when you had shouldered the responsibilities of a society bud. I mean the time when the introduction was most informal. You were at the time selling lemonade without license and with very little lemon."

"Selling lemonade!" cried Pembroke.

"Never mind him, Mr. Pembroke," laughed Phyllis.

"It was a long time ago," I went on. "I was a new reporter. Mr. Wentworth had to be interviewed. It was one of those hot days in May. The servant at the door said that Mr. Wentworth was in the back yard—he called it the garden—where I soon found myself. You had a small table, a glass and a pitcher. I suppose every time your uncle got thirsty you sold him a glass. You wore short dresses"—

"Terrible!" cried Phyllis, shielding her face with the hand screen.

"And looked as cool as the ice in the pitcher and as fresh as the flowers which lined the walls. I thought that if I bought a glass of you I might make my approach to your uncle an easier task. So I looked at you and smiled, and you giggled."

"Giggled!" cried Phyllis indignantly. Pembroke was laughing.

"Yes, actually giggled," I went on. "I laid down a 25 cent piece, and you poured out some water which had had nothing more than a mild flirtation with a lemon, and I gulped it down. I held out my hand, and you said that there wasn't any change. I smiled a false smile. Let me make a confession."

"Well?" mockingly from Phyllis.

"It was my last quarter. It was very pathetic. I had to walk four miles down town. I did not know your uncle well enough, or I should have borrowed car fare from him."

"And I took your last penny?" said Phyllis gently. "Why did you not tell me then?"

"I was 22 and proud," said I. "Where are you going?" for she had risen.

"I'll be back in a moment," she said as she left the room. When she returned, she put out her hand. On the palm lay two bright American dimes.

"What's this?" I asked.

"The change."

"Very good!" laughed Pembroke.

I said nothing, but took out my wallet. In opening it to put in the dimes something fell to the floor. It was Gretchen's rose.

"What is that?" asked Phyllis, as I stooped to pick it up.

"It is the end of a story," I answered. I busied myself with the fire till the poker grew too hot.

"How many romances commonplace wallets contain!" said Pembroke sententiously.

"I have two in mine," said I.

Pembroke looked at Phyllis, but the fire seemed to be claiming her attention. Then he looked at me, but I was gazing at Phyllis. He was in a puzzle.

"Do you know, Miss Landors," he said, "that I never dreamed to meet you again when I saw you in Vienna last year?"

"Vienna?" said she. "I have never been to Vienna."

I suddenly brought down my heel on Pembroke's toes.

"Ah, a curious mistake on my part. I suppose the ball at the ministry tonight will be your first on the continent?"

I gazed admiringly at him. He had not even looked at me. He was certainly clever.

"Yes," said Phyllis, "and already I believe I am going to have what they call stage fright, though I cannot understand why I should feel that way."

"Possibly it's a premonition," said I absently.

"And of what?" asked Phyllis.

"How should I know?" said I mysteriously.

"What in the world is going on?" she demanded. "You step on Mr. Pembroke's toes, you prophesy and then you grow mysterious."

My glance and Pembroke's met. He burst out laughing. A possible contretemps was averted by the approach of Mrs. Wentworth, who asked us to have a cup of chocolate before we went out into the chill air. Finally we rose to make our departure. While Pembroke was bidding Ethel a good morning, Phyllis spoke to me.

"The last flowers you sent me were roses," she said softly.

"Were they?" said I. "I had forgotten. Shall I send you some for this evening?"

It was something in her eyes that I did not understand.

"Thank you, but Mr. Pembroke has promised to do that." And then she added, "So you have really had two romances?"

"Yes," said I, "and both ended badly."

"Let us hope that the third will be of happier termination," she smiled. The smile caused me some uneasiness.

"There never will be a third," I said. "It is strange, is it not, when you think that there might have been—but one? You will give me a waltz tonight?"

"With pleasure. Good morning."

Pembroke and I passed down the broad stairs. On the street we walked a block or so in silence.

Finally Pembroke said: "What the deuce made you step on my foot? And why does she not want me to know that she was in Vienna last winter?"

"Because," said I, "Miss Landors never was in Vienna."

"But, man, my eyes!"

"I do not care anything about your eyes."

"What makes you so positive?"

"Knowledge."

"Do you love her?" bluntly.

"No."

"Because"—

"There is another, Pembroke, tonight will be pregnant with possibilities. You will see the woman you love and the woman I love."

"What do you mean?"

"Have you ever heard of her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia?"

"So high?"

"Yes."

"Then the woman I saw in Vienna"—

"Was the princess."

"But this remarkable likeness?"

"Perhaps I had best tell you all." And when I had done his astonishment knew no bounds.

"Great George, that makes Miss Landors a princess too!"

"It does, truly. Herein lies the evil of loving above one's station. In our country love is like all things—free to obtain. We are in a country which is not free. Here those who appear to have the greatest liberty have the least."

"And she knows nothing about it?"

"Nothing."

"Why tell her?" he asked, fearful of his own love affair now.

"It is a duty. Some day she might learn too late. This afternoon I shall visit the chancellor and place the matter before him and ask his assistance. He must aid me to find the proofs."

Pembroke began kicking the snow with his toes.

"I wish you had not told me, Jack."

"It is for the best. You and I are in the same boat. We ride or sink together."

At luncheon his mind was absent, and he ate but little, and I ate less than he. It was going to be very hard for me to meet Gretchen.

* * * * * * * *

The chancellor waved his hand toward a chair. We were very good friends.

"What is it now?" he asked, smiling. "I dare not stir up the antagonists against the government to give you a story, and, aside from the antagonists, it is dull."

A Story of Dumas.

One day Alexandre Dumas visited Marseilles and made a trip to the Chateau d'If to visit the palace he had helped to make famous. The guide showed him everything; also the subterranean passage by which Edmond Dantes and Abbe Faria used to visit each other. "This passage was dug by Abbe Faria by the aid of a fish bone," the guide explained. "M. Dumas tells about it in his story of 'Monte-Cristo.'"

"Indeed," replied the author. "Alexandre Dumas must be familiar with all the surroundings here. Perhaps you know him?"

"I should think so. He is one of my best friends."

"And you are one of his," replied the impulsive scribe, letting 2 louis d'or slip into the hand of the astonished guide.

A RETROSPECT.

The years bring worldly wisdom
And some of Learning's lore,
The laurel to the victor
Or gold in shining store,

But faith that knows no failure,
The joy untouched by pain,
The light that lies in loving eyes
Will not return again!

A BLIND MAN'S FIGHT.

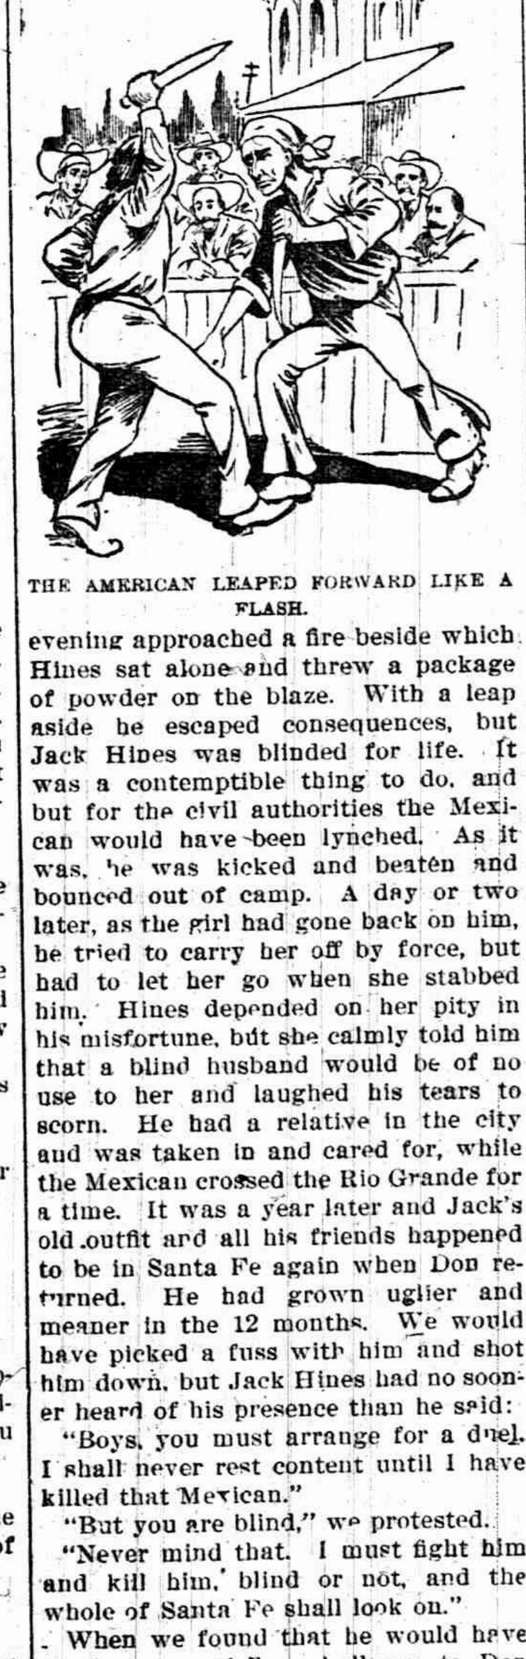
By M. Quad.

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY C. B. LEWIS.

Without doubt the most singular duel that ever took place in the United States occurred at Sante Fe, N. M., 35 years ago. It was several years previous to the first Pacific railroad and while yet every pound of goods going to the far west had to be hauled across the great plains by freight wagon or sent around Cape Horn by sea.

Two men in a Rogers & Blair outfit fell in love with the same girl in Santa Fe. One was an American named Jack Hines, and the other was a full blooded Mexican who was simply known as Don. The girl was a half breed, and none of us outside the two rivals thought her worth fighting over. I do not think she really cared for either man, but her game was coquette and keep them on the ragged edge and make the most she could out of it. She received many valuable presents from the rivals, and I know that Hines lent her father money which was never returned. For a time the rivalry was a subject for joking among us, but when we saw that either man was ready to fly at the other's throat on the smallest provocation the case became serious. They were not only good men for the outfit, each earning the highest wages paid, but they were game men, and if they came together nothing was surer than that one would be killed.

The affair had gone on for seven or eight months before the outbreak came. We were in Santa Fe, making ready for a start east, when the Mexican one evening approached a fire beside which Hines sat alone and threw a package of powder on the blaze. With a leap aside he escaped consequences, but Jack Hines was blinded for life. It was a contemptible thing to do, and but for the civil authorities the Mexican would have been lynched. As it was, he was kicked and beaten and bounced out of camp. A day or two later, as the girl had gone back on him, he tried to carry her off by force, but had to let her go when she stabbed him. Hines depended on her pity in his misfortune, but she calmly told him that a blind husband would be of no use to her and laughed his tears to scorn. He had a relative in the city and was taken in and cared for, while the Mexican crossed the Rio Grande for a time. It was a year later and Jack's old outfit and all his friends happened to be in Santa Fe again when Don returned. He had grown uglier and meaner in the 12 months. We would have picked a fuss with him and shot him down, but Jack Hines had no sooner heard of his presence than he said:



THE AMERICAN LEAPED FORWARD LIKE A FLASH.

"Boys, you must arrange for a duel. I shall never rest content until I have killed that Mexican."

"But you are blind," we protested.

"Never mind that. I must fight him and kill him, blind or not, and the whole of Santa Fe shall look on."

When we found that he would have it so, we carried a challenge to Don and also asked the authorities to let us have a public duel. Some weak objections were made, but they yielded the point. A fight of some sort was an hourly incident, and duels came off two or three times per week. The Mexican laughed in derision at the idea, but readily accepted the challenge.

"Yes, I will meet the Americano," he said, "and I will slice and cut and prick for one hour by the watch before I give him the grand finish. The crowd that looks on will see some of the finest knife play ever shown on this side of the river. Tomorrow at noon, eh? I will be as prompt as the sun."

You may believe that when the report spread about there was great excitement. It was generally believed that the blind man would fall an easy victim, but even his best friends said that he had better die with a knife in his hand than to live in a helpless state the rest of his life. To three or four of us Jack confided his belief that he would triumph. His hearing had become as acute as a fox's, and he would make his ears see for him. He was in perfect health, had the nerve and courage of a lion, and he believed he had a chance.

At high noon of an August day over 4,000 people, many of whom were women, assembled on the smooth turf to witness the strange combat. A ring of ropes was formed and the spectators formed another. It was to be a duel with knives, and seconds and a referee were appointed. After each five minutes there was to be a rest. Foremost among the spectators was the girl who had caused it all, and she was free to say she didn't care who triumphed. Each man was allowed to wrap his left arm in a serape or cloak and all cheering or advising was forbidden. The blind man was pale faced and nervous as the fight began, but his hard shut teeth told of the determination in his heart. The Mexican was all bows and smiles and confidence, and as he was known to be an adept with the knife a groan went about the circle as the two stepped forward to open the fight.

That duel was something to be remembered for all time. From the blind man's movements no one could have told that he was sightless. For four five-minute rounds they fought, with only a few trifling scratches on either side, but if there was any advantage it was on the side of the American, who had the full sympathy of the crowd, Mexicans and all. When they came out for the fifth round Don winked and chuckled and said it was time

Brought Good Fortune.

A small item in his own paper lately brought amazing good fortune to Editor Chris. Reitter, of the Saginaw, (Mich.) Post and Zeitung. He and his family had the grip in its worse form. Their doctor did them no good. Then he read that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds was a guaranteed cure for LaGrippe and all Throat and Lung troubles; tried it and says: "Three bottles cured the whole family. No other medicine on earth equals it." Only 50c and $1.00 at C. A. Wright's drug store. Trial bottles free.

he began slicing ears off." Hines had him located to a hair's breadth, and as they faced each other the American leaped forward like a flash, caught the knife on his and threw it to the left, and next instant his own blade had found the heart of the man who had blinded him. We who were only five feet away could not follow the movement, so swiftly was it made, but it was a successful one and of course ended the fight. Hines told me that during the fight he seemed to see every move and motion made by the other and from the first felt sure of victory. A public purse amounting to over a thousand dollars was raised for him on the spot, and about five hundred was subsequently added, and he was sent east to some institution and is today a teacher of the blind and a man too tender hearted to kill a fly.

He Caught the Guy.

There are two men of the same name in the directory. One is a learned savant, the other a patron of the turf and the pool boxes, who spends very little time in the city. The cub reporter, simply because there was nothing else to keep him from bothering every one in the office, was given the name of this man and told to get some good stories out of him about experiences on the racing circuits. The cub whistled while he looked up the name and address, and airily served notice that he would want a couple of columns if he caught that "guy" at home.

He rang and was admitted to a fine library, where a scholarly looking gentleman had a table covered with open books.

"Hello, old man! I'm from The Evening Yawp. Looking up pedigrees, hey?"

"No," in a bewildered sort of way, "I was seeing if I could lend some little assistance to the recent attempts at constructing a scientific basis for æsthetics out of the result of experimental psychometry."

"Oh, forget it, Bill. Give that guff to the gillies and the Johnnies. I want you to give me some high toned boss talk, understand; something that'll put sparkles on the column and make the opposition reptiles wriggle like they was in a gridiron."

But "Bill" had slipped by the collar and was racing down the hall. The next thing the cub recognized was that he was being led out by the ear with a 200 pound menial grinning at him. Of course he had gone to the wrong man, but he never thought of that and wanted to fight the city editor on his own terms.—Detroit Free Press.

Two Famous Orators.

As was anticipated, a vast multitude assembled from all quarters to hear the famous orator. This was the only occasion on which I saw Dr. Chalmers. The sight was an imposing one. The attitude of the audience was deeply reverential, and as he gradually gathered force and fire as he proceeded it was greatly impressed. The scene was one for the pencil of the artist—the old man eloquent, surrounded by hundreds of rustic admirers, awed to stillness by the magic of his genius, while he himself, energized with mighty passion, his face flecked with foam, like a horse which has been driven at its utmost speed. And when "amen" was pronounced a deep sigh was heaved, and the multitude "silently stole away" to ponder on their path and remark in their homes on the unwonted experience of the day.

The only other speaker I have seen under the same kind of excitation was Professor Wilson (Christopher North). Some of his lectures were poor and dry enough, but in others he was eloquent and poetical in a high degree. He seemed to speak with his whole body, as well as with his whole soul. His eye, "in a fine frenzy rolling," burned like a ball of fire, and the students sat spellbound under the power of their great teacher. To have seen and heard such men as Dr. Chalmers and Professor Wilson at their best and greatest is a memory to be cherished. There were giants in those days.—Scotsman.

One Sure Test.

An Irishman, more patriotic than clever, enlisted in a dragoon regiment with the intention of becoming a gallant soldier.

The fencing master had experienced rather a hard job in the matter of explaining to him the various ways of using the sword.

"Now, Pat," he said, "how would you use your sword if your opponent feinted?"

"Begorra," said Pat, with gleaming eyes, "I'd just tickle him with the point to see if he was shamming!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Electricity In the Home.

The well known fairy tale of the enchanted white cat, the wonderful palace of the unfortunate princess, where doors are opened by unseen attendants, who also provide magnificent repasts, gorgeous clothes, fine equipages and gayly caparisoned horses at the mentally expressed wish of the guests, is hardly more marvelous than some of the ultra up to date homes of the present day, where unlimited wealth and electricity combined have made it possible to supplement service in a way that would have seemed little short of magic not very long ago. A ring at the grand portal, and the heavy front doors of the vestibule swing noiselessly open of themselves, and, although a footman guards the privacy of the inner entrance, he is only there to receive your message, not to open the door. Within the house light, heat and communication are all provided by a touch on a button. In the bedrooms a thermometer shows

Plague Raging.

J. D. Arner.

John Dewitt Arner, son of the late John Arner and Mrs. Elizabeth Arner, was born in Ridgeway village, July 11, 1856. He was the first born of four sons and two daughters, the rest of whom are living and were present at his funeral.

In his infancy and childhood, he was very delicate and, although of a nervous temperament and always very active, yet he was never robust. He was very ambitious and wanted to do as much as the strongest, and generally did. He was a carpenter by trade, but was very expert in the use of tools and took contracts for building, and also did the finest of cabinet work. And what he did was well done; he was scrupulous of particulars. Neatness was a part of his nature.

Dewitt was a boy with the boys and in most of the gatherings of the young people he could not be left out. His kindly, joyous disposition made him a favorite with the young people.

He was converted and joined the M E. church during the ministry of Rev. Field on the Ridgeway charge. In keeping up the singing in the church, Mr. Arner has been a great help, ever faithful, systematic and regular, always to be depended upon. Many and many a time has he delayed a paying job of work to sing at a funeral when he knew his time would be donated, but that made no difference to Dewitt, it was to help in trouble.

And in sickness he was in demand for his capability to do for the sick was beyond the ordinary. He would go many a mile to visit a sick friend. Time and expense made no difference to him.

His bedsickness began Saturday, Jan. 12, lasting until last Thursday at midnight when he passed away. The funeral services were conducted at the Ridgeway church Sunday by Rev. Yokom, assisted by Rev. DeSpelder. The packed church and host of beautiful flowers bore evidence that the whole community mourns for this good man.

L. O. T. M. Installation.

At a special review held Monday evening at the Maccabee hall, of the L O. T. M., the following officers were installed by Installing Officer Lady Ella Niblack and the Guards from Auchampaugh Hive, of Clinton:

Commander—Edna Belding.
Lieut. Com.—Etta Smith.
Past Com.—Elsie Orr.
Record Keeper—Lydia Chase.
Finance Keeper—S. Louisa Haight.
Chaplain—Emma Welling.
Sergeant—Ella Heck.
Mistress at Arms—Emma Mize.
Sentinel—Sadie Poole.
Picket—Alice Parker.

About 35 from Clinton and several from the Osgood Hive, Holloway, and the Manchester Hive were present and a number of the visitors gave some interesting remarks, as also did Rev. S. Louisa Haight, of the Tecumseh Hive, who, at the close of her speech, in behalf of the Tecumseh Ladies presented the past commander, Elsie Orr, with a beautiful pin of the Order.

At the close of the installation ceremony, Clinton gave the Grand March after which supper was served, followed by a social time, and all returned to their homes feeling that it is good to be a Lady Maccabee. LYDIA CHASE

Farmers' Institute.

The Lenawee County Farmers' Institute convened at Adrian Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. On Wednesday after President Horton had called the meeting to order, Mayor Stearns welcomed the assembly by assuring them that they "had a right to be proud of their calling" and further consoled them by the surprising assertion "You stand on an equality with any other class of citizens. You are neither better nor worse for being farmers." It is a matter for conjecture at the dawn of this promising new century, which the mayor alludes to so feelingly, how much more of this sort of patronage the farmers will stand before they will rise up en masse and cry "How long, O Lord, how long" are we to be told that we are just as good as other people and not to be despised on account of our occupation. But if this thought entered their minds it did not find expression and the meeting proceeded. Brother Stearns wound up well with a glowing tribute to the prosperity and fertility of the county, which he pronounced to be the "queen of all counties in Michigan."

Hon. Minor T. Cole responded happily to the mayor's welcome and hoped we should all be here to see some of the great things which are to come. A paper was read by W. F. Howell on "Our Institute" ably written. The "Profession of Farming" was presented us in a paper written by P. H. Dowling, which called out remarks by several other members as to whether farming really is a profession and as there were no adverse opinions it was decided to so dignify it.

"Farming and the Labor Problem" was the subject of a paper by A B. Graham, of Madison, and contained some sensible suggestions about how to treat farm laborers and others who labor for us. A. L. Porter, also of Madison, gave a paper on "Up to date Farming for Success," which was a plea for a well trimmed lawn and comfortable and tasteful dwellings in the country This called out a discussion in which it was decided that if farm homes were more attractive the young people would not be so anxious to leave them.

"Mistakes most Common in Farming" was the subject of a paper by Samuel White, of Cambridge, in which he advised "Have more respect for your calling, get your hair cut once in a while, get into a clean collar now and then" Mrs. Lucy M. Sickles was on the program for a paper on "The Influence and Effects of Environment upon Childhood," and Dr. D C Thomas on "Influences Which Assist and Those which Obstruct a more General Social Communion."

Every session brought more interest Thursday's meeting was opened with a talk by H. C. Bradish, of Madison, on Spraying as now practiced by Successful Fruit growers He gave a very able and instructive talk on the subject, giving various methods employed and the results obtained were clearly brought out not only by the speaker but in the discussion that followed.

Frank Allis was the next on the program He told how best to obtain soil fertilities, He said that it was suicidal to sell everything off and put nothing on. He advocates getting manure out of the way in winter, plowing under clover, buckwheat and other crops occasionally to loosen up the soil. There seemed to be a difference of opinion on this matter and a long discussion followed.

Mother and Children was a paper presented by Mrs. Ella Bay, of Ogden, was very interesting and instructive to mothers. Her theory was that a child's early training should not be neglected train it in the way it should go and when it grows up it will not depart from these ways

The afternoon meeting opened with a discussion by Supervisor L. C. Chase on What the Signs say for Future Agriculture Supervisor Chase after giving this subject careful thought considers that the signs are very hopeful. He says that the farmer was the first to appear and he will be the last to disappear. The subject was freely discussed.

Music and a little entertainment was furnished by the Standard Stock Co. who were playing in the city. This was followed by a very able and interesting paper on Cost of Productive and Intelligent Marketing as a factor in Successful Farming by W. G. Shepard, of Rome.

Wm. M. Baldwin, of Palmyra, gave an instructive talk on what experience taught regarding practical results from the use of silos. This subject caused much comment and discussion. This closed the afternoon session and the meetings until Friday morning.

There was a large attendance on Friday morning. The question box was opened and many very instructive discussions followed. Much of the morning was taken up with the questions.

W. H. Moore, of Palmyra, gave a talk on, What effect if any Should be made to Protect and Perpetuate the Remaining Farm Forest of Lenawee county? Among the reasons presented for their retention was the beauty of the landscapes, the remuneration which comes from timber and the necessary moisture which they are said to retain in the soil. Mr. Moore is one of our practical and most successful farmers, constantly thinking how to improve the beauty of his farm.

Music was furnished by some of the Industrial Home girls and was followed by a talk on the important subject of How to care for Farm stock by E R Illenden. The Industrial Home girls sang again, then Mrs. D. C. Dean read a paper on What else than Dollars and cents can be Counted as Revenue upon the Farm. There was no discussion on the subject. The next subject, Is Representative Legislation doing all it should for the Greatest Good to the Greatest Number was taken up by Senator J. W. Helme. The session closed with a recitation by Mrs. J. W. Helme.

At the opening of the afternoon meeting Clarke E Baldwin read a paper, In the Matter of Ship Subsidies, where can the Line be Drawn between Aid to Public Necessities and Private Grabs. The paper was prepared by Hon. H. C. Smith but he was unable to be present. This was followed by a recitation by Mrs. Helm, who pleasingly gave a colored dialect B. P. Thomas, who sang here last year at the institute favored the people with a ghost song. The Industrial girls sang several very pretty selections and the work of the institute closed.

A Deep Mystery.

It is a mystery why women endure Backache, Headache, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Melancholy, Fainting and Dizzy Spells when thousands have proved that Electric Bitters will quickly cure such troubles. "I suffered for years with kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Pheobe Cherley, of Peterson, Ia., "and a lame back pained me so I could not dress myself, but Electric Bitters cured me, and, although 73 years old, I now am able to do all my housework." It overcomes Constipation, improves Appetite, gives perfect health. Only 50 cents at C A. Wright's drug store.

Small Industries For Women.

Two cases that have recently come under the writer's notice would seem to emphasize the statement that the making of homemade bread, cake and pastry offers a profitable occupation outside that part of the field that is covered by the women's exchanges. In one of the cases referred to a young girl living in a suburban town and known to make excellent bread for her own family's use was asked by a neighbor to include for her an extra loaf or two in every baking. Other neighbors heard of and duplicated this arrangement. From this modest beginning the friendly service grew to a business. The village is one much frequented in summer by wealthy New Yorkers, and from May to November the youthful baker has difficulty in filling her orders for bread and rolls even by working from 6 a. m. often till nearly midnight. Her custom has made necessary the replacement of the family cook stove with a fine new range, in whose ovens 16 loaves of bread may be baked at once. The second case is in a certain neighborhood of this city. Dwellers in the locality noticed, a little over a year ago, a sign on the basement door of a modest home in the quarter announcing the sale every Saturday of homemade cakes and pies. One after another the housekeepers in the vicinity made a trial of the wares, found them excellent, and the business has grown from a weekly to a daily industry. The goods are delivered in neat boxes. Certain specialties, such as soft gingerbread and raised biscuit, are provided on certain days of the week. Undoubtedly there are other suburban towns and more city neighborhoods where the service could be introduced to the mutual profit of supplier and consumer.—New York Evening Post.

Women at the Polls.

The fact that there was fighting on election day among the men of Denver is promptly seized upon by eastern papers as an argument against letting women vote. The Boston Herald says: "We do not mean that disturbances would not have occurred in Colorado if the men only had been permitted to vote, but it is clear that the participancy of the women in political matters has not produced that amelioration of partisan asperity which it is sometimes assumed would follow."

To judge of this, we must know what the political conditions were in Colorado before women voted. Congressman Shafroth, in a public address delivered in Washington about two years ago, said: "I have seen the time when a political convention without a disturbance and the drawing of weapons was rare. That time is past in Colorado, and it is due to the presence

Hauptmann and His Hobby.

Gerhart Hauptmann, the famous German playwright and author, must have been born under a lucky star. In the first place, while young he inherited a large fortune; then, and still while young, he married a wealthy woman. Of late years his income has been largely increased by the profits from his plays. He has a hobby that his means allow him to gratify. That hobby is the building of villas. He began by building one in Silesia, a second he erected in the vicinity of Berlin and the next he planted in the Riesengebirge. He is at present building a fourth near Dresden.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

HOW IT SPREADS.

People all over Michigan Talking About It.

How it spreads.
Can't keep a good thing down.
Ever notice how good things are imitated?
Better the article, more imitators.
Fortunately the public has a safeguard
Praise can't be imitated.
And true praise takes root and spreads.
Claim is one thing, proof is another.
Claim is what the manufacturer says
Proof is what the people say.
Everywhere in Michigan people say
Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys
Cure all kidney ills.

W. S. Kilmer, passenger engineer on the M. C. Ry. residing at 214 Orange St Jackson, Mich., says: "In 1895 I had considerable trouble with my kidneys from the result of a severe cold which settled there and though I tried every means at hand and treated with doctors the pains through the small of my back became more persistent and severe. To add to my troubles the kidney secretions were unnatural and irregular. At last I was obliged to lay off work. When at home, getting no better under the treatment I was then taking, some one advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills and I procured a box more out of curiosity than from any expectation that they might help me. Now I want this thoroughly understood, when I finished the box I went back to work without a pain or an ache. But to make matters doubly certain I took a second box. Since that time, and that is three years ago, I have neither had an ache nor a pain. Is it any wonder that at this date, 1898, I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills."

A LOVE SONG.

The song the robin sings in May,
It is the one I sing;
He has the same sweet words to say
Across the fields of spring.
Amid the green leaves on the tree,
Hark to his lyric line;
A burst of love and melody—
Sweetheart, be mine!

The south wind's message to the rose
In music soft and clear,
It is the same as mine which goes
To her whom love holds dear.
He sings the crimson to her cheeks;
She trembles on the vine
With joy at every word he speaks;
Sweetheart, be mine!

So, like the south wind's and the bird's,
Let my fate be at last;
Since I have dared to steal their words
My lot with theirs I cast.
The rose and robin's mate shall give
Their hearts to love—and thine.
Say the glad word and let me live;
Sweetheart, be mine!

THE FLEUR-DE-LIS

Was It Dream, Illusion or a Mingling With the Dead?

BY S. L. BACON.

I was a young man then, 24 years of age. That is very young, is it not? And I had been at work ever since I was a mere lad, for I had had my living to make, and at the time of which I write I held a good position and had the respect of my employers.

I had been given just at this time a holiday because of a generally wornout condition of body and mind, having been warned by my physician that unless I followed his prescription of absolute rest and change I should succumb to a fever very prevalent then. So I crossed the channel and buried myself in a little seaport village in France. It was an ideal place in which to rest and gather strength. The salt air blew refreshingly, and all night long one could hear the sound of the waves lashing up against the shore.

The only thing of interest in this quiet little place was the story of the wreck of the Fleur-de-lis and the fact that a good part of the ruined vessel still remained imbedded in the immense banks of sand which cover the coast of this region. My garrulous landlord told me the story of the ship while I discussed my rolls and coffee the morning after my arrival. The big three masted vessel had been caught in a furious gale. It had been a storm before which the fisher folk trembled and which had since been a byword among them.

It had occurred in December, more than three months before, and in the fury of the hurricane and the blackness of the night the ship had completely lost her bearings and, steered at random, had struck a terrible reef some distance out. The crew and the three passengers she carried had made for the boats, but before their escape could be effected the vessel was swung about and the boats dashed against the rocks. Of all on board only two were saved, the first mate and the cook. These, rescued almost by a miracle, could tell of that dreadful night.

Afterward the wind had driven the vessel on with its powerful lashings and hurled it upon the shore. It was fastened firmly by two projecting points of rock and lay upon its side, a mere discolored carcass of what had been the Fleur-de-lis.

I was sufficiently interested, especially as the sun was warm and bright, to follow my host's suggestion and stroll off to view the wreck myself. I took the direction he had pointed out and after brisk walking found myself nearing the coast. The flat yellow sands stretched before me, and as I stepped upon their moist surface I felt that the sea had been there not long before. There was a fresh wind blowing, and the strong, fragrant salt air seemed to bring returning strength with it. I walked faster. I felt a sense of exultant life.

Finally I came upon what had looked in the distance like a black rock. It was the ruins of the vessel. But it was not entirely destroyed. After climbing over the lower side I could see into the hold, which was filled with debris. I marveled as the rotten planks creaked under me that the ship should have remained here so long. I even suspected some of the keener spirits of the town of making her fast, that their object of interest and curiosity might not be lost.

I stood upon the deck of the stranded vessel and looked about me with delight and admiration. From necessity I was with the large manufacturing firm of Davenport & Co., but by nature I was an artist. With the love of art strong within me I had all my life been obliged to crush it down until I had the means to justify my ambition and cultivate what I felt sure was my gift. Only recently had I been able to begin study, and strong encouragement had been given me. Now I seated myself amid the ruins, with my back to the shore, drew out my sketchbook and lost myself in my beloved work.

I worked steadily, for there were several fantastic points to make, and along the coast, which stretched to the right of me, there were many beautiful views to be sketched. But I was not strong, and the long walk had tired me. Moreover, the strong salt breeze carried a soothing potion upon its breath. The low surge of the waves was like a cradle song. My pencil slid from my inanimate fingers, my head dropped to one side, and my eyes closed. I slept

I awoke suddenly. It was the sensation of cold, of a chill, which awakened me. How long had I slept? The sky had changed; it was dark, lowering. I heard the cry of a gull flying inland. I rubbed my eyes. Where was I? Was this the Fleur-de-lis? I looked again. Then I sprang to my feet and cried aloud in horror, for the ship was moving.

The sands of the fast receding beach were enveloped and concealed by the water. The tide was up, and the vessel, the vessel upon which I stood, was detached from its hold and headed out to sea!

I cried aloud. I shrieked. I thought I must jump into the water. Finally I felt the hopelessness of my situation and resigned myself to despair. A strong wind had sprung up, almost a squall, and it drove the ship on faster. The shores faded, about me was the measureless sea. Night came on. I was faint and worn with hunger, and I crawled down into the hold and wished for death to come to my release.

Suddenly as I lay there I heard a faint sound. It was not like any noise I had ever heard, and yet it was strangely familiar to me. I strained my ears; while I listened there passed me suddenly a gleam of light. It was surely some one carrying a lantern. Some one. Who?

I started up. Cold perspiration was upon me. The next instant I knew and recognized the sounds I had heard. It was the moving of the machinery of a vessel, but dim and far away, like the suggestion rather than the actual thing. I rose and with the sense of returning strength all fear left me. I climbed upon deck. The masts were there as they had been when the Fleur-de-lis was happily sailing homeward. The sailors were at their post. The captain, a tall, slender man, stood with his glass to his eyes. But about them all was an air of vague strangeness. A deep melancholy, mingled with an unearthly quiet, pervaded them. Their movements were felt rather than heard.

As I stood looking without fear upon the marvelous scene my attention was arrested by the figure of a young girl. She stood with her profile toward me, the wind stirred the little curls of her light hair, with a faint, transparent hint of color in it, as is sometimes seen upon the heart of a cloud. She had a blue scarf twisted about her throat, which she held in place with the delicate fingers of one hand. On one of them there glistened a ruby of great size and brilliancy.

She turned her face slowly as I looked and smiled a faint, unmirthful smile. I approached her and lifted my hat.

"Will you tell me," I said, my eyes meanwhile feasting upon her beauty, "what ship this is and where it is going?"

She looked at me half sadly, I thought, and answered in a low, vibrant tone:

"It is the Fleur-de-lis, but it is dead, you know. We are all dead, and we are sailing through eternity. You are a stranger. I am glad to see you. We have been alone so long."

The voice of this young girl thrilled me as nothing had ever done before. My heart beat fast. I looked into her blue eyes, with their changing lights, and the past and future faded. I cared only for the present.

"Are you alone?" I ventured. I could scarcely restrain myself from putting my hand on her delicate wrist, from caressing her soft hair.

"No," she replied; "I have my maid and Mme. d'Estell with me."

"You are French, then?"

"Yes, but I was at school in England." An absent look came into her eyes. "That was long, long ago. I must go now and help madame with dinner. We take the cook's place. He was lost, you know."

She smiled sadly and left me.

A repast was presently served in the long saloon, but all hunger seemed to have left me, nor did I see any of the others partake of anything set before them. Afterward I walked on deck with the girl. We paused, looking at the horn shaped moon together. I felt the blown strands of her hair upon my face.

"Will you tell me your name?" I whispered to her.

She turned her face to me serenely.

"I have forgotten," she said simply.

The answer did not surprise me, for to me the past was a blank.

"Then I shall call you Psyche," I said.

"Very well," she replied, and we began to walk again.

Thus days went by, or at least some form of time, just what I could not tell. I was like one intoxicated with a joyous wine. I thought and cared only for the beautiful French girl. Her seductive beauty enchanted me; her proximity thrilled me with intense delight.

The vessel sailed onward, but never sighted land. Before us stretched always the boundless water, now taking strange and varied hues, now bubbling and whirling around us, now sinking into a glassy calm.

One day as I sat with Psyche, as it pleased my fancy to call her, watching her as she looked out upon the sea, I felt a sudden wild longing to paint her face. A sense of joy and delight sprang up within me. Tremblingly I asked her if I might attempt her portrait. She, with her ineffably sad smile, agreed at once.

With a touch that I should have employed in handling the silk of thistle down I turned her head to the desired pose, adjusted the silky tendrils of her hair and began. My heart thrilled with a wild rapture as the picture grew under my hand. I designed it to be very small, scarcely more than a miniature, and after sketching her head in several different positions I chose the most suitable, if, indeed, there could be any choice. The charm of my existence cannot be described. I felt that for the first time in all my life I lived. As the delicate colors blended together and with unerring touch portrayed the perfect face before me my happiness knew no bounds.

At length the picture was completed. As I put the finishing touches upon it she rose and came to me, leaning over my shoulder to look at it.

At that moment a crash of thunder sounded, and a brilliant flash of lightning illuminated the ship. I looked up The sky had grown black as night. The sea, with its inky waves, seemed to bound toward us. It hissed under the sing of the wind. The vessel rocked from side to side, and the water splashed upon the deck. I sprang to my feet and, thrusting the picture into my bosom, seized my companion's hand.

Another and still another clap pealed through the air. In a few moments we were almost in complete darkness save when the lightning shot in flashing lines across the sky. The fury of the storm was indescribable. The wind seemed to have gone mad. Salt spray dashed on my face, cutting like a knife. In the darkness I turned and threw my arms about the girl. As my lips sought hers there came suddenly a cry—a cry that rushed upon me like a resurrection. I felt my companion slip from my arms. By a vivid flash of lightning I caught a glimpse of her face. It was like a shadow, but wearing still that sad smile upon the lips.

The next instant a light flashed before my eyes. The storm had abated, had ceased. All was calm. Beside me stood a tall man in uniform. His appearance seemed strange to me. He suggested that which I had forgotten. He had his arm thrown about me, and he seemed to be supporting me.

"Feel better now?" He spoke in a loud, gruff voice, and it was to me like the memory of a dream.

He held something to my lips. It was like liquid fire. I gasped and turned from him.

"Psyche!" I cried.

The ship, the crew, my beloved, all were gone. I stood alone upon the ruins of the Fleur-de-lis. The sea was calm and placid, the sky blue. The rotten planks were beneath my feet.

"Come, hurry," said my companion. "This won't last much longer." And he dragged me to the side of the vessel, where there was a boat. Just beyond I saw the masts of an English frigate. I felt myself being transported to the boat, and, though I shrieked and struggled, begging that those I had been with on the Fleur-de-lis might be saved or at least that I might remain there also, it was of no avail.

"He is raving," I heard the officer mutter. "The strain has caused insanity, not unusual in such cases."

I thought of Psyche, of my love, and with the despair of the thought I swooned away.

I remained unconscious, ill, for many days, and when I was myself again we were nearing the shores of England. As I tottered weakly upon the deck and, wrapped in a heavy cloak, reclined in my easy chair I suddenly bethought me of my portrait. I put my hand in my bosom. There, close to my heart, I felt it. Tremblingly I drew it forth. I gazed with a sense of joy and relief upon it. Just as it had been completed it was now—the beautiful, perfect features, the exquisite turn of the head, the sweet, melancholy smile.

I pressed it to my lips in a delirium of joy. I spent myself upon it. At least I had this tangible proof of the past. It was more than I had dreamed possible, a treasure. For when I related my experience to those on board I saw from their incredulous faces that they regarded my words but as the incoherent wanderings of a distraught brain.

The captain told me that he had espied a floating wreck, that with his glass it had appeared to him that some one was signaling, and he had sent to investigate. This story, and not mine, was everywhere received among my friends, and as I noted their pitying glances when I eagerly related my narrative, I ceased finally to make any mention of it.

But in the solitude of my chamber I kissed the loved face which I carried against my heart and heaped every dear and endearing name upon it. I had a case of chased gold made and fitted the picture to it. A fine, almost invisible gold thread was fastened to this, and it never left my person. As often as I gazed upon the sweet face which looked back at me I longed with an intense longing for the original. My heart cried out for my lost one. Willingly would I have spent all my days upon that ghastly wreck to have possessed the joy of her presence.

I mingled but little in society, for it held no attraction for me. I was considered a woman hater and looked upon with curiosity. But I was prosperous in my business. Fortune smiled upon me. I made rapid strides and all that I touched seemed to yield tenfold. But whatever art I had in painting was lost, gone from me forever. Vainly I strove to restore my talent. I could accomplish nothing. Since the painting of that one perfect picture all else was of no avail. Finally I abandoned the effort in despair.

So time passed. Years came and went. I watched the gray hairs come about my temples, and in my uneventful life counted time "by the figures on a dial."

Eighteen years went by. It was the summer of 1889. We all remember the great heat of that year. I took a little trip into Switzerland, to Interlaken. The first evening I was there, after dinner, I stepped out on the piazza of the hotel with my cigar. I raised my eyes from lighting it. I saw standing at the other side of the balcony the figure of a young girl. Her profile only was toward me as she gazed out at the beautiful view. Her light hair was uncovered, and she had a blue scarf twisted about her throat. As I looked she raised one hand to draw it more closely, and I caught the flash of a deep red stone upon her finger.

My heart seemed to stand still. Throwing away my cigar and shaking as with an ague, I approached her. As I passed her I was obliged to steady myself by the railing. Her face was identically the same as the one I felt against my fast beating heart. She looked at me curiously and with sympathy, and the pallor of my face might well have startled her.

I sought M. Lanze, the maitre d'hotel, and begged to be introduced. He hesitated, but my earnestness increased, and finally he presented me to the young girl. Her name was Marie Ramee, and she was traveling with her invalid mother. She had but just left school.

"You remind me of a dear friend," I said to her in explanation of my presumption. The words quivered upon my lips.

When night came, I took out the portrait. I looked eagerly upon the face. It was indeed a perfect likeness of this French girl. But as I looked it seemed to grow less distinct, or were my eyes tired? I replaced it without kissing the lips as I usually did.

Marie and I were much together. We walked or sat on the broad piazza looking out on the beauties around us. I longed to show her the picture, but refrained, I knew not why. When I looked at it at night it seemed less fresh, less clear. I wondered if my caresses had injured it.

There came at last a day when I felt that Marie loved me. I divined that precious gift was mine and for me was reserved God's greatest blessing. Trembling, though I felt that the treasure was already within my reach, I asked for her love. My arms encircled her, her warm lips met mine. Then I told her the story of the Fleur-de-lis—a story I had vowed never to relate again. Her eyes widened; her face paled like a white flower.

"The Fleur-de-lis!" she exclaimed. "Surely it is not possible, dear one! My mother's only sister, my young aunt, a beautiful girl, scarcely 18, was lost on that vessel. It is for her I am named. She was returning from England with a companion and maid. They all perished." Her blue eyes filled with tears. "You see it is not possible, sweetheart."

"But it is," I exclaimed, "and I have her portrait. I painted it, and I will show it to you now." I put my hand in my bosom and drew out the case. With trembling fingers I opened it. Vaguely I gazed at it. There was nothing there; the face had faded utterly!

While I looked, horror stricken, upon the empty case there was breathed close to my ear a faint sigh. Twice it came almost imperceptibly, then it ceased. It was not my companion, for when I looked at her she was smiling. —St. Louis Star.

Pity and Beauty

The most beautiful thing in the world is the baby, all dimples and joy. The most pitiful thing is that same baby, thin and in pain. And the mother does not know that a little fat makes all the difference.

Dimples and joy have gone, and left hollows and fear; the fat, that was comfort and color and curve--all but pity and love--is gone.

The little one gets no fat from her food. There is something wrong; it is either her food or food-mill. She has had no fat for weeks; is living on what she had stored in that plump little body of hers; and that is gone. She is starving for fat; it is death, be quick!

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the fat she can take; it will save her.

He Got the Hat.

An Allegheny schoolteacher had occasion to reprimand one of the boys in her school for some infraction of the rules, and she sent him into a small room to wait until after school had been dismissed for the day. The boy did not care to wait for the punishment which he had good reason to believe was in store for him, so he got out of the room through a window, leaving his hat behind him. This was on Friday afternoon. The boy remained near the school until the other pupils came out, and then he persuaded one of the smaller boys to go back and ask the teacher for his hat. The teacher refused to give it to him and said that the boy must come for it himself.

On Monday morning the same little boy came up to her desk and said, "Please may I have that hat to take home?"

"No, you cannot have it. He must come for it himself."

"But he can't come," was the reply.

"Why not?" asked the teacher.

"'Cause he was drowned while he was in swimming Saturday."

The boy received the hat after the teacher had recovered from the shock of the abrupt announcement of the fatality.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Be Greater Than Your Position.

A distinguished theological professor once said, "If I had a son, I should tell him many times a day to make himself as big a man on the inside as possible."

Young men too often want to be big men on the outside, to occupy positions which fit them as a turtle's shell fits a clam.

Never mind your position, young man. Whatever it may be, try to fill it. The duties which you have to perform may seem trivial, but because it is a small position is no reason why you should be a small man. You may be big inside, you know, if you are small outside.

The young man who applies himself to internal growth, as it were, is bound in time to find a place where he will be able to use every power he possesses.

At any rate, better be a big man in a small place than the opposite. A pinch of powder in a small cartridge can make a deal of noise and drive a bullet a long way. What can it do in a Krupp gun?—Success

Worthy of His Hire.

A stranger got off the car, and, accosting a newsboy, asked him to direct him to the nearest bank.

"This way," said the "newsie," and, turning the corner, pointed to a skyscraper just across the street.

"Thank you, and what do I owe you?" said the gentleman, pulling a penny out of his pocket.

"A quarter, please."

"A quarter! Isn't that pretty high for directing a man to the bank?"

"You'll find, sir," said the youngster, "that bank directors are paid high in Chicago."—Chicago Tribune.

The Worm Turns.

"Yes," said Mr. Henpeq; "I, too, have my favorite flowers."

"And what may they be, pray?" sneered his wife.

"They are the ones that 'shut up' at night," he bravely managed to articulate.—Harper's Bazar.

Not True to Its Name.

"Didn't you start out with a play called 'Turned Adrift'?" asked the friend.

"We did," replied that eminent tragedian and repertory actor, Mr. Barnes Tormer, "but we couldn't get anybody to float it."—Indianapolis Press.

THE ATHLOPHOROS CO., New Haven, Conn.

Severe work, followed by prolonged rest in a damp room, insufficient clothing, exposure to draughts, and living in malarial regions, often brings on Rheumatism of the Joints. Ath-lo-pho-ros by its strengthening and purifying powers enables the system to throw off the uric acid poison, and thus cures the disease.

BROOKSBURG, Ind.

Gentlemen:—I had the Rheumatism in my left knee so bad that I could not bend it. I could hardly walk or sit down. I got a bottle of your medicine, and in 24 hours I could bend it and walk on it all right. The pain left in a few hours.
Yours respectfully,
GEORGE WRIGHT.

Hiram Saxton is in very feeble health. He had the misfortune to fall in his home recently which confines him to his room.

The remains of Mrs. Laura Glimpse were brought here from Phelps, N. Y., Monday and taken to Riverside cemetery for burial. She was the widow of the late David Glimpse.

Three sheep, owned by Jas. Hogan, were killed Saturday by the passenger train just as it left the station. We understand he will receive payment from the railroad company for damages.

The ladies, who were recently thrown out of work at the woolen mill, had no trouble in securing employment at the knitting mill. The Woolen Mill company are in hopes to obtain orders and be able to start up againsoon

J. B. Hause went to Jackson Monday, returning with the remains of Mrs. Levi June who died at that place Saturday of pneumonia. She was formerly a resident of this village, having moved to Jackson about a year ago to live with her daughters. The funeral was held Monday afternoon at the Congregational church, Rev. Ashby officiating.

In response to a peal of the door bell, at her home on Chicago street Wednesday night Miss Eleanor Tuttle beheld several of her young lady friends attired in various costumes representing the society belle, "All Coons Look Alike to Me" and the girls of 1866. A few who were too truly original in native costume to disguise themselves, acted as chaperons. An evening of merriment was spent.

The Girl and Her Vocation.

"The future wage earning girl should have in her mind during the latter part of her school life the selection of her profession," writes Margaret E. Sangster in The Ladies' Home Journal. "I think it well for her, too, very quietly, but with intention, to cast about among her friends for suggestions, to ask the kind offices of one and another and to make known her need of immediate employment so soon as she leaves school. Many good positions are lost because of indecision or false pride or unwise reticence on the part of those who seek them. The mental attitude of the girl in search of employment should be neither indifferent nor patronizing. She should set in motion every legitimate means and let those who may be able to assist her know something of her situation. They can help, and she can seek with much greater hope of success if the goal in view be something definite."

PURE BLOOD

Necessary to Life. Vinol Makes it.

POOR BLOOD CAUSES ERUPTIONS AND WEAKNESS.

Vinol Makes Pure, Rich, Red Blood.

BECAUSE WE KNOWN THIS WE GUARANTEE ITS ACTION.

Impoverished blood is a sure sign of internal disorders. We see every day too many people whose faces plainly show that there is something radically wrong.

We want all of our fellow-citizens to know of our splendid blood purifier and blood maker.

We refer to Vinol.

Vinol, as we have before stated, is a purely scientific preparation.

Vinol owes its virtue to the fact that it contains in a highly concentraced state the active curative principles, taken from the livers of live cods—the same elements that formerly were found in cod-liver oil, and which made it famous.

Vinol does not contain the grease or fat that characterized cod-liver oil and made it in many cases worthless.

Vinol acts upon every one of the great vital organs, and by invigorating and giving them strength, enables them to properly perform their functions.

Vinol's effect on the stomach is marvelous. It tones up this, the greatest of the organs of the body, and enables it to obtain from the food which is taken into it the necessary elements to create flesh and muscle tissue, bone structure and pure, rich, red blood.

We are in receipt of a letter from a Savation Army woman which reads as follows:

"I took Vinol after a bad attack of grippe, and so much good did it do me that I persuaded my sister to take it. She was all tired out. Had no appetite and her blood was very poor. It did her as much good as it did me."—BETSY HABERSHAW, 718 River-St., Fall River, Mass.

Won't you please come in and see us? We are always glad to extol the merits of Vinol.

We will give you back your money if you don't find Vinol will do all we claim it will. Could any one do more for you?

QUEEN'S FUNERAL

Will be a Brilliant and Glittering Naval and Military Display.

TEN MILES OF WARSHIPS

Assembled at Cowes, and the Naval Display Will Rival That Attendant Upon the Queen's Jubilee—The Program at London.

Cowes, Feb. 1.—A glittering crescent of light stretched last evening from Cowes to Portsmouth. It consists of ten miles of warships, the pick of the British, French and German navies. These lie at anchor, ready to take their part in to-day's ceremonies when the navy will pay a last magnificent tribute to the sovereign whose reign was marked by the greatest naval progress in the history of the nation.

Apart from these peaceful rows and rows of twinkling port lights, separated from each other by only a few cable lengths, one might fancy that the quiet towns of Cowes and Ryde might be undergoing a blockade. The guns sweep the wooded shores at short range. At the head of the line are the old paddle-wheel royal yachts, their sombre hulls standing out in vivid contrast against the huge white sides of the Hohenzollern. Then, in single column come the British battleships. Half way to Portsmouth the single line merges into a stately double row, the vessels of the foreign nations and the biggest British craft lying there to salute the body of England's lamented queen.

It probably will be nearly 4 o'clock in the afternoon before the Alberta, with the royal coffin, leaves Cowes. She will steam inside the single line and then enter the passage formed by the leviathians. Last evening she was at Trinity pier. Her quarterdeck is covered with awnings, under which the men were working throughout the day in making the final preparations. The awning was necessary because rain fell until a late hour and cold and dreary weather prevailed.

The omens for fine weather are not propitious, but the first of the thousands of spectators are arriving, together with soldiers in brilliant uniforms. The mile and a half of road outside the town of East Cowes and separating Osborne from Trinity pier is a typical thoroughfare. Troops lining it will have difficult work.

The coffin, the military spectacle and the other attendant features will inspire intense interest and emotion, but what creates greater expectancy is the announcement that Queen Alexandra and the princesses of the royal blood will walk down the muddy road and through the narrow streets to the water's edge. This part of the program thus far holds good, although should rain be falling when the procession starts from Osborne house, the royal ladies will scarcely persist in their determination.

People throughout the countryside are lamenting to-day's sorrow, for with it goes the remains of one whom they had grown to look upon as peculiarly their own, as well as the prestige her constant visits bestowed upon the locality.

Meanwhile the invader, the excursionist, the journalist and the visitor from the continent or the mainland discusses, without ceasing, the best coign of vantage to view to-day's spectacle, for spectacle rather than funeral it will be, because of the elaborate preparations which will make it rival in studied magnificence the naval and military display which marked Queen Victoria's jubilee.

London, Feb. 1.—The Earl marshal (duke of Norfolk) gave out the following program Thursday evening, subject to a change of weather, which may necessitate some of the visiting royalties using carriages instead of riding, as indicated:

On Saturday, Feb. 2, a guard of honor will be mounted at the London stations, Victoria and Paddington, and at Buckingham palace. At 9 o'clock precisely the royal coffin will be removed from Portsmouth to London, arriving at Victoria at 11 o'clock. On its arrival in London the royal coffin will be removed from the carriage by an officer and 12 men of the Grenadier guards, placed on a gun carriage and the crown and cushion will be laid there.

The procession, consisting of a brilliant military pageant, will then move. King Edward VII. will ride on horseback; on his right will ride the Duke of Connaught, on his left Emperor William. These will be followed by other royal personages in carriages and on horseback.

Had a Rough Passage.

San Juan de Porto Rico, Feb. 1.—The Venezuelan gunboat Restaurador, formerly the Atlanta, George Gould's yacht, which left New York Jan. 24 for La Guayara, Venezuela, arrived here Thursday. Her commander, Capt. Jeremiah Merithew, reports that the gunboat struck a fearful gale off Bermuda last Sunday, which continued for three days. Coal and water were exhausted and the mahogany deckwork was burned as fuel. The waves ran mountains high. The boats were stove in and the jibboom, bowsprit and spare spars were lost. For 43 hours Capt. Merithew was on the bridge. Finally the bunker floors were burned, but this scarcely served to keep up steam, and the last available fuel had gone into the furnace when the Restaurador sighted Elmorro. Capt. Merithew had to burn his last barrel of pork to get the gunboat into position. The Restaurador, however, suffered no serious injury. The necessary repair can be made in a week, and the gunboat will then proceed for La Guayara.

Was in Collision.

London, Feb. 1.—H. M. S. Opossum has arrived at Pembroke, Wales, with five feet of water in her collision bulkhead, having collided with the British torpedo boat destroyer Vigilant.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES.

London—It is officially announced that King Edward has definitely decided to open parliament in person Feb. 14.

Berlin—The cabinet has decreed that the first dragoon guard regiment will henceforth be named the Queen Victoria of Great Britain and Ireland regiment.

St. Petersburg—W. R. Holloway, United States consul-general here, has left St. Petersburg on a visit to his fellow townsman, Addison C. Harris, the United States minister at Vienna.

San Juan de Porto Rico—Thursday being the last of the 60-day term of the Porto Rican house of delegates whose sessions began Dec. 3, the assembly adjourned sine die at midnight.

ARMY BILL PASSED.

It Now Goes to the President for His Signature.

Washington, Feb. 1.—After an eventful legislative experience, beginning with the present session of congress and covering about two months, the bill for the reorganization of the United States army Thursday passed its last stage in congress and now goes to the president for his signature. The final step was taken in the senate whereby a vote of 33 to 24 the conference report on the bill was agreed to. The house of representatives already agreed to the report. The conference report was kept before the senate constantly Thursday, even the shipping bill giving way. Opposition to the bill continued to be vigorously expressed, Mr. Teller making an extended speech in criticism of the war department and of the measure in general. An opposition developed on the republican side to the report based on the alleged freedom which the conferees had taken in introducing new provisions. On the final vote several republican senators voted with the democrats against the report. The shipping bill was discussed during the latter part of the day and some progress was made on amendments. A speech by Rawlins (Utah) against the bill was in progress at the close of the day. Mr. Chandler announced that a night session would be moved to-day to advance the bill to its final stages.

The house yesterday passed the fortifications appropriation bill and made fair progress with the postoffice appropriation bill. During the general debate upon the former bill Mr. Lanham, of Texas, delivered a notable speech upon the future of the democratic party, in which he made a strong plea for the necessity of a united democracy and counseled the burial of the hatchet and the welcoming back of those who in the last presidential campaigns have declined to support the nominees of the party. Many amendments were offered to the postoffice appropriation bill in the interest of various postoffice employes, but they went down before motions of order raised by Mr. Loud, the chairman of the postoffice commission, who was in charge of the bill.

The house adjourned at 5:30 p. m.

Still No Choice.

Lincoln, Neb., Feb. 1.—The vote on United States senator Thursday was without result, as follows: Allen, fusionist, 47; Bready, fusionist, 50; Hitchcock, fusionist, 23; Harrington, fusionist, 4; W. H. Thompson, fusionist, 18; Meredith, fusionist, 4; D. E. Thompson, 34; Meiklejohn, 28; Hinshaw, 13; Rosewater, 16; Curry, 20; Hainer, 4; Crounz, 7; Martin, 9; Kinkaid, 4; scattering, 14.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 1.—The vote for United States senator yesterday resulted as follows: Mantle, (rep.), 31; Frank (dem.), 24; Cooper (dem.), 9; scattering, 27.

Salem, On., Feb. 1.—The vote for United States senator Thursday was: Corbett, 29; Smith, 26; McBride, 19; Hermann, 8; Fulton, 2; Moore, 2; Williams, 2; Towell, 1; not voting, 1.

The Press Reserved.

Berlin, Feb. 1.—In spite of the evident desire of Emperor William to mark the entente cordial between Great Britain and Germany, the German press continues to be very reserved. The semi-official journals are silent, and those papers that comment at all repudiate for the most part the statement of the British press that the kaiser's visit to England and his behavior there have political significance.

Question Postponed.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The senate committee on privileges and elections Thursday considered the amendment to the legislative appropriation bill providing for an investigation of the effect of the constitutions of some of the southern states upon the colored voters of those states, but it was discovered that the committee was evenly divided, and the question was postponed until the next meeting.

Expressed Appreciation.

New York, Feb. 1.—The following cable from the London stock exchange was received by the New York stock exchange: "On behalf of the stock exchange, I beg to express our sincere appreciation of the deep sympathy of your exchange with the great grief of this nation, expressed by your resolution to close on Saturday.

"J. K. J. HIGINS, Chairman."

Officers Elected.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 1.—At Thursday's session of the National Lumber Exporters' association several papers and reports were heard, and the following officers were elected: President, E. M. Prico, New York, re-elected; first vice-president, H. N. Saxton, Knoxville, Tenn.; second vice-president, John L. Alcock, Baltimore. The contest for the place of the next meeting is between New York, Kansas City and Memphis.

Wheelwomen in Europe.

Wheelwomen in Europe meet with many difficulties. In Russia everything is managed "by order of the czar," and cycling is no exception to the rule. Before a woman can possess a wheel she must obtain royal consent, and as this is granted quite sparingly there are but few wheelwomen in Russia.

France recognizes the right of the husband to be boss, and before madame can join the touring club she must first obtain a signed declaration from her spouse granting her the privilege.

In Florence women cyclists must carry two bells to warn pedestrians of the machine's approach. Men are required to have only one bell.

OLEO COLOR BILL

Both Houses of the Legislature Pass the Measure.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The House Passed the Colby Primary Election Bill, Also a Similar Measure Affecting Kent County—Other Michigan News.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 1.—The senate Thursday afternoon passed the "Pop" Goodell anti-oleomargarine color bill after half an hour's discussion in a committee of the whole. A similar bill in the house was passed in committee of the whole, after considerable discussion and now is on the "third reading" order. Upper peninsula members and Rep. Hunt, of Detroit, tried ineffectively to have the bill amended.

When Goodell's bill came up in committee of the whole in the senate, Senator Robinson offered an amendment providing that oleo be sold only in small packages and each package and wrapper plainly labeled, but permitting the stuff to be colored. He declared he did not want it sold under false pretenses, but under that restriction it would be as legitimate a business as butter making, and the senate had no moral right to legislate it out of existence.

Heime made a vigorous defense of the bill, saying the labeling plan had been tried for years and had proved a failure, and that right now under a "label" law the so-called first class hotels of Lansing are feeding legislators on oleo and charging them enough to pay for the best butter in the state. He said he understood that Robison sells oleo, and therefore he could not blame him for opposing the bill.

The amendment was defeated and when the committee rose the bill was passed, 19 to 6, Senators Fuller, Murfin, Holmes, Loomis, Robson and Charles Smith voting nay. A call of the house was ordered on Helme's motion to get the senators on record.

In the house Rep. Waterbury called up his bill "to prevent deception in the manufacture and sale of imitation butter." It is an anti-oleomargarine measure. But there is an express provision that the bill does not prohibit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in separate form and so as to advise the consumer of its true character, free from coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter.

Rep. Hunt, of Detroit, contended that as the bill was drawn it was a species of class legislation. He objected to the bill because it related only to the coloring of products in imitation of butter. He wanted it amended so as to regulate the "manufacture and sale of butter colored in imitation of yellow butter."

Rep. Waterbury, the father of the bill, said his measure was a copy of the Massachusetts law and that if it were changed as proposed, it might be rendered unconstitutional.

By a vote of 42 to 33 the Hunt amendment was lost. The bill was passed in committee of the whole.

When the senate bill came in, which is a duplicate of the house bill, Rep. Waterbury intended to move its immediate passage, but it was found that there was an error in the accompanying message and action was deferred.

The oleo bill provides a penalty for violation of its provisions.

Rep. Colby's bill to abolish political nominating conventions in Wayne county went through the house without encountering a negative vote, there being 86 votes recorded in its favor.

The Burns bill to abolish political nominating conventions in Kent county was considered for about an hour in committee of the whole, and passed without material amendment. When the house reconvened at 5:30 p. m., Rep. Burns had the rules suspended, and then moved the immediate passage of the measure. No one voted against the bill, and it was given immediate effect.

John Marshall Day.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 1.—Speaker Carton suggested to members of the house judiciary committee Thursday that a joint resolution be introduced in the legislature providing that when both houses adjourn Friday they do so not to meet again until Tuesday afternoon on account of the general celebration of John Marshall day.

In the house Thursday afternoon Chairman McCallum, of the judiciary committee, offered such a joint resolution, which was adopted.

Reps. McCall, Sharpe and Totten were appointed a committee to draft suitable resolutions in this connection.

The senate concurred in Rep. McCallum's resolution, and Senators Murfin and High were named as a committee on resolutions.

Victim of Lockjaw.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Feb. 1.—Frank L. Avery, a 10-year-old boy who had been ill for several days from lockjaw, resulting from the exposure of a vaccination wound which had been accidentally torn open, died Thursday. It is understood that since the development of this serious case, the school board his rescinded its rule barring all children from the public schools who are not vaccinated. The children of several Kalamazoo families have been denied admission because the parents refused to allow them to be vaccinated, on the ground that it interfered with their christian science belief.

Caught in the Act.

Port Huron, Mich., Feb. 1.—Joseph Henry was arrested at midnight Wednesday charged with attempting to burglarize Willis Bros.' saloon on Huron avenue. He was caught in the act. He denied having attempted to burglarize the saloon. Henry is an old offender. His brother is in jail awaiting sentence on a charge of larceny from the person.

Told the Truth.

Mother—Now, Georgie, I shall tell your papa to punish you severely for telling an untruth. You said you didn't touch one of those six peaches, and there is only one left, and I found the five stones in your nursery.

Georgie—I told no story, mamma. The peach I didn't touch is the one that's left.

Spoiled His Breakfast.

"How is the landlady this morning?" asked one of the boarders.

"Threatening and cooler," answered the man with the newspaper, misunderstanding the question.

And the other boarder, who was notoriously slow in settling with the landlady, looked partly cloudy.—Chicago Tribune.

BRUTAL ASSAULT.

Nephew Struck His Uncle on the Head With a Club.

Muskegon, Mich., Feb. 1.—One of the most vicious assaults that has taken place in this section for some time occurred Wednesday evening between 7 and 8 o'clock at Claybanks, Oceana county, about 40 miles north of here. As a result, P. A. Wansey is said to be dying at his home in that place. His alleged assailant is Ole Selland, of Chicago, a young man about 22 years of age, and a nephew of the victim.

The story told by both Mr. and Mrs. Wansey is that Selland assaulted the former without provocation. They say he struck Wansey with a club and as the latter fell to the floor hit him another blow, both being upon the head. Wansey attempted to defend himself, but fell to the floor unconscious as the result of a third blow. In the struggle the furniture was demolished and blood spattered on the walls and floor.

Mrs. Wansey's screams brought the neighbors to the scene and Selland fled. He was hunted all night, but eluded his pursuers, going to New Era, 12 miles distant, where he stayed until morning. In explanation of the condition of his clothing, which was saturated with blood, he told the landlord he had had trouble with a man who insulted his wife. This accounted also for his hatless condition, and he purchased a new hat of the landlord. In the morning he rode by train to Sweet's and walked from there to the junction, where the operator and section men captured him, having been given a description of the man by wire. The sheriff of this county was notified and brought Selland here. He told the sheriff that he beat his uncle because the latter ill-treated his wife, but when he arrived here he would no longer talk of the affair. Selland was taken to Hart by the sheriff of Oceana county.

Children Deserted.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Feb. 1.—About two weeks ago a woman known as Mrs. Minnie Standard left her two little boys, aged 3 and 7 years respectively, at the home of Mrs. Nellie McGregor, saying she had secured a place to work where she would be able to care for the children. She paid one week's board in advance for them. Since then the mother has not been seen in Kalamazoo, and her whereabouts is unknown. The woman's husband left her some time ago. The husband is said to be working in Mishawaka, Ind., and efforts will be made to have him care for the children. If he cannot be found they will be sent to the state public school.

Eight Coal Thieves.

Kalamazoo, Mich., Feb. 1.—Eight colored men and boys were arrested here Thursday for wholesale coal stealing from the Kalamazoo Coal & Sprinkling Co., the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, and the Chicago, Kalamazoo & Saginaw railroads. The alleged thieves are said to have stolen large quantities of coal and peddled it from house to house.

Struck by a Train.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 1.—While driving a horse and cutter across the McCamly street crossing Thursday afternoon, Dr. William H. Dixon was struck by a Michigan Central train and probably fatally injured. He received internal injuries and several ribs were broken. He was wounded on the head. Dixon is an old resident. The cutter was smashed to pieces, but the horse was uninjured.

Wants His Priperty.

Port Huron, Mich., Feb. 1.—Philo Kuhn, sentenced to 18 years at Jackson for the murder of William McDonald, who was paroled by ex-Gov. Pingree, claims he was induced by his children to sign over $15,000 worth of property to be managed by them while he was imprisoned. Now he claims they have told him to earn his own living, and he has petitioned the court to compel the children to return the property to him.

Terribly Scalded.

Newberry, Mich., Feb. 1.—Hugh Russell, engineer of the village water works and electric lighting plant, was seriously scalded at the power house Thursday morning through the carelessness of a fellow workman. If he survives he will lose the use of his hands.

Referred to Next Congress.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The house committee on census Thursday, in view of a report from the director of census that he was unable to furnish before April 1 the information necessary to determine the extent to which the right to vote is abridged by the several states, directed Chairman Hopkins to report the Olmstead resolution back with the recommendation that the whole matter go over until the next congress.

A National Monument.

Rome, Feb. 1.—The Italian senate has passed a bill declaring the house in which the late Giuseppe Verdi, the celebrated composer, was born a national monument and authorizing the interment of the remains of Verdi and his wife at the institute for old musicians founded by Verdi in Milan.

Vessel Ashore.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The life-saving service Thursday was advised that the schooner George B. Congdon, from Germantown, S. C., for Perth Amboy, N. J., with railroad ties, went ashore Wednesday night off Hatteras. She probably will be a total loss. The life-savers rescued the crew of seven.

Dividend Declared.

New York, Feb. 1.—The directors of the Union Pacific railroad met here Thursday and declared the regular semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent each on the common and preferred stocks.

Steve Brodie Dead.

San Antonio, Tex., Feb. 1.—Steve Brodie, the bridge jumper and sporting man of New York, died here Thursday night of consumption.

Hobson's Choice.

How many of us who use or hear the familiar expression, "It was Hobson's choice," are acquainted with the real sort of selection that Tobias Hobson offered his guests? This is the genuine version of the tale: The said Tobias Hobson was a Cambridge innkeeper, with 40 horses in his stables, some better, of course, than others. When a traveler came to request a mount, he was obliged to take the steed that stood nearest the door, although there were so many others advertised as for hire. If the traveler objected to that mount, all he could do was to wait until some other traveler had come for one and so removed this and left its next door neighbor nearest the stable door.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES

Twenty Persons Injured by an Explosion and Fire in New.

LOSS ESTIMATED AT $1,500,000

The Most Spectacular Fire New York Ever Experienced—One of the Best Known Opera Houses in the West Burned at Kansas City.

New York, Feb. 1.—The explosion Thursday afternoon in the cigar box factory of the W. Wicke company, in East Thirty-first street, by which over 20 persons were injured, was followed at 7 o'clock at night by one of the fiercest conflagrations New York has witnessed in many years, causing an estimated loss of $1,500,000.

The burned area, in general extent, took in about one city block. The Wicke company's building, the building abutting it from Thirty-second street and several tenement houses were among the destroyed buildings. Several lumber yards in the vicinity were considerably damaged. The fire was witnessed by immense crowds of people, and it is said, was the most spectacular one New York has ever seen.

The panic-stricken occupants of a number of tenements threatened by the fire were assisted out by policemen and firemen. The fire abounded in thrilling incidents, but only a few persons were injured, none seriously.

Kansas City, Feb. 1.—Fire late Thursday night destroyed the Coates opera house, the principal theater of Kansas City, situated at Tenth street and Broadway, and occupying a detached building. Walker Whiteside and his company were playing "Heart and Sword" in the house and had just concluded the evening performance when some of the actors discovered that the building was afire, the flames enveloping the whole rear part of the theater in a few moments. The company lost their wardrobes and scenery, being obliged to flee from their dressing rooms. The firemen were helpless to check the flames and directed the chief attention to the Coates hotel, diagonally across the street, the largest hotel in the city. Wind blew great showers of cinders upon the hotel, the guests were notified of their danger and some left the house, but it was not damaged.

At 12:15 the theater block was a total wreck but still blazing. No one was injured.

The audience had left the theater only five minutes before the fire was discovered. The building was valued at between $125,000 and $150,000, and was insured for much less. It was one of the oldest and best known theaters in the west.

To Punish Bribers.

Washington, Feb. 1.—Rep. Lentz, of Ohio, has introduced in the house a bill entitled "a bill to promote the purity of elections." It provides that in presidential and congressional elections bribe-givers or offerers of bribes on conviction shall be subject to pay a fine from $500 to $1,000, shall be imprisoned and be disfranchised for from five to fifteen years and be, during that period, disqualified from holding elective offices. The bribe-taker, or the person offered the bribe, shall receive one-half of the fine and not be punishable. The bill also provides that no person or corporation shall contribute to any campaign fund for use outside of the district in which he or it resides, and prescribes heavy penalties for violations.

Wants to Be a G. A. R.

Cleveland, Feb. 1.—Memorial post, G. A. R., of this city, Thursday received formal application from Senator M. A. Hanna that he be permitted to become a member of that organization. The application was referred to the proper committee for report, and action will be taken in a week or two. Senator Hanna was first lieutenant of Company C, O. V. I. 150, during the civil war.

Open to Union Men.

Pittsburg, Feb. 1.—A convention of sheet mill workers of the country will meet here to-day, when it is likely that some of the non-union plants of the American Sheet Steel Co. will be declared open to union workmen. Two plants in this city, Oliver's Tenth street mill and Lindsay & McCutcheon's mills, Allegheny, have been declared open by the Amalgamated association.

BRIEF DISPATCHES.

Mrs. Banks, widow of Gen. Banks, is dead at Waltham, Mass.

In the Illinois senate, at Springfield, a bill has been introduced making it a misdemeanor to sell or bring into the state any cigarettes or cigarette paper.

J. Ogden Armour was elected a director of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road at New York Thursday, succeeding his father, the late P. D. Armour.

The Rogers pottery, located four miles north of East Liverpool, O., was totally destroyed by fire Thursday night. It was a three-kiln plant and owned by Bradshaw Bros. The plant was only partially insured.

Theobald place, the handsome residence of Judge James E. Cantrill, at Georgetown, Ky., was destroyed by fire Thursday. The building had 50 rooms or more filled with fine furniture and curios. Loss $50,000.

At Jefferson City, Mo., a bill has been introduced in the senate taxing outside insurance companies doing business in Missouri. It provides a tax of 2 per cent on the premiums of domestic companies and 6 per cent on foreign companies.

At a special meeting of the directors of the maritime association of the port of New York, held Thursday, it was decided to order the maritime exchange closed for business on Saturday, Feb. 2, out of respect to the memory of Queen Victoria.

Discouraging.

"It's very discouraging," said the young man. "I confess that at times I considered myself a genius."

"But perhaps you are," suggested his friend soothingly.

"Impossible. I explained my plans to half a dozen hard headed, practical men, and not one of them seemed to think that I was a blamed fool."—Life.

The Commercial Instinct.

Mamma—Tommy, do stop that noise. If you'll only be good, I'll give you a penny.

Tommy—No: I want a nickel.

Mamma—Why, you little rascal, you were quite satisfied to be good yesterday for a penny.

Tommy—I know, but that was a bargain day.—Philadelphia Press.

TROOPS FOR PHILIPPINES.

The War Department Preparing to Relieve the Volunteers.

Washington, Feb. 1.—In anticipation of the passage of the army reorganization bill, the war department has issued preparatory orders for the transportation of 5,200 regular troops to the Philippines to replace an equal number of volunteers under orders to San Francisco for discharge. The soldiers to be sent to the Philippines first include eight troops of the Fifth cavalry, eight companies of the Tenth infantry, eight companies of the Eleventh infantry and the provisional battalion of the troops at the Presidio of San Francisco.

There are now about 2,000 recruits at San Francisco awaiting transportation to Manila, and the number will be increased as rapidly as the recruiting officers in various parts of the country obtain the necessary material.

There are now about 40,000 regular troops in the Philippines, and the problem confronting the military authorities is how to increase that number to 60,000 by the first of July, when the entire volunteer army of 35,000 must be discharged. Action will be taken for the provision of the pending army bill authorizing the recruitment of 12,000 native Filipinos. In that event only 10,000 reinforcements will be required from the United States immediately. The most sanguine officers of the war department do not expect more than 3,000 or 4,000 volunteer troops to re-enlist for service in the Philippines.

Rebellion Near an End.

Washington, Feb. 1.—A report from Minister Loomis at Caracas, dated Thursday, indicates that the revolution is near an end in the opinion of the Venezuelan government, in view of the victory gained over the revolutionists near Carunpano. Another battle is reported to have occurred recently near La Cuevas, in which both sides lost several hundred men. A French warship is about to proceed to Carunpano to take the place of the cruiser Suchet, which has been lying there. The Venezuelan government has declined to prevent the local officials in the province of Bermudese from acting toward taking possession of the New York Burmese concession at Pitch Lake, and these local officials have demanded the surrender of the arms and ammunition belonging to the asphalt people.

A Labor War.

Ft. Worth, Tex., Feb. 1.—Building of all kinds is at a standstill here as a result of the war between the contractors and the unions. At a meeting of employing builders it was resolved they would not employ members of unions affiliated with the building trades council or trades assembly. When the carpenters, plumbers and others reported for work they were told they must sever connection with these bodies. Upon refusal they were discharged. This action threw 500 to 600 workmen out of work. The unions now threaten to have union workers all over the state boycott Ft. Worth business of all kinds unless Ft. Worth business men take action in their interest.

Mrs. Nation. Disapproved.

Lynn, Mass., Feb. 1.—The Essex county women's Christian Temperance Union, in session in Lynn, has disapproved of Mrs. Nation and her work in a resolution which says:

Resolved, That while we deplore the conditions that make it possible for our sister, Mrs. Carrie Nation, of Kansas, to take such means as she has, we desire to put on record our belief that the methods of the crusaders at the beginning of this organization would have answered her purpose even better than those she used. The crusade alluded to was the formation of bands which visited saloons and offered prayer therein.

Failures for January.

New York, Feb. 1.—Reports to R. G. Dun & Co. show failures in January 1,242 in number and $11,220,811 in amount of liabilities. Of this aggregate, 254 were in manufacturing for $4,700,984, and 948 in trading for $5,311,804, while in brokerage, transporting, real estate, etc., there were 40 failures for $1,508,023. Besides these strictly commercial disasters, eight financial houses closed their doors owing $1,070,857.

Coal Strike Settled.

Colorado Springs, Col., Feb. 1.—The coal strike in the Colorado Springs district has been settled and to-day a full force will be at work in all the mines. The strike has kept about 500 men idle for the last three weeks. The men get an increase in wages of about 10 per cent and bind themselves to permit no agitation of the wage question for at least 12 months.

The Hot Water Cure.

Boarding House Keeper—A glass of hot water? What can the man want with a glass of hot water? He doesn't shave.

Cook—He wants to drink it.

"To drink it? Well, I never!"

"Oh, all the boarders is sending for hot water now three times a day."

"Goodness me! What for?"

"Fur to drink. They calls it the hot water cure. It beats all newfangled notions what come up."

"What does it cure?"

"Oh, they say it really cures everything just splendid."

"Thank fortune it's cheap. Give 'em all the hot water they want, Maria."

"Yes'm."

"So hot water is a great cure, is it? Well, I shan't let any of my boarders get ill for want of medicine. Just put another gallon of hot water in that oyster soup, Maria, and I think you'd better take out the oyster now. It might get too rich."—London Tit-Bits.

To Keep Butter Sweet.

One can keep butter sweet a long time, even in a hot room where it is half melted, by keeping it covered with brine made by putting into boiling water all the salt it will take up. Then let it cool and pour over the butter. Meat may be preserved in the same way. To be sure, it will become rather salt, but when you wish to use it take it out of the brine the night before and lay it across two spoons or sticks to lift it from the bottom of the dish in which you wish to soak it and then cover it with fresh water. The salt will then settle out of the meat, and it will freshen nicely. You throw meat or fish into the bottom of a vessel and cover it with water, and it will freshen very little, for the salt does not fall out, but only to the lower side.

Character Shown by the Nose.

"Here is an article in the paper that says a woman's character can be determined by her nose."

"Well, there may be something in that, but there's a surer way. No one can make a mistake concerning a woman's character if he will look at the noses of other women who meet her. The extent to which they turn up at such times shows just what she is or isn't."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900, By Harold MacGrath.

"I will find the story in the present instance," said I. And in the fewest words possible I laid before him the object of my visit.

"This is a very strange story," he said, making a pyramid of his fingers

"This is a very strange story," he said.

and contemplating the task with a careful air. "Are you not letting your imagination run away with you?"

"Not for a moment. I ask you to attend the ball at the American ministry this evening, and if the likeness between the two women does not convince you the matter shall drop so far as I am concerned."

"Has Herr Wentworth any idea of the affair?"

"It is not possible. What would be his object in keeping it a secret?"

"Still it is a grave matter and without precedent. We must move carefully. You understand that there was no knowledge of another child, only rumor, and then it was believed to be a hallucination of the mother, whose mind was not very strong."

"Do you believe," I asked, "that two persons born of different parentage in different lands may resemble each other as these two do?"

"No. I shall let you know what stand I'll take when I have seen them together. And what will his majesty say?" he mused. "I'm afraid the matter will assume many complications. And I might add that you seem particularly interested."

A slight warmth came into my cheeks.

"Your excellency understands that a journalist always takes great interest in affairs of this sort," was my rejoinder.

"Yes, yes," pleasantly. "But this so called sister—has she not lived most of her life in America, your own country?"

"Your excellency," said I honestly, "whether she regains her own or not is immaterial to me from a personal standpoint."

"Well, one way or the other, I shall decide what to do tonight. But, mind you, there must be proofs. Though they may look enough alike to be two peas in a pod, that will give your friend nothing you claim for her. The fate of your princess rests in the hands of Herr Wentworth. Have the two met?"

"No, but during the short time they have been in the city they have been mistaken for each other. And why do you call her my princess?"

"She is not ours yet. It was a strange story, as I remember it. In those days we had our doubts, as we still have, of another child. By the way, who suggested the matter to you?"

I recounted my interview with the prince.

"Ah," said the chancellor, "so it was he? He is a greedy fellow and careful. I can readily understand his object. He wants all or nothing. I shall help you all I can," he concluded as I reached for my hat.

"I ask nothing more," I replied. And then I passed from the cabinet into the crowded anteroom. It was filled with diplomats and soldiers, each waiting for an audience. They eyed me curiously and perhaps enviously as I made my way to the street. "Yes, indeed, what will the king say?" I mused on the way back to my rooms. What could he say?

That night Pembroke and I arrived at the ministry a little after 10. I was in a state of extreme nervousness.

"I'm in a regular funk," said Pembroke. "Supposing your princess does not come?"

"It is written that she will come."

"Well, I'm glad that I looked you up in London. I would not have missed this adventure."

We found Phyllis in a nook under the grand staircase. I gave a slight exclamation as I saw her. I had never seen her looking so beautiful.

"Come and sit down," said she, making room for us. "I have had a curious adventure."

"Tell us all about it," said Pembroke.

"I have had the honor of being mistaken for a princess," triumphantly.

"Who could doubt it!" said I, with a glance I could not help, which made her lower her eyes.

"Moreover," she continued, this time looking at Pembroke, "the gentleman who committed the error was the Austrian embassador. What a compliment to take home!"

"And who was the princess?" I felt compelled to ask, though I knew perfectly well.

"The Princess Hildegarde. Do you recall the night in London," to me, "when the same thing occurred? I am very anxious to meet this princess who looks so like me."

"You will have that pleasure immediately after the opera," said I.

Pembroke's eyes said something to me then, and I rose.

"There is Mr. Wentworth. I wish to speak to him. Will you excuse me?"

"With pleasure!" laughed Pembroke.

I threaded my way through the gathering throng to the side of Mr. Wentworth.

"How d'y' do, Winthrop?" he said, taking me by the arm. "Come into the conservatory. I want you to see some of the finest orchids that ever came from South America. The girls are looking well tonight. I suppose you noticed?"

"Especially Phyllis." Our eyes met.

When we entered the conservatory, he suddenly forgot all about the orchids.

"Jack, I'm worried about her—Phyllis. You see, she is not my niece. There's a long story. This morning a gentleman visited my department. He was Prince Ernst of Wortumborg. He began by asking me if Phyllis was my niece. That started the business. He proceeded to prove to me, as far as possible, that Phyllis was a princess. I could not say that it was all nonsense, because I did not know. Some 20 years ago a strange thing happened. I occupied the same residence as today. It was near midnight, and snowing fiercely. I was looking over some documents, when the footman came in and announced the presence of a strange woman in the hall who demanded to see me. The woman was young and handsome, and in her arms she carried a child. Would I, for humanity's sake, give a roof to the child till the morrow? The woman said that she was looking for her relatives, but as yet had not found them, and that the night was too cold for the child to be carried around. She was a nurse. The child was not hers, but belonged to a wealthy family of the south, who were to have arrived that day, but had not.

"The thing seemed so irregular that I at once consented, thinking to scan the papers the next day for an account of a lost or stolen child. She also carried a box which contained, she said, the child's identity. Now, as I am a living man, there was nothing in that box to show who the child was—nothing but clothes; not a jewel or a trinket. I looked through the papers in vain. And the woman never appeared again. Much against my will I was forced to keep the child. I am glad I did, for I have grown to love her as one of my own. I had a married sister who died in Carolina, so I felt secure in stating that Phyllis was her daughter, therefore my niece. And that is positively all I know. And here comes a fellow who says he knows who she is and, moreover, that she is a princess. What do you say to that?"

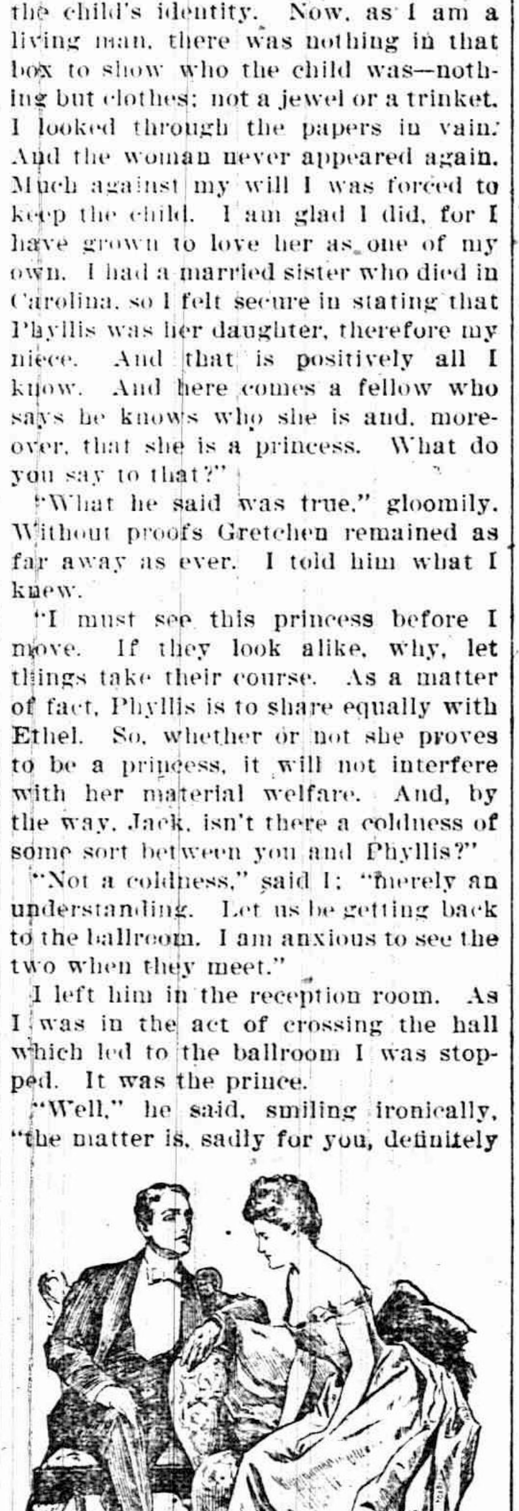
"What he said was true," gloomily. Without proofs Gretchen remained as far away as ever. I told him what I knew.

"I must see this princess before I move. If they look alike, why, let things take their course. As a matter of fact, Phyllis is to share equally with Ethel. So, whether or not she proves to be a princess, it will not interfere with her material welfare. And, by the way, Jack, isn't there a coldness of some sort between you and Phyllis?"

"Not a coldness," said I; "merely an understanding. Let us be getting back to the ballroom. I am anxious to see the two when they meet."

I left him in the reception room. As I was in the act of crossing the hall which led to the ballroom I was stopped. It was the prince.

"Well," he said, smiling ironically, "the matter is, sadly for you, definitely



"If I loved you, I should follow you to the end of the world."

settled. Your friend may in truth be a princess, but there are no proofs. In the eyes of men they are sisters; in the eyes of the law they are total strangers. I shall not ask you to congratulate me upon my success. I shall now wed the Princess Hildegarde with a sense of security. Come—have you seen her yet? She does not know that you are here. It will be a surprise and a pleasure. As to that other matter, I shall send a gentleman around to your rooms in the morning to arrange the affair."

I shivered. I had forgotten that I had accepted a challenge.

"Take me to her," said I. "She will be happy indeed to see me, as you know." I laughed in his face. "How convenient it would be for both of us—her and me—should my bullet speed to the proper place! Believe me, I shall be most happy to kill you. There are many things on the slate to wipe out."

"I see that you are a gentleman of spirit," said he, smoothing the scowl from his brow. "Ah, there she stands. Look well, my friend; look at her well. This is probably the last night you will see her save as my wife."

The sight of that dear face took the nerves from me and left me trembling. Even in the momentary glance I detected a melancholy cast to her features. She was surrounded by several men who wore various decorations.

"Your highness," said the prince, mockery predominating his tones, "permit me to present to you an old friend."

Was it because her soul instinctively became conscious of my presence and nerved her for the ordeal that she turned and smiled on me? The prince appeared for a moment crestfallen. Perhaps the scene lacked a denouement. Oh, I was sure that implacable hate burned under that smile of his, just as I knew that beneath the rise and fall of Gretchen's bosom the steady fire of immutable love burned, burned as it burned in my own heart.

"Ah, here you are!" said a voice behind me, giving me an indescribable start. "I have been looking high and low for you. You have forgotten this dance."

It was Phyllis.

And then a sudden hush fell upon the circle. The two women stood face to face, looking with strange wonder into each other's eyes.

CHAPTER XIX.

Phyllis and I were sitting in one of the numerous cozy corners. I had danced badly and out of time. The music and the babel of tongues had become murmurous and indistinct.

"And so that is the Princess Hildegarde?" she said after a spell.

"Yes; she is your double. Is she not beautiful?"

"Is that a left handed compliment to me?" Phyllis was smiling, but she was colorless.

"What do you think of her?" suppressing the eagerness in my voice.

"She is to be envied," softly.

And I grew puzzled.

"Jack, for a man who has associated with the first diplomatists of the world, who has learned to read the world as another might read a book, you are surprisingly unadept in the art of dissimulation."

"That is a very long sentence," said I in order to gain time enough to fathom what she meant. I could not. So I said, "What do you mean?"

"Your whole face was saying to the princess, 'I love you!' A glance told me all. I was glad for your sake that no other woman saw you at that moment. But I suppose it would not have mattered to you."

"Not if all the world had seen the look," moodily.

"Poor Jack, you are very unlucky!" Her voice was full of pity. "I feel so sorry for you, it is all so impossible. And she loves you too."

"How do you know?"

"I looked at her while she was looking at you."

"You have wonderful eyes."

"So I have been told. I wonder why she gave you that withered and worm eaten rose?"

"A whim," I said, staring at the rug. I wondered how she came to surmise that it was Gretchen's rose? Intuition perhaps.

"Do you love her well enough," asked Phyllis, plucking the lace on her fan, "to sacrifice all the world for her, to give up all your own happiness that she might become happy?"

"She never can be happy without me—if she loves me as I believe." I admit that this was a selfish thought to express.

"Then why is it impossible, your love and hers? If her love for you is as great as you say it is, what is a king, a prince or a principality to her?"

"It is none of those. It is because she has given her word, the word of a princess. What would you do in her place?" suddenly.

"I?" Phyllis leaned back among the cushions, her eyes half closed and a smile on her lips. "I am afraid that if I loved you I should follow you to the end of the world. Honor is a fine thing, but in her case it is an empty word. If she broke this word for you, who would be wronged? No one, since the prince covets only her dowry and the king desires only his will obeyed. Perhaps I do not understand what social obligation means to these people who are born in purple."

"Perhaps that is it. Phyllis, listen, and I will tell you a romance which has not yet been drawn to its end. Once upon a time—let me call it a fairy story," said I, drawing down a palm leaf as if to read the tale from its blades. "Once upon a time in a country far from ours there lived a prince and a princess. The prince was rather a bad fellow. His faith in his wife was not the best, and he made a vow that if ever children came he would make them as evil as himself. Not long after the good fairy brought two children to her godchild, the princess. Remembering the vow made by the prince, the good fairy carried away one of the children, and no one knew anything about it save the princess and the fairy. When the remaining child was 2 years old, the princess died. The child from then on grew like a wild flower. The prince did his best to spoil her, but the good fairy watched over her just as carefully as she watched over the child she had hidden away. By and by the wicked prince died. The child reached womanhood. The good fairy went away and left her. Perhaps she now gave her whole attention to the other." I let the palm leaf slip back and drew down a fresh one, Phyllis watching me with interest. "The child the fairy left was still a child for all her womanhood. She was willful and capricious; she rode, she fenced, she hunted; she was as unlike other women as could be. At last the king, who was her guardian, grew weary of her caprices. So he commanded that she marry. But what had the fairy done with the other child, the twin sister of this wild princess? Perhaps in this instance the good fairy died and left her work unfinished, to be taken up and pursued by a conventional newspaper reporter. Now this pro tem. fairy ascertained that the good fairy had left the lost princess in the care of one of a foreign race. Having a wife and daughter of his own, he brought the princess up as his niece, not knowing himself who she really was. She became wise, respected and beautiful in mind and form. Fate, who governs all fairy stories, first brought the newspaper reporter into the presence of the lost princess. She was a mere girl then and was selling lemonade at—at 25 cents a glass. She"—

"Jack," came in wondering tones, "for mercy's sake, what are you telling me?"

"Phyllis, can you not look back, perhaps as in a dream, to an old inn where soldiers and ministers in a hurry and confusion moved to and fro? No; I dare say you were too young. The Princess Hildegarde of Hohenphalia is your sister." I rose and bowed to her respectfully.

"My sister, the princess? I a princess? Jack," indignantly, "you are mocking me! It is not fair!"

"Phyllis, as sure as I stand before you all I have said is true. And now let me be the first to do homage to your serene highness," taking her hand despite her efforts to withdraw it and kissing it.

"It is unreal! Impossible! Absurd!" she cried.

"Let me repeat the words of the French philosopher who said, 'As nothing is impossible let us believe in the absurd,'" said I.

"And does she know—the Princess Hildegarde? My sister? How strange the word feels on my tongue."

"No; she does not know, but presently she will."

Then Phyllis asked in an altered tone, "And what is all this to you that you thrust this greatness upon me, a greatness, I assure you, for which I do not care?"

I regarded her vaguely. I saw a precipice at my feet. I could not tell her that in making her a princess I was making Gretchen free. I could not confess that my motive was purely a selfish one.

"It was a duty," said I evasively.

"And in what way will it concern the Princess Hildegarde's affairs—and yours?" She was rather merciless.

"Why should it concern any affair of mine?" I asked.

"You love her, and she loves you. May she not abdicate in my favor?"

"And if she should?" with an accent of impatience.

Phyllis grew silent. "Forgive me, Jack!" impulsively. "But all this is scarcely to be believed. And then you say there are no proofs."

"Not in the eyes of the law," I replied. "But nature has written it in your faces." I was wondering why she had not gone into raptures at the prospect of becoming a princess.

"It is a great honor," she said after some meditation, "and it is very kind of you. But I care as little for the title as I do for this rose." And she cast away one of Pembroke's roses. It boded ill for my cousin's cause.

FLORIDA'S BLUSHING TREE.

The Secret of Its Foliage Changing Color When Rain Falls.

"Among the many wonders of those strange Florida swamps there is nothing more surprising than the blushing tree," said a man, who has recently passed a month in the Everglades of Florida.

"The blushing tree," he continued, "is by no means common. It is found only in the densest thickets of those interminable marshes whose luxuriant vegetation is a revelation to explorers. It is called the blushing tree by those who know it because it actually blushes when the rain falls upon it. This phenomenon is apparently incomprehensible. It never fails to astound those who see it for the first time. The mysterious and beautiful glow of color which it assumes in a rainstorm baffles description. The Seminole Indians, who once ruled Florida, have always known of the tree, and in their musical language, now fast disappearing, have words which mean 'the maiden tree, which reddens at the coming of her lover, the rain.'

"In company with a taciturn Indian guide I journeyed 40 miles to see this marvelous bit of vegetable life. I could scarcely believe the story he told me, yet curiosity at length overcame incredulity, and we set forth one morning in a small canoe. We spent nearly three days paddling and poling our way over the winding waters. In the afternoon of the third day I began to wonder if he had only been deceiving me for the sake of the boat hire and his pay as guide, when he gave a grunt of satisfaction and pointed to the right.

"Distrustfully I followed him ashore and through the underbrush. Beneath great cypress trees, hoary with the gray hanging moss, and past immense bay trees we wended our way inland. Eagerly he led the way until, reaching the edge of a little open space, he stopped and with silent pride pointed toward the center. Gracefully a tree, with broad, bananalike leaves, reared itself aloft. Wide spreading branches hung down, slightly waving in the warm breeze. Its emerald hued foliage was the most beautiful I had ever beheld. It rose to a height of 20 feet, and its thick, substantial trunk indicated many years of existence. This, the old Seminole informed me, was 'the blushing tree.'

"I told him to prepare to camp here until it rained, regardless of time. We unrolled our blankets, stretched our mosquito bars, without which one cannot sleep in the glades, cooked supper and rolled up in our blankets for the night. That night, the day following and the next night passed without rain.

"I began to think it would never rain, when about noon a cloud darkened the sky overhead. I put a rubber poncho over my shoulders and fixed my eyes on the green and pretty tree a dozen yards away. It was covered with a greenish insect the size of a large wood tick, which intensified its color. The rain began to fall in torrents, after its custom in that region. Beside me, grinning confidently with a pipe in his mouth, stood the Seminole.

"As the cool water drenched the tree I was amazed to note a changing of color. Gradually, yet unmistakably, the green hue was giving away to pink. The Indian had told the truth. The tree was blushing at the rain.

"In a few minutes the green had faded from sight. Only in a few, half hidden spots beneath broad branches and on its trunk was there a tinge of green to be seen. The tree was as pink as the cheek of a healthy girl.

"After an hour or more the shower passed over, and I watched with no less interest the wonderful tree assume its familiar green once more. As it was changing back to emerald I suddenly realized the secret of the phenomenon. The tiny insects and not the tree itself changed color. These peculiar parasites are possessed of the power of chameleons. In the bright warm sunshine they are greener than the tree on which they live, but when the chilly rain falls upon them they contract their little backs and become a pretty pink in color. Millions of them thus change the tint of the tree. They are found only upon one species of trees, which grow in certain parts of the Everglades."—Denver Post.

London "Sandwich Men."

The "sandwich men" are among the "East London Types" described by Sir Walter Besant in The Century.

They walk between the boards all day long for a shilling. It is work which makes no demand upon them. They slowly and mechanically plod along, each following the man before him. If you watch the sandwich man, you may observe that he looks neither to the right nor to the left. His face expresses no emotion of any kind; he feels no interest in anything. He is like the hermit, or the recluse, or the anchorite—inclusus. He is dead to the world, a man without friends, without money, without hope, without resources, without the power of work, without strength of mind to resolve, without will to urge him and to sustain him or to lead him out—has no further concern with the world. It is a moving panorama, a series of pictures on which he looks without interest. His own figure, which ought to be there, is not there. Newsboys shout their evening papers; the shops light up their wares till the whole street is a fairyland of treasures; the well dressed people pass him in long procession; the carriages go up and down the road. To all the life around him, to all the sights around him, to the meaning of the show and to the dance of life and death that fills the street the sandwich man is indifferent. He has no ambition; he has no future to hope for, no past that he cares to remember; he lives only for the day.

Fashionable Use For Photographs.

Now that every one in society possesses one or two cameras, the latest thing is to find a new way of disposing of the photographs that have been taken. Scrap albums are just a little out of date, and it is far smarter to have your photographs mounted in a long green frame that runs round your room above the dado and so arranged that from time to time the sets may be changed. Another favorite way is to arrange them as stereoscopic views and family groups. Interiors and pastoral scenery are quite charming when used in this way.

Part of It.

"Yes, sir; we have 200 deaf and dumb inmates on the roll of the institution, and fully 100 of them are voters."

"Indeed? This must be a part of the silent vote to which reference is so frequently made in the daily papers."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

A YOUNG WOMAN WHO HAS WON SUCCESS BY HER OWN EFFORTS.

The Sweet Potato Girl—The Housewifery Congress—Wedding Cake Boxes—Electricity In the Home. The Woman Who Laces.

An enterprising young woman has just entered Syracuse university with the freshman class. She is Miss Mary Mills, who will pay her way through college by her beekeeping. For two years since she was graduated from the high school she has been in the business at her father's farm, three miles out of Syracuse, and she has made it pay. At the New York State fair, recently held in Syracuse, she carried off the first prize for her bees and first prize and several others for her honey.

Miss Mills has found that this kind of work brings her in more money than school teaching or some other occupations might. Her 80 swarms of bees she takes entire charge of. They are located in a vineyard, this site being chosen so that when they swarm they will be likely to light on the grapevines, where they can be easily captured. Even with this precaution, however, they sometimes take to the trees.

MISS MARY MILLS.

The costume that Miss Mills wears in her work consists of bloomers and a short skirt of denim. Brown is the color chosen, because, as Miss Mills says, beekeepers have observed that the bees like this shade and are much more amicably inclined toward people who wear it. On her head she wears an ordinary farmer's straw hat, about which a black silk veil is draped and folded snugly around her neck for protection from the bees.

The Sweet Potato Girl.

"I sold 500 barrels of sugar yams last year at $5 a barrel," said Miss Leola Reid, who for the last four years has made a specialty of raising pure sugar yam potatoes and supplying the fashionable winter resorts of Georgia and Florida.

"The reason I began the work of raising such sweet potatoes was simply because I saw that there was a great demand for them. Every one who knows anything about sweet potatoes knows that the sugar yam is the most delicious of all the many varieties. They are not the most prolific, however, and for that reason farmers have almost given up growing them for market. They select some variety that gives them the greatest yield and which they know from the average purchaser will meet with as ready sale. I am fond of the sugar yam, and when I began to notice that the hotels and boarding houses where northerners came for the winter were always asking for them I thought out my scheme and went to work.

"I selected five acres of good flat land, not bottoms, on my father's plantation and had no difficulty in getting it. I would not borrow, but spent all the money I had in bank, which was something less than $300, that year in the purchase of a mule and for the hire of a man. I must admit that I had to call on my father before the year was out for the loan of some corn and fodder to tide me over until my crop came in, but it was not much.

"When my potatoes were dug that first year, I found that my yield was 50 bushels of good eating potatoes to the acre. I had previously solicited orders from the hotels and received some on condition that the potatoes were as I represented them, the very best and pure sugar yams. When they were dug, I selected them, perhaps I should say sorted them, taking only those about the size of my fist"—Miss Reid wears about a No. 7 kid glove. "I had all the strings and ends taken off, then banked them in hills containing 25 bushels to the bank.

"About one month later, when the hotels began to fill up with their winter guests, I opened four of these banks, barreled the potatoes nicely and shipped them to the hotels where I had received the greatest encouragement. My price was $5 a barrel, and I claim that there are two bushels in a barrel, though there is in reality almost a half bushel more. At first every hotel keeper 'kicked' at the price and said it was exorbitant, as potatoes, the average varieties, were selling in the market at 50 cents a bushel.

"I asked them to give mine a trial and let their guests decide. They did so, and as a result I sold all my crop before the winter was well begun and had received as many orders for the next season as I would take."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Cautious.

Many years ago, when printed music was dearer than it is now, a plain, quiet man, evidently from the country, went into a London music shop and asked to see a certain book of tunes. The clerk laid before him an oblong volume with two tunes on a page, a book familiar to old time choir singers.

The old man drew out of his coattail pocket an ancient yellow fife and, opening the book at the first page, began to play softly, turning the leaf with careful fingers as each page was finished.

The clerks, very much amused at first, grew weary of the droning noise after a time, and one of them, waiting till a tune was ended, ventured to say politely:

"Do you think you will take the book, sir? Does it seem to suit you?"

The fife was lowered, and the player, looking over it at the youth in mild surprise, said gently:

"I cannot tell. I have played only half the tunes," and placidly turned another leaf.

Too Refined.

"No," said Farmer Meddergrass, "that Boston feller that comes here to run the paper doesn't seem to get along very well. Our folks ain't much for style, an when he referred to a skin game as 'an epidermal pastime' they thought he was becomin a little too highfalutin."—Baltimore American.

Christmas of Rich and Poor.

"We have an idea that Christmases as they are celebrated in homes of great wealth must be ideal," writes Edward Bok in a plea for a simpler life—a simpler celebration of Christmas—in The Ladies' Home Journal. "Yet often as an actual fact no more lonesome Christmas days are spent anywhere than in those homes of plenty. Riches on Christmas are often the sweet bells out of tune. Nothing was simpler than the first Christmas day, and its strongest appeal to our natures, although we do not always know it, is because it was so simple. Nothing is so fatal to our deepest and truest enjoyment as the realization that we can have whatever we will simply for the wishing or asking. All value is lost then. It is a hard truth for those who have little to believe that the greatest happiness of life is with them: that it is not with those who have abundance. The more we have the less we actually enjoy it. There is a law of compensation that comes in there. The lives of those who have abundance are vastly more complicated than are the lives of those who have little. We are wont to say, 'Oh, well, I'd like to try once having all the money I wanted.' Thousands have said the same thing only to have their wish come true and to realize that happiness lay not along the way they thought. It is strange how the poor envy the rich and then to see how the rich envy the greater and fuller happiness of those who have less. The woman of simplest means is the happiest woman on earth if she only knew it. She is happiest because her life is simplest and therefore truest."

Silk Stockings.

The girl who never wore silk stockings wears them this season. It is in the air—a statement less improper than it sounds. Women have suddenly developed a mania for fancy and beautiful hosiery, and the stocking counter of a good shop would make a rainbow feel faded. The openwork stockings have reached a point of flimsiness that is more marvelous than beautiful, and the most modish women prefer fine silk in solid color, hand embroidered or with inset lace or applique over the ankle.

One woman at Newport has started a fad for plain silk stockings in one solid color and with the owner's monogram exquisitely embroidered on the ankle, and stocking embroidery is becoming a favorite fancy work of the summer girl.

It is prophesied, too, that next Christmas, instead of a deluge of embroidered suspenders and dress shirt protectors, men will receive dainty boxes of silk hose, each pair embroidered at the tops in front with elaborate monograms. Of course the men would rather, far rather, have bright purple hose zigzagged with scarlet lightning, but they will have to endure the affliction the best they can.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Real Business Woman.

Miss Balfour, the sister of Arthur J. Balfour, government leader in the house of commons, is noted for her devotion to her brother's interests, and she manages most of his affairs so as to leave him entirely free for his political work, says the Detroit Free Press. She not alone superintends the household in the conventional way, but looks after outside details which are usually left to the supervision and direction of the master of the house. Mr. Balfour is never bothered when the chimney needs attention, the roof retiling or any matter of this kind. Miss Balfour attends to defects and gives the orders herself. She also buys the horses and carriages and is said to be well qualified for the work and a good judge of both horses and carriages. Recently she had a special brougham made for her brother's use, attending to the details herself. As an instance of her care and interest, it is said that if there is a possibility of her brother needing a conveyance and she desires to take a drive the best carriage and the first coachman will be left for Mr. Balfour, and she will take the second carriage and second coachman.

The Marshall Chronicle says that a man dropped dead while shoveling snow and concluded by saying that if certain men it could mention in Marshall should be discovered shoveling the snow from their walks other people would drop dead. The same condition prevails in Tecumseh.

The state is likely to be an immediate gainer by Tuesday's decision of the supreme court, sustaining the constitutionality of the inheritance law. A number of the county treasurers of the state have been for some time holding up money collected under this law awaiting the determination of its validity.

Mrs. Wm Doke is quite seriously ill. Tuesday she felt a tingling sensation in her head and in a few minutes the blood began to rush out of her mouth and nose A doctor was called and it was found that one of the blood vessels in her head had burst. Although still very weak she is reported a little better.

Mesdames Cook and Chet Haynes, Miss Rose Chaloner were over from Adrian to organize a lodge of the Rathbone Sisters. Twenty-seven have applied for membership Mrs D. H. C. Bowen was elected chairman of a committee on arrangements. Another meeting takes place this evening to complete the arrangements.

There is no store in town which shows greater improvement in appearance in the past few years than the clothing and shoe departments at Alva Spayde's Mr. Spayde removed from the Mill block to his present headquarters several years ago and his location is particularly adapted to showing off the beautiful plants and flowers with which Mr. Henderson always keeps the windows filled. Mr. Henderson has charge of the shoe department and is fully as well qualified to sell and display foot wear as he is to arrange the plants. Mr. Spayde, George VanTyne and El. Nisley attend to the clothing department and Miss Bessie Spayde keeps the books. The clothing department window shows a new and varying display of up-to-date neckwear and gentleman's furnishing goods, where one can always select with perfect safety a new tie or pair of hose for the most fastidious man on earth and make no mistakes.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleo Hall were initiated into the order of the Eastern Star last evening.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Maus and Ralph Bidwell go to Holloway tonight to play at an entertainment.

Mr. and Mrs Chas Harrison and children were guests of Mr. and Mrs Thos McCann yesterday.

To day the Central house was opened by Mr. Coon, of Detroit, who purchased the property of J. H. Brown.

The entire Orr family, Mr. and Mrs John Orr, Ralph and the two younger children have been enjoying(?) the grip this week.

Mrs. Maria Gamble.

The funeral of Mrs Maria Gamble took place Wednesday at one o'clock from the family residence, southwest of town, and was largely attended by relatives and friends. Rev M. T. Seelye, pastor of the Methodist church, was the officiating clergyman and at the close of his effective remarks, the cortege wended its way to Brookside cemetery where the remains were laid in their last resting place beside the husband whose spirit had preceded hers to the Home Above but a little over a year.

Maria Gray was born in Raisin township in 1837, and spent all her life within a mile of her birthplace, excepting a few years residence in this village where she and her husband lived while educating their youngest son and daughter.

In 1859 she was married to Frederick Gamble. To them five children were born, three of whom are now living, Dr. Ernest Gamble, of Coldwater, Albert and Miss Edith, who live at home

Mrs Gamble was one of Lenawee's pioneers, was a member of the Tecumseh M E church ever since she was a girl and died in the faith which had long been her solace and comfort. For nearly 20 years she was a faithful teacher of the infant class of the church. A very large circle of friends mourn the death of one of the best of women.

Mrs Gamble leaves beside her immediate family, one own sister, Mrs. Milton Ross, of Addison; her stepmother, Mrs Sarah Gray, of Raisin, a half sister, Mrs. Robert Quackbush, of Tecumseh; and two half-brothers, Willard and John Gray, both of Raisin.

THE CHURCHES.

Usual service at the Friends' church Sunday.

Rev. W. C. Burns will preach Sunday morning at the Baptist church.

Over 60 have joined the Adrian M. E. church on probation since last October.

Quarantine is off the Valley Seminary and the usual quarterly meeting will be held at the Valley church Saturday and Sunday.

The subject of the sermon next Sunday afternoon at Universalist church, will be "The Great Lesson to be Gained from the Life of Queen Victoria and England's Bereavement." Everybody welcome.

Morning subject at the Presbyterian church next Sunday will be "Living to God in Small Things." The pastor will preach a 10 minute sermon to the children on "Boys and Girls Playing." THE SCHOOLS.

Miss Pulver and a friend called on the 7th grade room Tuesday.

Several rooms will celebrate Washington's birthday on February 21st

The physics class are being provided with some new electrical apparatus.

The class in chemistry is investigating the mysteries of the pottassium family.

A portrait of Washington adorns the wall of the North Branch school and one of Mendelssohn has found a place in the 8th grade room.

The grip, coughs and colds cause many vacant seats in all the rooms. In Miss Gamble's and Miss Cotton's rooms 14 were absent from each yesterday and in Miss Hartback's room, Louis McClure Floy Freeman, Isabelle Case and Ernestine Anderson have been absent all the week.

Stereoptican Entertainment.

The ladies of the Monday Club will give a stereoptican entertainment at the Universalist church on Friday evening, Feb. 15. The views will illustrate London, Scotland and a few points in Italy. The audience room of the Universalist church is small and all who desire to attend will do well to secure tickets as soon as they are put on sale.

Wedding Anniversary.

Miss Katherine Anderson made the discovery that Mr. and Mrs. P. W. A Fitzsimmons had been married five years Wednesday evening and she, assisted by a few friends, tendered to the couple a little wooden wedding at her home. The guests brought everything in the line of "wooden" furniture and, together with refreshments and fun of the gifts, a most delightful evening was enjoyed.

Card of Thanks.

Again we regret our inability to express our sincerely tender feelings toward the truly kind neighbors and friends of DeWitt, who so willingly aided in our recent sorrow and misfortune. To his musical companions, and all who placed even the smallest flower at his casket; please accept an outpouring of heartfelt gratitude.

RAILROAD NEWS.

The master mechanic of the Cincinnati Northern railroad at Van Wert announces that the Clover Leaf will place six of its locomotives in the Van Wert shops to be reconstructed. New fire boxes will be placed in the engines and they will be generally rebuilt. Although the shops of the Northern are well crowded with work, it is thought that the work will be undertaken. A force of about 30 extra men will be required.

Toledo Bee: The Lake Shore railroad will remove its Cleveland shops to Collingwood, where new buildings will be constructed at a cost of a million dollars. About 700 men will be required at the new shops, and some talk is heard of changing Buffalo, Elkhart and Englewood shops of the Lake Shore to Collinwood.

F. D. Gibbings has been appointed traveling freight and passenger agent for the Detroit & Lima Northern, succeeding W. O. Hunt. His headquarters will be at Detroit.

"Quo Vadis" at Adrian February 5.

It has been decided that there will be no advance in the prices for Whitney & Knowles' production of "Quo Vadis" which is to be seen at the Croswell in Adrian next Tuesday. The company that will present this fine play is practically the one that made such a success of the play in New York last season.

It strongly appeals to the religiously inclined as well as to the average theatergoer. A special train will no doubt go from here to the big production.

Cure For Insomnia.

I suppose all of us are suffering from the invasion of electricity. My old friend Bounce, who was a victim of insomnia for 40 years, thinks he sleeps now better than any other man on earth. He lost his way in the Adirondacks and staid overnight in the cabin of a forester. His sleep was the deep sleep of a just man made perfect, and in the morning he found that he had not moved half an inch all night.

"It's the insulation," the forester insisted. "You city folks are killin yourselves with contact. If you'll break the contact you'll be able to sleep and get your nerves back."

This matter of "contact" was finally explained to mean that our bedposts are in contact with the floors, the floors with the walls and the walls with mother earth, so that whatever personal magnetism a man has in him goes away in the nighttime, leaving him like a log on his mattress. The forester had obtained four glass insulators from telegraph poles somewhere and screwed them on the posts of his guest bed, so that the electricity could not run away. Bounce the very day he got home insulated his bed, and from that moment to the present his insomnia has been banished.—New York Press.

Architectural Oddities.

At Frankfort-on-the-Main there is one street in which two houses on opposite sides of the street lean over so far that their roofs meet over the street. In one of these houses Lord Rothschild was born. In Paris, on the other hand, it is noticeable that the builders intentionally construct the houses so that they lean backward slightly to add to their stability. But almost in the center of Paris there is one big stone building which leans out fully 3½ feet over the sidewalk. So solid, however, are the Paris buildings that this one is claimed to be safe.—Pearson's Weekly.

Vibration.

"Vibration is the great bugbear of this business," said one of the best informed stationary engineers in New Orleans. "It is governed by fixed laws, of course, but they are so subtle and intricate that it is next to impossible to master them. They have a most important bearing, however, on the life of machinery. I have known valuable engines to jar themselves literally to pieces for no apparent cause. Some slight error in adjustment had set up a vibration that was communicated from part to part, like a contagious disease, until the whole plant was affected.

"A steady tremor of that kind will not only wear out the parts, but it causes what we call 'structural changes' in the metal itself. Wrought steel will gradually lose its toughness and elasticity and become as brittle as cast iron. When it is fractured, the interior will have a strange, granulated appearance, and the worst of it is that the alteration may be going on for months without the knowledge of the most careful engineer alive. That is the secret of the breaking of a great many propeller shafts at sea.

"There are different ways of stopping vibrations, and one of the most curious is to set up a counter tremor in the opposite direction. One neutralizes the other."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Among the Advantages.

A pretty, highborn girl engaged herself to a young tradesman and never wavered in her determination to marry him despite the gloomy forecasts of her friends, who predicted lifelong misery for her.

"My child, do be advised," urged one of these well meaning ladies, calling to see the radiant bride on the very eve of the wedding. "I am an older woman than you and have seen more of the world, and it always makes me sad to hear of a nice girl marrying beneath her station. It is social suicide."

"Then from a social standpoint consider me dead," smiled the light hearted girl, "for I shall certainly marry Tom tomorrow. We reckoned up the situation long ago and found a whole host of advantages, but not a solitary thing could we discover to place on the disadvantage side."

"Then you couldn't have searched very far, my dear," said her counselor icily. "Take my own case. Much as I love you, I shall be unable to visit you when you are married. Have you bargained for that?"

The bride blushed.

"Oh, yes, indeed," she answered hastily. "We put that down first of all."—London Telegraph.

Charmed the Beast.

"Look at this handkerchief," said a young society man to his professional friend who has an office in the Porter building. "That bit of lace and ruffle is worth its weight in gold to me."

"Some connection with old associations—a mere sentiment, I suppose," suggested the professional man.

"Nothing of the kind. From a practical standpoint it is just as valuable as I describe it to be. A sentiment enters into the case, however."

"Well, tell us about it."

"The handkerchief, then, is the token by which I am permitted to enter the house where my sweetheart lives. Without it I should be torn to pieces by a huge bulldog there. The beast is as ferocious as a tiger. During the day he is kept in chains, but after 7 o'clock in the evening his mistress releases him in the yard. No stranger after that hour can enter the gate. The terrible animal was a menace to my suit until the lady hit upon the plan of giving me her handkerchief for use as a pass. Now when the dog rushes toward me I have only to toss the dainty token to him. He smells it and walks peacefully back to his kennel. Do you blame me for valuing it so highly?"—Memphis Scimitar.

A Great Bawl.

Walter Damrosch once related an amusing experience that befell him in Orange. The musical director took upon himself the task of training a chorus in that burg. They were studying Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and had reached the chorus.

"Hear us, Baal; hear us, mighty god!" the male voices were booming out sonorously, when Damrosch cried out, as is his wont: "No, no! Not that way. Not that dreadful howl! Don't say 'B-a-a-l.' Soften a little. Give a more musical sound to the words. Say 'Bawl.'"

"Whereupon," he says, "the Orangeites took up the strain again:

"'Hear us Bawl! Hear us Bawl! Hear us, mighty god!'

"They quickly realized the peculiar fitness of the sentiment and broke down in laughter."

The Happy Ass.

The chief beauty of the following poem is that it is both rhyme and blank verse—rhyme according to the spelling and blank verse according to the pronunciation:

Through twilight's gold I heard the wild ass bray
His love song, which resounded o'er the quay,
While he, well knowing that for joy he should
Cavort in glee, kicked up the mossy mould,
And with the energy of lusty youth
Once more let off his everlasting mouth,
Which set on edge two polka dotted calves
Until they, too, oped wide their safety valves
And fled like me, and I flew like the wolf
Or e'en the hit ball in the game of golf.

—R. K. Munkittrick in Smart Set.

The Cost of Cutting an Old Atlas.

In the state department at Washington is the most comprehensive and complete set of atlases and maps to be found anywhere in this country. As can be readily appreciated, they are vitally necessary to the carrying on of the department, and therefore neither trouble nor expense is spared in keeping them constantly up to date. It would be supposed that their extreme value and importance would be patent to every one.

Some years ago, however, one of the most valuable atlases was found with two of the maps cut out. The maps had not been abstracted. They had simply been detached from the binding. Investigation proved the mutilation to be the work of a certain clerk, who on being hauled up by his superior explained why he had done it as follows:

"Those books are terribly heavy and hard to handle, and so I cut the maps out in order to get at them easier. The atlases were very old, and I didn't suppose they were of any value or that any one would care."

To the state department an atlas is like a bottle of wine to a judge of fine drinks—its value increases in direct ratio with its age. It was felt in the department that that particular clerk had mistaken his calling in life, and to him was accordingly given an opportunity to pursue another one.—New York Tribune.

How Niagara Wears the Rock.

All who have been to Niagara know that the cataract is divided by Goat Island, the larger portion of the fall being on the Canadian side of the river. This part is known as the Horseshoe fall and was so named because years ago it was identical with a horseshoe in shape. A few years ago a V shaped break occurred toward the New York side, and since then other changes have taken place, until today the Horseshoe fall is more like its original form, but clearly shows the effects of the wearing of the waters.

Many people fail to see how the falls wear the rock away, and this is a little mystery until the exact conditions are realized. The ledge of rock over which the water of both the American and Horseshoe falls flow is of hard limestone. It is all of 60 feet thick and naturally very heavy. Underneath this ledge of limestone there are the shales of the Niagara locality. This soft rock is many feet thick. The rock of the Horseshoe fall is unprotected, and as the water falls over the precipice and boils in the river below it washes away the soft shale beneath the limestone, so that the limestone is left in shelflike form, projecting far out into the gorge. Observant visitors to the falls have no doubt noticed this condition.

In the course of time the shale foundation of the limestone ledge is excavated to such a point that the unsupported ledge breaks away by its own weight, and the crest line of the Horseshoe fall recedes so much farther. Then the water attacks the newly exposed shale, and in time the process outlined is repeated. This has been going on for centuries, and it will continue until the falls of Niagara are no more.—Philadelphia Record.

The Preacher Was Glad She Swore.

The daughter of a well known clergyman in Washington had a severe attack of scarlet fever when she was 3 years old which resulted in deafness. Up to that time she had been a regular little chatterbox, doing her infantile best to carry out the proverbial:

Being a woman, she'll talk forever!

Upon her recovery her parents were nearly heartbroken to find that she had not only lost her hearing, but the power of speech as well. Whether she had really forgotten how to talk or whether it was obstinacy or lack of confidence they could not determine, but despite all efforts of the best tutors the child remained a mute.

One day when she was nearly 10 years of age she was playing with a cat, and with as much cruelty as though she were of the sterner sex she used its tail as a handle with which to pick it up. The poor animal, not appreciating the economic use of the aforesaid tail, inflicted a deep scratch across the chubby little hand.

"Damn that cat!" she said, flinging it down.

And her father, devout clergyman as he was, clasped his hands and, raising his eyes to heaven, exclaimed:

"Thank God, that child has spoken at last!"—Detroit Free Press.

The House That Tresham Built.

One of the curiosities of architecture in England is, according to The Stone Trades Journal, the house erected about 300 years ago at Rushton, in Northamptonshire, by Sir Thomas Tresham, a Roman Catholic, who wished by his design to typify the Trinity.

The house is all threes, has three sides, three stories and three windows on each flat, each of them in the shape of the trefoil—the three leaved shamrock. Where the roofs meet rises a three sided pyramid, terminating in a large trefoil. The smoke escapes from this chimney by three round holes on each side of the three sides. The building is almost covered with mottoes and carvings, three Latin inscriptions, one on each of the three sides, having 33 letters in each. Three angles on each side bear shields. Over the door is the text from the Vulgate, "There are three that bear record." Inside the house each corner is cut off from each of the three main rooms, so that on every floor there are three three sided apartments.

Cure all kidney ills.

W. S. Kilmer, passenger engineer on the M. C. Ry. residing at 214 Orange St. Jackson, Mich., says: "In 1895 I had considerable trouble with my kidneys from the result of a severe cold which settled there and though I tried every means at hand and treated with doctors the pains through the small of my back became more persistent and severe. To add to my troubles the kidney secretions were unnatural and irregular. At last I was obliged to lay off work. When at home, getting no better under the treatment I was then taking, some one advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills and I procured a box more out of curiosity than from any expectation that they might help me. Now I want this thoroughly understood, when I finished the box I went back to work without a pain or an ache. But to make matters doubly certain I took a second box. Since that time, and that is three years ago, I have neither had an ache nor a pain. Is it any wonder that at this date, 1898, I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills."

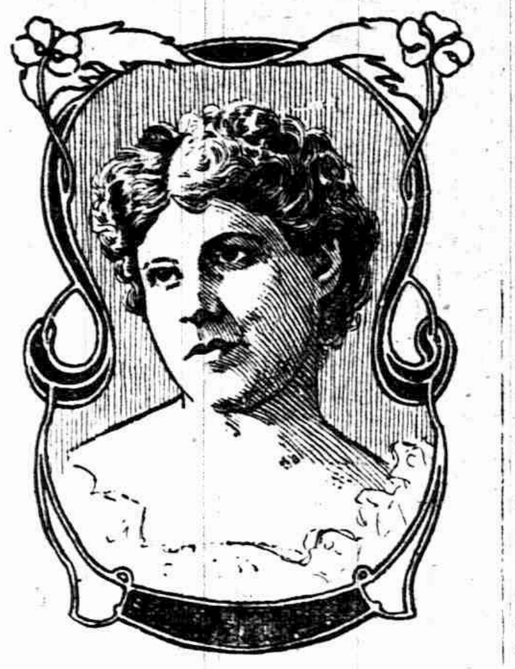
WOMAN'S WORLD.

THE TALENTED DAUGHTER AND ASSISTANT OF A FAMOUS SCHOLAR.

Small Industries For Women—Women at the Polls—Barrie's Strange Theory—Poems In Silk—The Very Latest In Note Papers.

Miss Rosamond Rodkinson is assisting her father to give to the world the first complete translation of the Babylonian Talmud ever prepared. For the last five years she has been traveling in every part of the United States, bringing the attention of Jewish communities everywhere to this great work, and interesting her coreligionists as well as prominent churchmen of other denominations in the significance and value of its contents.

Dr. Michael L. Rodkinson, who came to America with his family from Vienna ten years ago, has been laboring at his translation for over 40 years, giving up practically his whole life to it. The original work of 63 large volumes has been reduced to 25 by condensation and a more compact system of treating the wonderful range of subjects dealt with. Dr. Rodkinson's task has been made doubly hard because he is not a good English student, and a great deal of the labor of turning this translation into literary English has fallen on his daughter, who is probably the only woman living who has a thorough knowledge of the Talmud.



MISS ROSAMOND RODKINSON.

Miss Rodkinson, who is only 24 years old, was born in Vienna. "I have lived in the atmosphere of the Talmud ever since I was a baby," she said recently, "and my father, years before I was born, was looked on as the most prominent living exponent of the work. I am in love with my present duties, and I feel that in bringing people in touch with my father's achievement I am opening up to them a mine of knowledge that for sound sense, wide range of matters dealt with and the laws of health, social intercourse and jurisprudence that it lays down has no equal in the world. Its precepts are as valuable today as when they were compiled."

A Tinker's Dam.

There is no profanity in saying that any certain thing "is not worth a tinker's dam," although it is so considered by many. The expression originated many years ago, when tinkering, or mending, leaky vessels was much cruder than it is now.

In former times the use of rosin to check the flow of solder when placed on tin was not generally understood, at least by the roving tinkers. When one of these gentlemen of the road found a job, such as mending a wash boiler or other tin household utensil, he would get from the housewife or domestic a piece of soft dough. With this he would build a dam around the place where he intended to put his solder. Inside of the circle thus formed he poured the melted lead. When the metal had cooled, he would brush away the dam of dough that had confined it to the desired limits. The heat had hardened the heavy paste and baked it thoroughly, so that it was absolutely of no use for anything else. It became one of the most useless things in the world, and there was not enough of it even to be worth while carrying to the pigs.

Hence the expression, which was originally intended to convey a certain idea, appears to have been retained, while the origin is not generally known.

Something very similar to the telephone was used in China 1,000 years ago.

Pity and Beauty

The most beautiful thing in the world is the baby, all dimples and joy. The most pitiful thing is that same baby, thin and in pain. And the mother does not know that a little fat makes all the difference.

Dimples and joy have gone, and left hollows and fear; the fat, that was comfort and color and curve--all but pity and love--is gone.

The little one gets no fat from her food. There is something wrong; it is either her food or food-mill. She has had no fat for weeks; is living on what she had stored in that plump little body of hers; and that is gone. She is starving for fat; it is death, be quick!

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is the fat she can take; it will save her.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.
If you have not tried it, send for free sample; its agreeable taste will surprise you.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

How a Thunderstorm Forms.

The formation of a thunderstorm is one of the familiar things that few of us know anything about. That sounds like a contradiction, but it is not, for while we are familiar enough with the impressive spectacle made by the clouds as they gather and with the sometimes disastrous and always startling effects of the storm when it breaks over us, how many of us can trace it back to its origin, step by step, and tell how and where it got its terrible power?

Let us try to do this. There is no doubt that the electric charge of a cloud comes from an initial charge multiplied by induction. The initial charge may be acquired by evaporation, for we know that electricity may be generated in that way, or it may be generated by the friction of vapor laden air, which, moving as wind, comes in contact with objects on the earth's surface.

This vapor is composed of very minute particles of water, each of which becomes electrified, the charge accumulating on its surface. Now, as these particles or drops come together and are condensed into larger drops the surface area is reduced in proportion to the volume, and an increased electric accumulation is the result. In other words, when two drops are condensed into one there is the same quantity of water and of electricity as when the drops were separate, but there is a good deal less surface, and the electric charge is intensified to that extent.

The drops so formed attract smaller drops by their greater power, and thus condensation, with continual increase of power, goes on rapidly, and a thundercloud begins to form. As the cloud is sent forward by the wind it affects the earth's surface by induction, and the earth's surface affects it in the same way, the cloud becoming positively and the earth negatively charged. This goes on rapidly, electric energy being continually drawn to the cloud from the air and the same quantity being repelled from the earth below. Thus it is that the thundercloud forms so quickly and acquires so great an electric power.

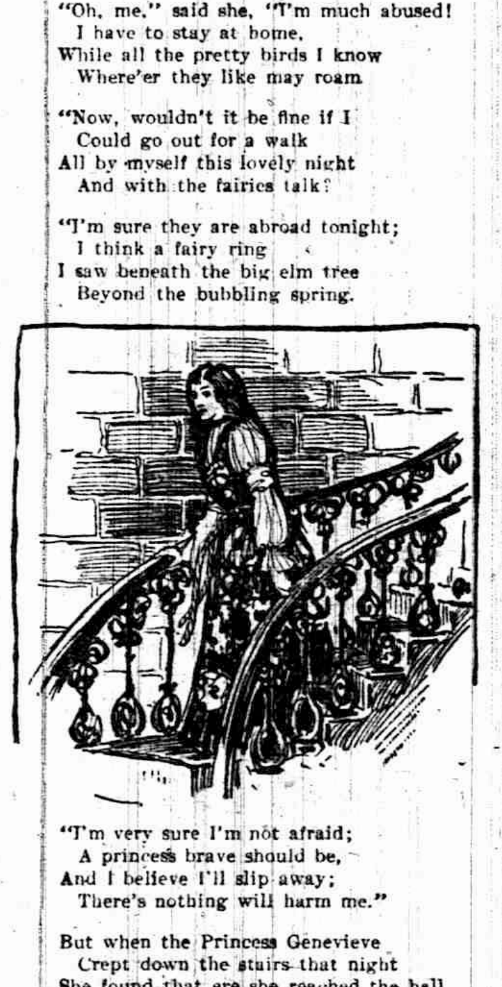
She Changed Her Mind.

The little Princess Genevieve
Up in her tower so high,
Looked out upon the moonlit sward
And heaved a tiny sigh.

"Oh, me," said she, "I'm much abused!
I have to stay at home,
While all the pretty birds I know
Where'er they like may roam

"Now, wouldn't it be fine if I
Could go out for a walk
All by myself this lovely night
And with the fairies talk?

"I'm sure they are abroad tonight;
I think a fairy ring
I saw beneath the big elm tree
Beyond the bubbling spring.



"I'm very sure I'm not afraid;
A princess brave should be,
And I believe I'll slip away;
There's nothing will harm me."

But when the Princess Genevieve
Crept down the stairs that night
She found that ere she reached the hall
She trembled in affright.

And when she reached the bottom stair
A bug lit on her head;
Then back she rushed up to her room
And cuddled up in bed.

"I think," she said, when she could talk,
"That here I'd better stay;
I quite forgot the birds I know
Fly only through the day."

A Small Boy's Letter.

Here is a brief extract from a letter written to a friend in Kansas by one of the small sons of Mr. Jewesbury, who was among the besieged in the Peking legation:

"I and mama and Donald have lost their bicycles because the Boxers have burned our bicycles.

"We are having a very nice time in Peking. Are you well? We brought five of our reading books, but our other books are burned up. We are trying and trying as hard as we can to save our lives. We have to put some sandbags at the windows so that the Boxers can't shoot us. We are trying as hard as we can to take that big cannon away from the Boxers, but we cannot get the cannon away. We have had a bullet hit our house. We eat rice three times a day. We cannot have all the butter we want. We have 39 people.

"The bullets have stopped."

Whipping Boys by Machinery.

No matter what you may think your school troubles are, at least you are not whipped by machinery, as unruly pupils are in the Scotch town of Airdrie. The machine so far works to a charm and can turn out more well whipped boys in an hour than an ordinary person could attend to in a day. Four strokes are considered a good punishment, but those who have been thus "birched" say that the length of time between strokes is equal in anticipation to double that number of hits.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Rock-a-Bye Baby

These are sweet words, but how much pain and suffering they used to mean. It's different now. Since Mother's Friend has become known expectant mothers have been spared much of the anguish of childbirth. Mother's Friend is a liniment to be applied externally. It is rubbed thoroughly into the muscles of the abdomen. It gives elasticity and strength, and when the final great strain comes they respond quickly and easily without pain. Mother's Friend is never taken internally. Internal remedies at this time do more harm than good. If a woman is supplied with this splendid liniment she need never fear rising or swelling breasts, morning sickness, or any of the discomforts which usually accompany pregnancy.

The proprietor of a large hotel in Tampa, Fla., writes: "My wife had an awful time with her first child. During her second pregnancy, Mother's Friend was used and the baby was born easily before the doctor arrived. It's certainly great."

PURE BLOOD

Necessary to Life.
Vinol Makes it.

POOR BLOOD CAUSES ERUPTIONS AND WEAKNESS.

Vinol Makes Pure, Rich, Red Blood.

BECAUSE WE KNOWN THIS WE GUARANTEE ITS ACTION.

Impoverished blood is a sure sign of internal disorders. We see every day too many people whose faces plainly show that there is something radically wrong.

We want all of our fellow-citizens to know of our splendid blood purifier and blood maker.

We refer to Vinol.

Vinol, as we have before stated, is a purely scientific preparation.

Vinol owes its virtue to the fact that it contains in a highly concentraced state the active curative principles, taken from the livers of live cods—the same elements that formerly were found in cod-liver oil, and which made it famous.

Vinol does not contain the grease or fat that characterized cod-liver oil and made it in many cases worthless.

Vinol acts upon every one of the great vital organs, and by invigorating and giving them strength, enables them to properly perform their functions.

Vinol's effect on the stomach is marvelous. It tones up this, the greatest of the organs of the body, and enables it to obtain from the food which is taken into it the necessary elements to create flesh and muscle tissue, bone structure and pure, rich, red blood.

We are in receipt of a letter from a Savation Army woman which reads as follows:

"I took Vinol after a bad attack of grippe, and so much good did it do me that I persuaded my sister to take it. She was all tired out. Had no appetite and her blood was very poor. It did her as much good as it did me."—BETSY HABERSHAW, 718 River St., Fall River, Mass.

Won't you please come in and see us? We are always glad to extol the merits of Vinol.

We will give you back your money if you don't find Vinol will do all we claim it will. Could any one do more for you?

IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE

All Holland Rejoices in the Marriage of its Young Queen

A VERY HANDSOME WEDDING

A Sweet and Happy Bride and Awkward Groom United With a Simple Service—The Populace Like Happy Children.

The Hague, Feb. 8.—Queen Wilhelmina's marriage to Duke Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who Thursday became Prince Heinrich of The Netherlands, was a huge famny affair. All Holland that could, came to The Hague to participate. Those who stayed at their homes in other cities and villages of the kingdom celebrated with parades, decorations and banquets.

Never was seen a more beautiful and happy wedding. The popular belief is that it is a love match, like that of Victoria and Aıoert, and this gives a romantic coloring to the event which is generally lacking in royal marriages.

The ceremonies were the same simple and unritualistic rites of the Reformed church by which the humblest of Queen Wilhelmina's subjects are married. The whole spirit of the affair was plain and democratic, although the costly gowns and jewels and the showy uniforms of distinguished personages, high officials of the kingdom, the army and navy and representatives of tne people in parliament and the municipalities, furnished a regal stage setting. The venerable pastor administered to the bride and groom a caution that their high positions would not shield them from the common sufferings and sorrows of humanity.

Queen Wilhelmina made a very winning and human bride. She blushed and became confused over the ceremonial with the ring, as all brides are supposed to do; while her happiness and pride over the enthusiasm of her people were plainly deeper than a mere matter of form.

Prince Heinrich was an awkward but stalwart and manly figure. Either he was forgetful or badly trained in the part, for the pastor had to give him two or three hints as to how to carry himself. Those sitting near enough to hear the responses describe him as saying Jah, mein herr," when he should simply have replied "Jah."

The scene, as the royal couple stood with clasped hands before the chaplain in a circle of brilliantly arrayed personages, including their relatives and people composing the highest families of Holland and the neighboring German principalities, was wonderfully gorgeous, the masses of variegated coloring rendering more effective the blue, gold and white banked up against the walls of the church. The building itself is a cathedral in size, but is as plain as a Quaker meeting house in its furnishings.

At night the populace is like a multitude of happy children. Thousands are swarming through the principal streets, which are nearly impassable, blowing horns, singing the national hymn, following the bands and smashing nats and lanterns. Aged housewives, witn their husbanas from the provinces, are joining hands with stylish city folk and dancing to the music of street organs. There is considerable mild hilarity inspired by wine, but no offensive drunkenness. Sailors, fishermen and farmers wear their usual quaint costumes, and a few soldiers are mixing with the crowds.

There was a turning in the evening from every direction toward the Nalleveld entrance to the Bosch, where a display of ıreworks was in progress. On all the principal streets are illuminated portraits of the queen, Prince Heinrich, the queen dowager and Duchess Maria, as well as tne national arms.

A noteworthy feature of the holiday season was the entire absence of extortion on the part of hotels and shopkeepers, and tne warm-hearted hospitality with which all strangers were received was equally observable. The Dutch journalists rented the former Austrian legation, one of the handsomest houses in the city, and made it a club for foreign correspondents, who have been the recipients of universal kindness.

Complimented Canada.

London, Feb. 8.—Lord Rosebery, speaking to a resolution of regret that the Linlithgow county council, in reviewing the growth of the British empire during tne late queen's reign, alluded to Canada, when she came to the throne as a colony in rebellion, said the experience of the past two years had shown Canada, so far from being in rebellion, was a part of the empire which competed keenly with the other parts in showing zealous and enthusiastic loyalty to the throne. She found it a disrupted colony and she left it a great federated dominion.

May Save the Ship.

Washington, Feb. 8.—Quartermaster General Lurington Thursday said that his latest information in regard to the transport McPherson, aground off Matanzas, is that the sea has subsided and there is a fair prospect of saving the ship. Several tugs have been sent to her assistance and if they cannot draw her into deep water a contract will be made with the merritt Wrecking Co. to save the ship, if possible.

A Collision With Strikers.

Hazebrouck, France, Feb. 8.—Many gendarmes were wounded while attempting to disperse strikers at Merville, 22 miles west of Lille. The strikers were demonstrating on the streets, throwing stones at the city hall and breaking the windows in shops and other buildings. The principal thoroughfares are now patrolled.

Explanation Called For.

Alfred (whose sporting opportunities have been limited by parental decree)—Papa, what does it mean by base on balls?

Papa (who is reading an account of the latest heavyweight fight)—Alfred, you could better employ yourself with your Sunday school lesson. I'm too busy now to explain.

Alfred (still thirsting for knowledge)—Did it mean the same as base on balls when you telephoned last night that as mamma was away you were going out on a bat?

Mamma (who is always listening)—Benjamin Ridgely, you will take time right now to make two explanations, with the most important one coming to me.—Denver News.

BURSTING STEAM PIPE

Causes the Deaths of Five of the Crew of Steamer Ventura.

San Francisco, Feb. 8.—The new steamer Ventura, which arrived here Thursday from Philadelphia, brings news of the scalding to death of five of her crew and the injury of five others as the result of the bursting of one of her steam pipes on the voyage.

The accident occurred Jan. 23, four days after the Ventura left the Straits of Magellan. At 6:15 p. m. that day the steamer was in latitude 30.58 south, longitude 87.42 west. While Engineer Robb, Fireman Desmond, Seaman Farren and Paul Beir, a coal cheerful at the prospect of work. They room the main steam pipe in the port boiler burst. Instantly the engine room was filled with scalding steam. The four men could not escape, and to their cries of agony were added those of Felix Glass, a seamon, who was caught in a small compartment near the boilers.

When the other members of the crew were able to reach the men they found them literally cooked to death. The five bodies were buried at sea. The accident delayed the Ventura, as she was forced to make port with one boiler. Even with that delay and another in Possession Bay, where she anchored on the night of Jan. 18, the vessel made the run from Philadelphia in 38 days and 23 hours. The actual steaming time was 38 days 3 hours. She encountered gales and heavy seas in the Atlantic. The Ventura is a sister ship of the Sierra and Sonoma. She was scheduled to sail Feb. 13 for Honolulu and Australia, but will be delayed.

To Prohibit Campaign Contributions.

Washington, Feb. 8.—The senate committee on privileges and elections Thursday reported unanimously Senator Chandler's bill to prohibit corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, national banks or corporations organized under the authority of congress from contributing to political campaigns. An amendment was made making the maximum penalty for a corporation $5,000 and $1,000 for each officer, stockholder or employe. By a party vote the committee reported an amendment to the sundry civil bill appropriating $25,000 to enable the attorney-general to investigate alleged disfranchisements of voters in certain states.

Royal Wedding in Prospect.

Madrid, Feb. 8.—After the ministerial council at the royal palace Thursday Prince Carlos de Bourbon, who will wed tne princess of the Asturias, was proclaimed a son of Spain and took the constitutional oath before the queen regent, the minister of justice, the delegates and other functionaries. After tendering him her congratulations, the queen regent signed decrees naturalizing him, appointing him a major on the headquarters staff and conferring upon him the Order of the Golden Fleece. On the wedding day her majesty will bestow upon the prince the same rank and honors as belong to the princess.

Naval Construction Compared.

Berlin, Feb. 8.—The semi-official Berliner Post compares German with American naval activity. It asserts that Germany is building seven battle ships, three large cruisers and seven small cruisers, together with one gunboat, or a total of 18 warships, as compared with 39 in process of construction in the United States. It points out also that the new constructions in the United States for 1901 will amount to 140,000,000 marks, as against 77,000,000 marks for Germany. It strongly denies statements from Washington that Germany's naval increase will be completed in 1906.

Emigrants Sailed.

Ponce, Porto Rico, Feb. 8.—The New York & Porto Rico Steamship Co.'s steamer California, Capt. Dyer, sailed Wednesday night for New Orleans with 800 emigrants, well-dressed and cheerful at the prospect of work. They are abundantly provisioned. The local press and public applaud the excellent arrangements and sanitary conditions, which are exceptional. Gov. Allen and Secretary Hunt inspected the ship Sunday and proclaimed her to be in good condition. A physician accompanies tne party. Eight hundred more emigrants have been recruited and are awaiting a steamer.

Plague in India.

London, Feb. 8.—"Plague prevails in every part of India," says the Bombay correspondent of the Daily Express, "except the central provinces. It is particularly severe in Bengal, where there is a weekly mortality of 2,500. In Bombay the deaths reached 94 per cent. The scourge is intensified by a lack of an adequate medical staff, the doctors being chiefly occupied in famine districts."

Lost Her Match.

Loren P. Merrill of Paris tells the story of the particular old woman, and he makes her a resident of Livermore. She was not only old, but she was of the worrying, fretting species of antiquity. She had fretted away her friends and relatives until she was at length living alone in a small house in the outskirts of the town. Just as she was retiring one bitter cold night she discovered that but one unlighted match remained in the house. She lay awake until almost daylight, worrying and disturbing herself with wondering if the match was good. At last she got up and hunted up the match and struck it to see if it would light her kindlings in the morning.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

WRECK AND DEATH

A Train on the Erie Jumps the Track at Greenville, Pa.

FIVE WERE KILLED OUTRIGHT

And Many Others Badly Injured—Heart-Rending Scenes — Spreading Rails the Supposed Cause of the Accident.

Greenville, Pa., Feb. 8.—Train No. 5, the New York-Chicago limited on the Erie railroad, was wrecked Thursday morning within the town limits. Five passengers were dead when taken from the wreck, several are missing and there are many injured.

Hardly a passenger escaped without some injury. The ill-fated train was composed entirely of vestibuled Pullmans, three sleepers, a day coach, combination smoker and baggage car and a mail car and was drawn by one of the new Atlantic type of engines. It was in the smoking compartment that death laid a ruthless hand, for there was not one of the 16 occupants escaped without being killed or injured. This car was completely telescoped by the steel mail car ahead, which went through it as if it were paper, tearing, crushing, maiming and carrying death. The only wonder of the occupants is that they were not all killed outright.

The scene of the wreck is on a sharp curve. On one side, 40 feet below, flows the Shenango river, on the other is a steep bluff. The engine left the track at the curve and before it had gone two car lengths plowed into the steep hill, where it fell upon its side and was half buried. The train was running about two hours late, and the accident happened at 7:10, just about the time when the occupants of the sleepers had finished dressing. After the terrible crash the uninjured passengers set about the rescue of the dead and wounded, surgeons were summoned and within a few moments the dead and dying were being cared for as fast as they could be discovered beneath the wreckage. It was several hours, however, before the victims had been removed and placed in the two rear Pullmans.

The scenes inside the telescoped cars were terrible. Men begged to be released and screamed in agony. They were all heaped in a corner of the car, dumped there by the irresistible impetus of the mail car. The injured were placed on a special train and taken to the Spencer hospital, Meadville, about noon.

The train was in charge of Conductor Sim Randel, with Engineer Brett Luce and Fireman George Ecker. Both the engineer and fireman escaped by jumping, though both were painfully bruised.

Supt. Belknap and other officials were early on the ground. They are unable to assign a cause for the accident unless spreading rails can be blamed. A party of soldiers, nine in number, on their way from Ft. Porter, N. Y., to Ft. Crook, Neb., in charge of Sergeant Major Harry A. Hart, of New York, occupied a part of the smoker. Of the number three were killed and two seriously injured. They were under orders for the Philippines and would have sailed in a short time. The adjutant-general's office has directed that the bodies be prepared for shipment and held until the arrival of a commissioned officer from New York. The others in the party were Frederick J. Zoninguez, Brooklyn; Wm. H. Brozy, Lancaster, Pa.; Geo. L. Hart, Brooklyn; John H. Butler, Farmington, Del.; Miss S. A. Turle, of New York, was also on the train but was uninjured.

A remarkable act of fortitude was exhibited by B. A. Marsden, of Philadelphia, who, pinned in the smoker by a beam, his foot and chest crushed, his face spattered with the brains of one of the soldiers, insisted on the rescuers releasing an unfortunate Jew near by. Marsden's wounds are considered fatal.

As soon as the officials of the P., B. & L. E. railroad learned of the accident they sent 40 men from their shops here and they lent valuable aid before the Erie wrecking crew arrived. The track was blocked for 12 hours, the work of clearing the wreck proceeding slowly, as it is believed other bodies are still beneath the debris.

The Ashanti Rising.

London, Feb. 8.—Sir James Willcocks, who put down the Ashanti rising, says the work could not have been down by white troops, owing to the impenetrable forests, the bogs and the flooded rivers. Out of 3,400 native soldiers employed, 850 were killed or wounded and 55 out of 200 British officers were killed or wounded. The golden stool, the symbol of Ashanti royalty, will probably never be found, Sir James Willcocks thinks, as its hiding place is believed to be known to two natives only, who would destroy it rather than reveal its whereabouts.

Jules Verne Declined.

Paris, Feb. 8.—There are several vacancies in the French academy. M. Jules Verne, when approached with a suggestion that he should become a candidate, replied: "I have just completed my 73d year and do not at such an age aspire to the academy. Dumas, the younger, asked me 28 years ago. I declined and since then 59 academicians have died. They may be immortals, but they have not been rendered immortal." In closing M. Verne asks the proposer of his name to accept the gratitude of an old storyteller."

Bush Fires in Australia.

Melbourne, Feb. 8.—Destructive bush fires throughout the colony have done great damage to property and stock. The heat is excessive and there have been violent dust storms in and around Melbourne.

Peculiarities of X Rays.

There are many curious things about X rays which seem to puzzle even the scientists. Signor Briguiti, who has been making experiments with them at Rome, says that the visibility of a substance to the eye is no criterion of its visibility to the X rays. The rays cannot see through glass, which is transparent to the eye, whereas aluminium, which is opaque to the eye, is transparent to the X rays. The rays can see a splinter of glass in the hand, but not a splinter of wood. Most inks are transparent to the rays, including printer's ink, but some of them are opaque. The rays can see through a postoffice directory, but if a paper with words written on it be put in the middle of the directory the rays will reveal these words and nothing behind them.

THE PENSION BILL

Passed By the Senate—House Passed the Postoffice Bill.

Washington, Feb. 8.—The senate had both day and night sessions yesterday. At the day session the pension appropriation bill, appropriating $144,000,000, was passed after a few minutes' consideration. The ship subsidy bill was taen taken up and Messrs. McLaurin and Morgan, both democrats, made speeches upon it. Mr. McLaurin announced his intention to support the bill and Mr. Morgan opposed it in vigorous language. He asked Mr. Allison for an estimate of the appropriations for the present session and the latter replied that he thought the aggregate would be about $760,000,000. Mr. Hale expressed the opinion that the figures would be nearly $800,000,000.

A recess was taken at 5:30 until 8 p. m.

In the evening much difficulty was encountered in obtaining a quorum. After it had been obtained there was much speaking, but little progress with the bill was made. At 10:30 the senate, finding itself without a quorum, adjourned.

The postoffice appropriation bill, debate on which has consumed almost an entire week in the house, was passed Thursday. The debate hovered about three topics, railway mail pay, pneumatic tubes service and special fast mail facilities, but it bore no fruit. The amendment to reduce the rate of railway pay was ruled out on a point of order, the amendment to continue the pneumatic tube service in New York, Boston and Philadelphia was abandoned with the purpose of making the fight in the senate, and the motions to strike out the appropriations for special mail facilities were defeated.

The speaker laid before the house certified copies of the electoral vote in the several states, excepting those of Colorado and Tennessee. The vote will be counted at a joint session of the house and senate Feb. 13. The speaker appointed Mr. Grosvenor, of Ohio, and Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee, to act as tellers on behalf of the house upon tnat occasion.

The senate bill to allow travel pay to certain officers and men who reenlisted in the Philippines, upon their discharge from the volunteer service, was passed.

The military academy bill and the bill for the adjudication of the Spanish war claims were sent to conference.

Conference reports upon the bills providing for the abolition of grade crossings in the District of Columbia and construction of stations by the Pennsylvania and B. & O. railways were adopted.

The house then took up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. Mr. Hitt, chairman of the committee on foreign affairs, explained that the bill carries $1,808,808, being $88,830 less than the estimates and $37,640 more than the current law. Without action on it the house at 5:25 p. m. adjourned.

Governor Won't Have It.

Shawnee, O. T., Feb. 8.—The Shawnee Fair association telegraphed to the managers of the Jeffries-Ruhlin fight that it would give a guarantee of $25,000 for the fight. The dispatch said there was no danger of legal interference. The fair grounds are on neutral ground and the directors have a lease from the government for athletic sports, with no restrictions excepting one prohibiting the sale of liquor on the grounds.

Guthrie, O. T., Feb. 8.—Gov. Barnes, when told of Shawnee's guarantee of $25,000 to bring the fight to Oklahoma, said: "No prize fight can be held in Oklahoma while I am governor. Prize fighting is prohibited by our laws, and the laws will be enforced."

A Conference.

Cleveland, Feb. 8.—Representatives of both the molders' national union and of Foundrymen's association met in conference in this city Thursday, organized and adjourned further discussion of their varying opinions until to-day. The conference will endeavor to adjust the strike that has been on for several months between these two organizations, and the result will be of national interest, trades union men and manufacturers throughout the country being interested.

The Kaiser's Visit.

Berlin, Feb. 8.—The Cologne Gazette, reverting to Emperor William's visit, insists that his respect and love for his grandmother alone dictated the visit, his reception being purely personal. It acknowledges the existence of a "strong anti-British tendency in many circles in Germany," and asserts that "nothing could be more disastrous to Germany than the opposition of Great Britain."

Agrarian Riots.

Kingston, Jamaica, Feb. 8.—In consequence of a series of agrarian riots in the fruit-producing parish of St. Mary, the governor, Sir Augustus Heming, yesterday issued a proclamation warning the people against attempting to take forcible possession of any land. The troubles have slowly been developing a serious phase and the authorities are taking firm action in the matter.

A Souvenir.

Brussels, Feb. 8.—The minister of the Netherlands, Dr. Jonk Herr van Pestel, received Thursday a delegation of Belgians, who delivered to him a bronze statue of Queen Wilhelmina, a wedding present to be forwarded to The Hague, as a souvenir of the protection accorded by the Dutch sovereign to Mr. Kruger.

Distributing Favors.

London, Feb. 8.—King Edward continues to distribute medals and other marks of favor to those concerned in the funeral services of Queen Victoria. Through Lord Roberts he thanks the army and through Mr. Ritchie, the home secretary, he thanks the police.

Caution.

"That confounded life insurance company refused my application for a policy," said Hunker.

"Why, I should think you were a fine risk," replied Spatts. "What made them refuse your application?"

"Well, they found out in some way that I am in the habit of eating mushrooms that I gather myself."—Detroit Free Press.

Only a Slight Difference.

"I hear your son is achieving great success in his stage career."

"Yes," replied the architect.

"I should have thought he would have entered your profession."

"Well, it amounts to the same thing. We both make money by drawing good houses."—Stray Stories.

THE BILL KILLED

Coventions Will Not be Done Away With in Wayne County.

NOT THIS SESSION AT LEAST

The Bill to That Effect Was Killed in the Senate During the Absence of the Elections Committee—Business of the House.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 8.—All hopes of having political conventions in Wayne county done away with at this session of the legislature have gone glimmering. Senator H S. Earle and A. L. Holmes, of Detroit, are largely responsible for this situation.

The Colby bill was deliberately killed in the senate Thursday afternoon during the absence of Chairman Nims and Senator Chas. Smith of the committee on elections, and Senator "Pop" Goodell, of Wayne, who is in the upper peninsula with the fish committee junketers. Senator Holmes, of Detroit, who made the principal speech at the republican legislative caucus early in last month for the renomination of United States Senator James McMillan, notwithstanding the absence of the chairman and another member of the elections committee, made the first motion looking to the killing of the Colby bill. Senator Helme boldly charged that Holmes and the others opposing the Colby bill were but obeying the orders of United States Senator McMillan.

A motion to pass the bill was voted down by 13 nays to 8 ayes.

In the house Thursday afternoon Rep. Randall noticed a bill providing for a reduction of the tax for the support of the state university at Ann Arbor from one-fourth to one-sixth of a mill.

In explaining his bill, Mr. Randall says that the university up to two years ago got along very well with the revenues from a one-sixth-mill tax but since the raise to one-fourth mill, the population of the state has increased, and the taxes correspondingly, so that he believes the old percentage should be substituted for the present one.

Rep. Gordon introduced a bill authorizing the land commissioner to get out injunctions against trespassers on state lands.

Rep. Chandler sent in a bill providing for a loan by the state of $10,000 to the Mackinac park commission with which to lay roads and walks, the money to be paid back in installments of $1,000 every 10 years.

Rep. Stumpenhusen noticed a bill to prohibit fishing and hunting on Sunday.

Rep. Neal, of Northville, got through his bill to increase the term of the Wayne county commissioner of schools from two to four years. The bill was given immediate effect, and will be in operation in time for the spring election, if it passes the senate and the governor signs it.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Feb. 8.—Michigan pensions were granted Thursday as follows: Original—Geo. Palmer, Edgerton, $6; Wm. Nungesser, Manistee, $6. Additional—Charles B. Lyon, Comstock, $8. Restoration and additional—John B. Everingham, dead, Wetzel, $12. Increase—Samuel S. Brady, St. Louis, $10; Charles H. Buckland, soldiers' home, Kent, $17; George W. Crouch, Shaftsburg, $17; Harmon Demarest, Olivet, $14; Wm. Turnbull, Flint, $12; John Sturgeon, Muskegon, $15; Liman M. Peck, Sunfield, $6; Ephriam E. Brown, Englishville, $12; Jas. R. Scadden, Big Prairie, $12; David J. Ziegnfuss, Greenville, $17; Joseph M. Waldorf, Reading, $24; Sherman Allen, Shepherd, $10; Gustav Larat, Menominee, $12; Albert Kelchburger, Kibbie, $10; George O. Cole, Pontiac, $30. Reissue—Charles W. Slayton, Hart, $14. Widows—Anna A. Everingham, Wetzel, $8; Susan Babcock, Flint, $12; Clarissa Walker, Battle Creek, $8; Alexa Butterfield, Romeo, $12. War with Spain: Original—Victor McMillan, Mendon, $45.

Testimony Not Good.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 8.—Edward Morris, the man who defrauded R. L. Newman, the dealer in installment goods, out of a large amount of goods, and who claimed that James M. Green and W. B. Coates, landlord of the Park hotel, were accomplices, and disposed of the goods in other cities, was brought here from the Detroit house of correction to testify against Green, failed in his testimony, and the jury acquitted Green. It is now evident that the charges of Morris against Green existed only in his imagination. The case against Coates will now be dropped by the prosecuting attorney.

Combulsory Vaccination.

St. Louis, Mich., Feb. 8.—Owing to the case of smallpox at Alma, the streets of St. Louis are full of school children, the board having issued an order that no pupil shall be admitted to the school rooms unless vaccinated. There are two physicians on the school board, and hints have been made that the board took this action for their benefit, but the charge is warmly denied by all the physicians in the city, who declare the order to be for the best interests of public health.

Fatal Stabbing Affray.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 8.—George Washington, colored, was stabbed by a colored man known as "Sandy," in an altercation Thursday night, and the result may be fatal. He reached home without assistance after the fight, but soon became unconscious and was removed to the hospital.

Will Prove Fatal.

Turner, Mich., Feb. 8.—James Lavalley, of Saganing, while working in the Srescent Cooperage Co.'s yard, fell from a log roll and cannot recover.

The Le Conte pear, which revolutionized pear growing in southern California, was originally the Chinese sand pear, grown solely for ornamental purposes.

Will Boom His Business.

S. Laval, a merchant of Dallas, Tex., writes: "I thought I would have to give up business, after two years of suffering from general debility brought on by overwork and long hours, but four bottles of Electric Bitters gave me new life. I can now eat anything, sleep well and feel like working all the time. It's the best medicine on earth." It's a wonderful tonic and health builder for tired, weak, sickly and run-down people. Try it. Satisfaction guaranteed. Only 50c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

CHILD MAY DIE.

Four-Year-Old Girl Probably Fatally Burned Playing With Fire.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 8.—The 4-year-old daughter of Richard Trombley, living on the Kirby road in Grosse Pointe township, was shockingly burned Thursday afternoon and but little hope is had for its life. The child was left alone for a moment while its mother went to a neighbor's house. Mrs. Trombley was soon startled by a neighbor's boy yelling that her house was on fire. She rushed home but could not at first see either of her children for the smoke and began to cry for them. Seeing a spot of fire Mrs Trombley picked up a bucket of water and threw it upon the flames. When the smoke cleared away she found that the object on which she had thrown the water was her little girl.

All of the clothing with the single exception of the stockings had been burned from the body. The girl's flesh, especially the face, was charred in places and several fingers were burned to the bone. Dr. Williams was called but says that the child has hardly a chance to survive its burns. The children commenced to play with the kitchen fire almost as soon as their mother left the house.

Store Looted.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 8.—The safe of the Bliss Harness Co., retailers, with a store nearly across the street from the police station, was looted Wednesday night of $110. Some $18 in small change in the box was not taken. No doors or locks were broken and some one well acquainted with the premises and the combination of the safe, it is believed, must have done the job.

Had Good Luck.

Escanaba, Mich., Feb. 8.—Joseph F. Reinger, of Escanaba, has just been notified that he is the heir to $180,000 from a relative in Spain. In receiving this, he also is to be the guardian of a young girl, who also has a snug fortune of her own. Fr. Pedro, of Spain and his charge, will arrive in Escanaba in a short time. Quite a romantic tale is connected with the fortune.

After Battle Creek Barbers.

Battle Creek, Mich., Feb. 8.—The state board of examiners for barbers is after the tonsorial artists of this city. The board met here Thursday to examine candidates. Its members state that there are 25 barbers in this city who have no license. If they do not present themselves for examination they will be prosecuted. Thirty-five were examined Thursday, many Alleged Youthful Robber.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Feb. 8.—Fred Johnson, aged 18 years, it is alleged, robbed his father on Christmas day of $85 and ran away to Chicago. He returned Wednesday with a pal named Ed Kelly. Both were arrested at midnight just as they were about to rob a saloon. They were bound over for trial.

Tortured and Robbed.

Toledo, O., Feb. 8.—Late Wednesday night four men broke into the house of Charles Krout, near Steam Corners O., and after intimidating the husband wife and son, helped themselves to a hearty meal. Then they ransacked the house, securing about $9, which Krout declared was all he had. Despite all sorts of threats he refused to give them information regarding any more money, declaring he had none. At last they stripped him partially and laid him upon a stove, quickly lifting him off, writhing in pain, and placed him upon the floor. He then directed them to a spare room, where he had a sum of money said to be about $1,300, hidden in an envelope under the carpet. This they quickly secured and with much profanity left the house, threatening death to any of the inmates if they left the premises that night.

Thinks It a Go.

New York, Feb. 8.—Wm. A. Brady, who has charge of the business arrangements of the Jeffries-Ruhlin championship battle, left town yesterday for Cincinnati. When the match was arranged the Saengerfest people appointed Brady manager, but the latter has been busy in New York, and his representative, Eddie Cook, has been on the ground looking after matters. Mr. Brady still thinks everything will be arranged satisfactorily and Jeffries and Ruhlin will meet Feb. 15. Before leaving he said: "I do not think the outlook for the big fight is as bad as the papers state. The case is now in court, and if the decision is in favor of the boxers, and I think it will be, the contest will take place as scheduled."

Still No Jury.

Minneapolis, Feb. 8.—The work of securing a jury to try Frank H. Hamilton on the charge of murdering Leonard R. Day progresses but slowly, and at the present rate the hearing of evidence cannot begin before next week. This was the fourth day of the trial and the crowd in the court room was as large as ever. Another special venire of 50 was ordered. Three more jurors were secured, making nine in all. After consultation with the attorneys, Judge Brooks announced that until the taking of evidence shall begin the jurymen will be allowed to see their families in his presence. After that time they will be shut off entirely from communication with the rest of the world.

Confessed a Murder.

Cleveland, Feb. 8.—The local police department has received word from Ashtabula that Nicholas Heeney, aged 21 years, whose residence is said to be New York city, was arrested there Thursday night and confessed that he killed Frank Johnston, the aged towerman at the Pennsylvania railroad crossing in this city early Thursday morning.

Big Fire in Minnesota.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 8.—A telephone message to the Times from St. Cloud, Minn., says a big fire is raging in that city. The West hotel and several other buildings have been destroyed, but as far as known no lives have been lost. No estimate of the financial loss can yet me made.

Not True to Its Name.

"Didn't you start out with a play called 'Turned Adrift'?" asked the friend.

"We did," replied that eminent tragedian and repertory actor, Mr. Barnes Tormer, "but we couldn't get anybody to float it."—Indianapolis Press.

CHAPTER XXI.

The suddenness of this demand overwhelmed him, and he fell back into the chair, his eyes bulging and his mouth agape.

"Do you hear me?" I cried. "The proofs!" going up to him with clinched fists. "What have you done with those proofs? If you have destroyed them, I'll kill you."

Then, as a bulldog shakes himself loose, the old fellow got up and squared his shoulders and faced me, his lips compressed and his jaws knotted. I could see by his eyes that I must fight for it.

"Herr Winthrop has gone mad," said he. "The Princess Hildegarde never had a sister."

"You lie!" My hands were at his throat.

"I am an old man," he said.

I let my hands drop and stepped back.

"That is better," he said, with a grim smile. "Who told you this impossible tale and what has brought you here?"

"It is not impossible. The sister has been found."

"Found!" I had him this time. "Found!" he repeated. "Oh, this is not credible!"

"It is true. And tomorrow at noon the woman you profess to love will become the wife of the man she abhors. Why? Because you—you refuse to save her!"

"I? How in God's name can I save her?" the perspiration beginning to stand out on his brow.

"How? I will tell you how. Prince Ernst marries Gretchen for her dowry alone. If the woman I believe to be her sister can be proved so, the prince will withdraw his claims to Gretchen's hand. Do you understand? He will not marry for half the revenues of Hohenphalia. It is all or nothing. Now, will you produce those proofs? Will you help me?" The minute hand of the clock was moving around with deadly precision.

"Are you lying to me?" he asked, breathing hard.

"You fool, can't you see that it means everything to Gretchen if you have those proofs? She will be free, free! Will you get those proofs, or shall your godchild live to curse you?"

This was the most powerful weapon I had yet used.

"Live to curse me?" he said, not speaking to me, but to the thought. He sat down again and covered his face with his hands. The minute which passed seemed very long. He flung away his hands from his eyes, with a movement which expressed despair and resignation. "Yes, I will get them. It is years and years ago," he mused absently, "so long ago that I had thought it gone and forgotten. But it was not to be. I will get the proofs," turning to me as he left the chair. "Wait here." He unbolted the door and passed forth. It was a full confession of the deception written by the mother herself and witnessed by her physician, the innkeeper and his wife. Not even the king could contest its genuineness.

"Where is this Dr. Salzberg?"

The innkeeper leaned against the side of the fireplace, staring into the flames.

"He is dead," briefly.

"Who was he?"

"Her late highness' court physician. Oh, have no fear, herr, this new found princess of yours will come into her own," with a bitter smile.

"And why have you kept silent all these years?" I asked.

"Why?" He raised his arms, then let them fall dejectedly. "I loved the Princess Hildegarde. I was jealous that any should share her greatness. I have kept silent because I carried her in my arms till she could walk, because her father cursed her and refused to believe her his own, because she grew around my heart as a vine grows around a rugged oak. And the other? She was nothing to me. I had never seen her. My wife spirited her away when it was night and dark. I took the proofs of her existence as a punishment to my wife, who, without them, would never dare to return to this country again. Herr, when a man loads you with ignominy and contempt and ridicule for something you are not to blame, what do you seek? Revenge. The prince tried to crush this lonely child of his. It was I who brought her up. It was I who taught her to say her prayers. It was I who made her what she is today, a noble woman, with a soul as spotless as yonder snowdrift. That was my revenge."

"Who are you?" I cried. For this innkeeper's affection and eloquence seemed out of place.

"Who am I?" The smile which lit his face was wistful and sad. "The law of man disavows me—the bar sinister. In the eyes of God, who is accountable for our being, I am Gretchen's uncle, her father's brother."

"You?" I was astounded.

"I."

"And who knows of this?"

"The king, the prince—and you."

I thrust a hand toward him. "You are a man."

"Wait. Swear to God that her highness shall never know."

"On my honor."

Then he accepted my clasp and looked straight into my eyes.

"And all this to you?"

"I love her."

"And she?"

"It is mutual. Do you suppose she would have put her life before mine if not? She knew that the lieutenant would have killed me."

"Ach! It never occurred to me in that light. I understood it to be a frolic of hers. Will you make her happy?"

"If an honest man's love can do it," said I. "Now, get on your hat and coat. You must go to the capital with me. The king would send for you in any case. The next train leaves at 5, and to save Gretchen these proofs must be in the chancellor's hands tomorrow morning."

"Yes, my presence will be necessary. Perhaps I have committed a crime. Who knows?" His head fell in meditation. "Herr, and this other sister, has she been happy?"

"Happier than ever Gretchen."

"You have known this sister?" asked the innkeeper.

"For many years," said I.

And those were the only words which passed between us during that five mile drive. At the station I at once wired the chancellor that the proofs had been found and requested him to inform the king and Prince Ernst. And then another eight hours dragged themselves out of existence. But Gretchen was mine!

* * * * * * *

The king was dressed in a military blouse, and, save for the small cross suspended from his neck by a chain of gold, there was nothing about him to distinguish his rank. He strode back and forth, sometimes going the whole length of the white room. The chancellor sat at a long mahogany table, and the prince and Mr. Wentworth were seated at either side of him. The innkeeper stood before the chancellor at the opposite side of the table. His face might have been cut from granite, it was so set and impassive. I leaned over the back of a chair in the rear of the room. The king came close to me once and fixed his keen blue eyes on mine.

"Was this the fellow, prince," he asked, "who caused you all the trouble and anxiety?"

I felt uneasy. My experience with kings was not large.

"No, your majesty," answered the prince. "The gentleman to whom you refer has departed the scene." The prince caught the fire in my eye and laughed softly.

"Ah," said the king carelessly, "it is a strange story. Proceed," with a nod to the chancellor.

"What is your name?" the chancellor asked, directing his glance at the innkeeper.

The innkeeper gazed at the king for a space. The prince was watching him with a mocking smile.

"Hermann Breunner, your excellency."

The king stood still. He had forgotten the man, but not the name.

"Hermann Breunner," he mused.

"Yes, your majesty," said the innkeeper.

"The keeper of the feudal inn," supplemented the prince.

The glance the innkeeper shot him was swift. The prince suddenly busied himself with the papers.

"What was your object in defrauding the princess"—the chancellor opened one of the documents which lay before him—"the Princess Elizabeth of her rights?"

"I desired the Princess Hildegarde to possess all," was the answer. It was also a challenge to the prince to refute the answer if he dared. "I acknowledge that I have committed a crime. I submit to his majesty's will," bowing reverentially.

The king was stroking his chin, a sign of deep meditation in him.

"Let their highnesses be brought in," he said at last.

The chancellor rose and passed into the anteroom. Shortly be returned, followed by Gretchen. I could see by the expression in her face [illegible] was mystified by the proceedings.

"Her highness the Princess Elizabeth is just leaving the carriage," announced the chancellor, retiring again.

Gretchen looked first at the king, then at the prince. As she saw the innkeeper a wave of astonishment rippled over her face.

"Be seated, your highness," said the king kindly.

She knew that I was in the room, but her eyes never left the king.

The prince was plucking at his imperial. The innkeeper's eyes were riveted on the door. He was waiting for the appearance of her whom he had wronged. Presently Phyllis came in. Her cheeks were red, and her eyes sparkled with excitement. Wentworth nodded reassuringly. The innkeeper was like one stricken dumb. He stared at Phyllis till I thought his eyes would start from their sockets.

"Your majesty has summoned me?" said Gretchen.

"Yes. Explain," said the king to the chancellor.

"Your highness," began the chancellor, "it has been proved by these papers here and by that man there," pointing to the innkeeper, "that your mother of lamented memory gave birth to twins. One is yourself; the other was spirited away at the request of your mother. We shall pass over her reasons. It was all due to the efforts of this clever journalist here"—Gretchen was compelled to look at me now, while the king frowned and the prince smiled—"that your sister has been found."

Gretchen gave a cry and started to go to Phyllis with outstretched arms, but as Phyllis stood motionless she stopped, and her arms fell.

"Your highness," said the king to Phyllis, "it is your sister, the Princess Hildegarde. Embrace her, I beg you."

The king willed it. But it occurred to me that there was a warmth lacking in the embrace. Gretchen lightly brushed with her lips the cheek of her sister, and the kiss was as lightly returned. There was something about it all we men failed to understand.

"Moreover," said the king, "she desires you to remain the sovereign Princess of Hohenphalia."

"Nay, your majesty," said Gretchen; "it is I who will relinquish my claims. Your majesty is aware that I have many caprices."

"Indeed, yes," said the king. "And I can assure you that they have caused me no small anxiety. But let us come to an understanding once and for all. Do you wish to abdicate in favor of your sister?"

Gretchen gave me the briefest notice.

"Yes, your majesty."

Phyllis was regarding me steadfastly.

"This is final?" said the king.

"It is."

"And what is your will?" to Phyllis. "Yes; the likeness is truly remarkable," communing aloud to his thought.

I could not suppress the appeal in my eyes.

"Your majesty," said Phyllis, "if my sister will teach me how to become a princess I promise to accept the responsibility."

"You will not need much teaching," replied the king admiringly.

"You will do this—you, my sister?" asked Gretchen eagerly.

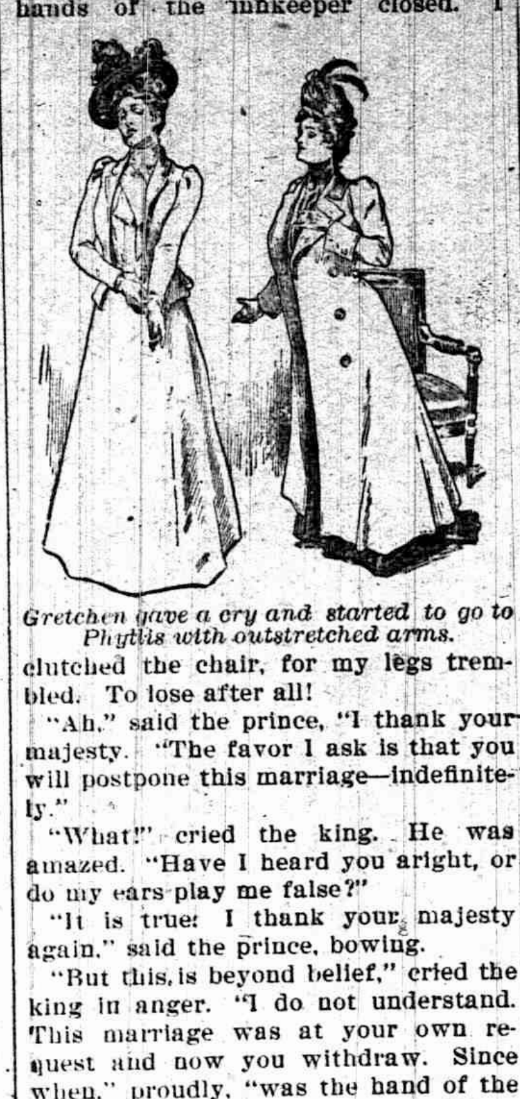
"Yes." There was no color now in Phyllis' cheeks. They were as white as the marble faun on the mantel.

"Remember, your highness," said the king, speaking to Gretchen, "there shall be no recall."

"Sire," said the prince, rising, "I request a favor."

"And it shall be granted," said the king, "this being your wedding day."

It was Gretchen who now paled. The hands of the innkeeper closed.



Gretchen gave a cry and started to go to Phyllis with outstretched arms.

clutched the chair, for my legs trembled. To lose after all!

"Ah," said the prince, "I thank your majesty. The favor I ask is that you will postpone this marriage—indefinitely."

"What!" cried the king. He was amazed. "Have I heard you aright, or do my ears play me false?"

"It is true! I thank your majesty again," said the prince, bowing.

"But this, is beyond belief," cried the king in anger. "I do not understand. This marriage was at your own request and now you withdraw. Since when," proudly, "was the hand of the Princess Hildegarde to be ignored?"

"It is a delicate matter," said the prince, turning the ring on his finger. "It would be impolite to state my reasons before her highness. Your highness, are you not of my opinion that as matters now stand a marriage between us would be rather absurd?"

"Now, as at all times," retorted Gretchen scornfully. "It has never been my will," a furtive glance at the king.

"But"— began the king. He was wrathful.

"Your majesty," said the innkeeper, "you are a great king; be a generous one."

All looked at him as though they expected to see the king fly at him and demolish him—all but I. The king walked up to the bold speaker, took his measure, then, with his hands clasped behind his back, resumed his pacing. After awhile he came to a standstill.

"Your highness," he said to Phyllis, "what shall I do with this man who has so grossly wronged you?"

"Forgive him."

The king passed on. I was not looking at him, but at the innkeeper. I saw his lip tremble and his eyes fill. Suddenly he fell upon his knees before Phyllis and raised her hand to his lips.

"Will your highness forgive a sinner who only now realizes the wrong he has done to you?"

"Yes, I forgive you," said Phyllis. "The only wrong you have done to me is to have made me a princess. Your majesty will forgive me, but it is all so strange to me who have grown up in a foreign land which is dearer to my heart than the land in which I was born."

I felt a thrill of pride, and I saw that Mr. Wentworth's lips had formed into a "God bless her!"

"It is a question now," said the king, "only of duty."

"And your majesty's will regarding my marriage?" put in the prince, holding his watch in his hand. It was 10 o'clock.

"Well, well! It shall be as you desire." Then to me: "I thank you in the name of their highnesses for your services. And you, Mr. Wentworth, shall always have the good will of the king for presenting to his court so accomplished and beautiful a woman as her highness the Princess Elizabeth. Hermann Breunner, return to your inn and remain there. Your countenance brings back disagreeable recollections. I shall expect your highnesses at dinner this evening. Prince, I leave to you the pleasant task of annulling your nuptial preparations. Good morning. Ah, these women!" as he passed from the room. "They are our mothers, so we must suffer their caprices."

And as we men followed him we saw Gretchen weeping silently on Phyllis' shoulder.

The innkeeper touched the prince.

"I give you fair warning," he said. "If our paths cross again, one of us shall go on alone."

"I should be very lonely without you," laughed the prince. "However, rest yourself. As the king remarked, your face recalls unpleasant memories. Our paths shall not cross again."

When the innkeeper and the chancellor were out of earshot, I said, "She is mine!"

"Not yet," the prince said softly. "On Tuesday morn I shall kill you."

The Flying Switch.

"When I lived in Kansas," said an observing man, "I used to be interested in the way the engine, caboose and crew of a fast freight would be changed at the junction of two divisions without any stopping of the train. It was a good thing to do this, as the train carried perishable fruits, rushing from California to the east, and any saving of time was a great saving of money.

"Well, the train would come along, and at a certain spot there would be three switches. The engine would leave the train and go by way of one switch to a roundhouse. Her caboose would be dropped off upon the second switch, and then from the third another engine, with a caboose in front of it, would push out on the main track and overtake the moving train. When the bump occurred, the new caboose, containing the necessary waybills and the new crew, would be coupled on, and if the train had not preserved enough speed the engine would push it along to where another engine, having come from another switch on to the main line, was moving slowly in front. Very nicely and gently the train would overtake this engine and be fastened to it. The pushing engine would then depart, and the freight train, all refitted without a second's stop, would thunder on its eastward way.

"I don't know who originated the clever 'flying switch' idea, but he was a bright man whoever he was."—Philadelphia Record.

McGovern Matched.

New York, Feb. 5.—Terry McGovern has been matched to fight Tim Haggerty, of Australia, who, it is claimed, is the champion of his class in that country. The fight will take place on April 30, at 126 pounds, for a purse of $5,000, at a place not decided upon. Haggerty, it is announced, already has sailed for this country, and he will be met in San Francisco by James C. Kennedy, who leaves for that city today.

Ball Player Dead.

Pittsburg, Feb. 5.—Word was received here yesterday that Tom O'Brien, the Pittsburg club's first baseman, died of consumption at Phoenix, Ariz., Sunday night. O'Brien had been in poor health since his trip to Cuba, and had gone to Arizona to build up.

THE OLD ARTIST.

Nature! Ah, there's an artist, if you will.
I went by train through Kent the other day,
And, oh, the little pictures on the way
She painted with her lavish, happy skill!

The very lambs that thronged the meadows knew
As well how they should group themselves at though
(Nay, better, possibly, than were that so)
The "ten o'clo..." were taught by every ewe.

And once above the bank a cherry tree
Spread out its slender arms of snowdrift white,
And made, against the blue, so fair a sight
That Hokusai himself would bend the knee.

Her hand did naught amiss. No words of mine
Can tell how exquisite she made the weald;
In every field a picture, every field,
And all (as I have said) were on the line.

The FAITH OF A YAQUI.

How Aid Was Carried to the Besieged In La Cajetin Canyon.

By Rose L. Ellerbee.

After a sudden raid into Chihuahua, Baltasar's band of Yaqui Indians was followed back into its mountain retreats by a volunteer troop. For three weeks the Indians turned and twisted, making dashing raids and picking off their pursuers from unsuspected shelters; but the Chihuahuan captain knew the Sierra Madras too. He cut Baltasar off on this side and headed him on that and at last forced him into La Cajetin canyon, its only entrance a narrow gorge.

"We have the coyotes in a trap. They cannot escape," the comandante cheerfully assured his men.

But what is the use of a trap if you cannot put your finger upon your prey? The Yaquis would never surrender. There were water and a band of sheep in the valley. Twice the Mexicans tried to force an entry, and then the peones flatly declined to again enter the "passage of death." Gonsalez could only post his guards and wait.

Within the canyon old Baltasar set his watch, too, and if a Mexican sentinel raised his head above the sky line there was one less of the pursuing force. But the old chief knew, as he came down through the valley on the fifth day of the siege, that his men had less than two rounds of ammunition apiece. He stood under the stunted oak and let his keen eyes glance carelessly from man to man as they lounged about him. He motioned to one, a young fellow who lay apart from the rest, his wide sombrero drawn low over his alertly watchful eyes.

"We are twenty and eight men, my son," Baltasar said quietly, "and we have 37 cartridges."

Isadore did not speak, and the old man continued: "We may drive the dogs back once more, but again"—he shook his head—"and I sent Pablo to Muni. Muni will come to us, if the devils have not shut him in, and then los Mejicanos cannot turn this way or that." He smiled grimly. "They will be forced in here with us, and if we have not cartridges"—throwing his hands apart, he swept them outward. "Some man must go there to Don Juan across the border and bring back the ammunition."

"What does one?" asked Isadore.

"There!" The old man turned toward the wall of rock which rose 200 feet sheer at the upper end of the valley. "No guard is there. At the top it is but a shelf and then another canyon, and there is the trail to the north."

The chief fixed a piercing look upon his companion. Isadore had left the Yaqui country in his boyhood. He was an American citizen now. He had married a wife who was as much Mexican as Yaqui. Baltasar was remembering these things, but he knew his man.

"Wilt thou go and return quickly, Isadore?"

The young man straightened his shoulders, and a new light came into his face. "I must search out the way up the wall," he said and stepped lightly out of the hollow.

With a spring the old man caught his sleeve and dragged him back. "Fool!" he groaned as a bullet ticked a stone, "to fling thy life away at this moment! Aqui!" And he led the way under the shelter of the dry creek until they reached a huge bowlder. Under its shadow they crouched and carefully inspected the bank, Baltasar pointing out that it was rotten stone and showing unsuspected cracks and ledges and then describing the canyon beyond and the trail minutely, for Isadore was a stranger to the paths of his fathers.

He listened attentively, but his eyes were sparkling and his grave face lighted with a hidden fire. Luisa, the bride of a month, was there at Don Juan. Long miles and unknown dangers lay between them, yet he should see her soon. He had been a vaquero on the Short Stop cattle range for ten years past, and he had loved Luisa ever since. A little wild thing, she had played about him while he worked and told to him alone her thoughts and fancies. She had come back from the convent school a quiet, self possessed young woman, still with little to say to those about her, and her old friend had felt that she was a fit wife for the "boss" himself. He had never dreamed of aspiring to her hand until she herself had assured him that she chose rather to be the wife of an Indian than the mistress of a white man. Then they had gone to the priest.

One month of home and happiness was given them before the call for all Yaquis to come to the aid of their tribe in resisting Mexican oppression had come to Isadore. Luisa had protested bitterly. "Those people, they drove you out. From them you have only hunger and blows. Why should you leave me to fight their fight? They are naught to us." And his employer explained in vain that Isadore owed no further allegiance to his tribe and swore hotly at him as a "hopeless fool," to translate mildly. But Isadore answered to everything: "It is my country; they are my people. I must go."

For five months now he had followed Baltasar, taking unflinchingly his part in the guerrilla warfare, but his heart was not in it. His thoughts were all of the work he had left, his home and Luisa. He had heard no word since he had left her, but now he should see her—know that all was well with her. The thought pulsed through him as he scanned the wall, fixing every detail, every possibility, in his mind.

The ascent must be made in the brief hour between sunset and moonrise. At dusk Isadore began to climb, cautiously feeling his way with hand and foot, testing every step, swinging from ledge to crevice and niche with catlike nimbleness. Once a foothold crumbled, and he saved himself from dashing below only by a clutch that left his fingers torn and bleeding. Sometimes he must cut his steps in the rock, and at last he reached a granite face on which even the knife could get no hold. He wasted precious moments in groping over it and then was obliged to retrace his way to a ledge along which he crept upward and outward. A stone rattled downward, and he heard footsteps above. He flattened himself against the rock and waited, but the steps retreated.

The moon swung clear of the Old Woman peak as he dragged himself upon the top and lay panting and nerveless, but he must not stop in that pitiless light, and, lying flat, he worked himself across and began to explore the opposite edge for the point where he could most easily descend. Again he heard the pace of the sentry and held his breath while he awaited what should come, but the man had no mind to make himself a target for Yaqui bullets on that bare ledge and turned back before he reached it.

After a little search at the foot of the new canyon Isadore found the trail described by Baltasar, and, guided more by instinct than by sight, he followed steadily its obscure but certain leading. Absorbed as he was in keeping to the path that led over rocks and through gulches, lost itself in brush and leaped up and down mountain sides, he was conscious all the time that Baltasar had chosen him, had trusted him above all the rest, and he must not fail Baltasar. And he always heard Luisa's cry of joy to come—that alone would be worth all the toil and danger.

When the moon waned, he slept, but at daybreak he was on foot again. The day was well on before he left the mountains. A wide plain, loosely covered with greasewood, cactus and yuccas and broken by many a dry water course, stretched away to the north. There was no water, no shade, and the August sun scorched the very air, but the Indian trotted warily on, keeping to the scant shelter and the low ground and once lying behind the spare screen of a mesquite bush while a band of the Mexican patrol swept by in the distance.

The moon's magic was turning the barren, dusty plains into cool fields of restful beauty as he at last approached the settlement. Instinctively he turned first to the house where he had left Luisa in the care of a country woman, but time pressed. Reluctantly he passed by and went on to a long, low adobe which stood apart. He gave a signal knock and in a moment was standing inside, while an old man, a boy and three or four women gathered about, questioning, exclaiming, gesturing. They hushed as he spoke.

"Baltasar's band went down into Gonsalez's country. He followed us back. He had many men, we few. He drove us back and back into La Cajeton. I have come for cartridges. They have tried twice to enter and twice borne back their dead, but if they strike again, or if Muni's band comes to aid us and we have not the ammunition, it is the end." Then, turning to the boy, he called: "Go quickly, Juan, and fetch Luisa. Tell her one wishes to see her, but do not speak my name."

A pot of steaming coffee had been placed upon the table. He swallowed two cups of the liquid before he noted the silence in the room and that Juan still remained. "Why stand you there?" he demanded angrily. "I have haste to make, and I must see my wife."

The old man had dragged a heavy box from underneath a bed and was taking from it little green boxes of cartridges. He straightened himself and, coming around the table, laid his hand upon Isadore's arm. "You cannot see your wife, son," he said, using the harsh gutturals of his native dialect.

"Is she dead?" cried Isadore, rising.

"No, but she has the pest—smallpox. She will die tomorrow. Teofila says."

"Why did you not speak, then?" cried the husband passionately. "Think you I fear the pest? Where is she?" He turned toward the door, but the old man stepped in front of him.

"That you must not do!" he cried. "You know the foolishness of the Americanos! They watch day and night. No one may enter or leave there. And you, if they see you, a Yaqui rebel, they will give you over to the Mexicans."

"Que caramba! The devil himself shall not keep me from my wife! Let me pass!"

But the old man, placing his back against the door, answered: "Think, hombre! What of thy seven and twenty brothers up there? Wilt leave them to die?"

Isadore hesitated; then he caught the whisper of one woman to another. "She calls always for him. Teofila says."

"What are the men to me?" he broke out roughly. "They are nothing to me. But she—she is my wife. Send some other man to La Cajetin. Stand aside!"

Without moving, old Chepe raised his hand and spoke solemnly: "There is no man else to go. Tebiate is dead with the pest. Felipe is shut in yonder, Juan here is but a boy, and I"—his voice broke into a wail—"God help us, I am very old—very old!"

Unheeding, Isadore shoved the old man out of the way and sprang through the door. Outside, the freshness of the sparkling air cooled his brain, and the sight of the distant mountains brought back the memory of Baltasar and the men whose lives depended upon his own life. He paused within the shadow and watched the guard turn at the corner of the house where Luisa lay and walk with leisurely step down the row of black adobe huts. The gleam of his gun barrel maddened the Indian. What right had that man to stand between him and his dying wife, to prevent his looking into her eyes and hearing her voice? He drew out his revolver. It would be easy enough to send a bullet there just under the left shoulder, and then he might take Luisa in his arms, kiss her farewell and escape. His people would help him. His hands shook as he turned the weapon, but with his American citizenship he had adopted the cowboy code—he would not shoot a man in the back. And, besides, the man was but carrying out orders, as he himself was doing.

A little gleam of light from the room where he knew his wife must lie attracted him, fascinated him. If he could look into that window, catch one glimpse of her face, hear her voice calling his name, then he might be able to go back to Baltasar. He measured the distance with his eye. He could easily reach the window while the watchman's back was turned, and surely the man would not shoot him for looking in at a window. He could outrun any pursuer, but an alarm would mean delay, perhaps the failure of his mission. With an oath he admitted that the risk was too great. He must go back to the mountains without seeing Luisa. he should never see her again. He hid his face in his hands, with a groan of actual physical suffering; then, with a long look at the little light, he turned away.

The women, the wives and sisters of Chepe's two sons, who were with Baltasar, were huddled about the door to watch the figure in the shadow. They greeted his return with tears and whisperings of joy, but he pushed past them to old Chepe, who squatted on the floor in front of the black fireplace, his head sunk between his knees. Shaking his shoulder, Isadore said: "Make ready quickly and send Juan for your best horse. Fifty miles must lie behind me before the sun rises."

Soon, with eyes turning again and again toward that feeble little light of the window he was stealing away through the shadows. Outside the village Juan met him with the horse. There was little danger of interruption now on the lonely road that stretched away, a white thread through the dark mesa, and he put the pony to a steady gallop. He might think now. Just as he had started one of the women had spoken: "The white doctor does great things, and the white doctor gives the medicine to Luisa. She may not die perhaps. Old Teofila—quien sabe?—old Teofila may not speak true."

"Teofila knows well the signs of death," Isadore had answered bitterly. But he snatched at the thought. It was true, he had known the doctor to work miracles, and Teofila might mistake—at least she might mistake the time. Luisa might live two days, three days. She might not die at all. "I will see her again yet," he swore to himself. "I must carry these accursed cartridges to Baltasar, but I will return. Before the moon goes down again I will be with Luisa, and then she may not die. We will go back to the rancho, to the little house, and be happy again. Yes," he repeated again, "they may fight if it pleases them; but I will take Luisa and go back to my cattle. That is best."

He burned with impatience when he thought of the distance ahead of him. He grew reckless and urged his horse on with no thought of danger until the steady beat of hoofs, muffled by the soft dust, startled him. There was no hiding place here on the open plain. He cursed his carelessness and used his Spanish bit and spurs wickedly. If he could reach the wash, with its broken banks, he might escape unnoticed. But his half starved pony was no match for the long strides of the horses behind. They gained, and at last he heard an order to halt, and a moment later a bullet zipped past his ear. He rode at full speed down a steep bank and wheeled his horse at right angles into a gulch so narrow that his knees scraped the sides. It was a desperate chance, but the patrolmen, wrapped in a cloud of their own dust, dashed by, and by the time they had agreed as to their blunder Isadore was galloping across the country out of range.

He was able to push his sturdy, sure footed little beast over some miles of the trail; then, after taking a little food, he started on without waiting for sleep or for daylight. The cartridge belts about his waist twisted and chafed with every movement; the sack of ammunition grew more leaden at every step of the endless, upward climb; his eyes were weighted with sleep and his feet clumsy with weariness, but he paused only to pant for breath after some heavy pull. He was driven relentlessly on by the thought of the men in peril ahead and behind Luisa dying without him. "No," he gasped; "she will not die before I come. The good God will not permit that."

It was high noon when he at last reached the end of the trail. The thin, clear air pulsated with heat and with silence. He listened, but no sound of living thing came to him, and he shouldered the sack for the last climb with a dull sense of being too late after all. He was on the ridge once more and looking eagerly into La Cajetin. Ah, there under the trees were the men just as he had left them apparently. All was well, then. "Gracias a Dios," he whispered. A hundred yards to the right the Mexican guard was sleeping in the thin shadow of a rock, and down there below—yes, it was Baltasar himself there in the shade of the bowlder. The old man saw him and threw up his hands in joy, then motioned warningly. But Isadore, dropping the sack over the edge, began to lower it by the reata he had attached. Suddenly a sentinel far down the valley shouted; the sleeping watchman stood up, only to pitch forward at a puff from Baltasar's rifle. The precious sack dropped to the sand below, and Isadore, rising to his feet, sent a ringing "adios" to the men below and, turning, plunged, slipping, rolling, falling, into the canyon.

As he ran through the chaparral the Mexican soldiers who had given chase snipped the leaves and scattered little whiffs of dust and splinters of rock from the bank beside him. Above the popping of their rifles there came from far down the valley the shouts of men and then the long, high cry of a Yaqui squaw, mingled with the echoes of fast repeated shots. The Mexicans turned back, and Isadore went on, knowing that his work had been well done—Muni had come.

Nothing but the dogged endurance of generations inured to physical hardship could have kept him in the now familiar trail as he staggered on, feeling nothing, seeing nothing but the vision of his wife calling for him, dying without him. When he reached the spring where he had left his horse, he drank long and deep, plunging his throbbing head again and again into the little pool. With his hands dabbling in the water, his heavy lids dropped, and, in an instant the bliss of sleep was upon him. But as he floated into forgetfulness he seemed to hear a low, sweet voice calling his name. He started up, then struggled to his feet and blindly saddled the pony. Then the faithful beast stumbled on down the mountain.

The soothing light of the moon again rested on the ugly little town when he rode into Don Juan and directly to the little adobe. He dropped from his horse to his knees in front of the hut. The door and window stood wide open, and the long bars of silver illuminated the darkest corner with their mocking light. The room was bare and empty.—Argonaut.

Story of a Lost Ring.

A well-known Boston society woman suddenly missed a valuable diamond ring from her finger. It was a ring she seldom removed, but all that could be remembered about it was that she had just washed her hands. Fearing it had slipped off in the operation, the plumber was quickly called in and all the traps opened with the faint hope of finding the jewel, but without avail, and sorrow reigned in the household, for the diamond was not only intrinsically valuable, but a dearly prized souvenir.

Some time later the set bowl in the bathroom had to be replaced, and when it was removed, lo and behold, crowded in behind the water pipes was the skeleton of a mouse, and round the skeleton's thread of a neck hung a diamond ring. Identification was immediate and the mystery quickly cleared up by the poor little beast. He had feasted on a box of bran which milady kept to whiten her fair hands and into which she undoubtedly dropped the ring. Mousie, through vanity or accident, slipped it over his head, but in trying to escape with the loot he died a felon's death.—Boston Herald.

RAILROAD NEWS.

It develops that the real contending forces in the Cincinnati Northern litigation are General Sam Thomas and the Vanderbilts. According to excellent authority General Thomas is going to make a fight for the control of the property which was about to pass into the hands of the Vanderbilts,

According to the story which is firmly believed on Wall street, General Thomas has formulated plans for the improvment and extension of the Cincinnati Northern, which would make this property an important factor in the railway situation in Michigan and Ohio. He was about to put these into effect when the Vanderbilts proceeded to close an option on the outside securities. The representatives of the Vanderbilts realized that General Thomas could furnish necessary money to carry out his plans, and they objected seriously to his invasion of Michigan with the improved Cincinnati Northern. In its present condition the Cincinnati Northern is not feared, but with two or three more millions of substantial improvements the Vanderbilts see in the property a dangerous competitor.

Unless a compromise is effected the history of the Clover Leaf litigation is apt to be repeated. General Thomas, it is claimed, has some other interests to protect besides the money he has invested in the road in developing the Cincinnati Northern. On this account he is not disposed to compromise. What he desires is that the Vanderbilts take their hands off the property.

Joe Robertson, a blacksmith at the car shops, is fearful that he will have to resign his position on account of his eyes. One eye was injured about a year ago and is causing him considerable trouble.

The Carbury-Durno Recitals.

Tuesday, Feb. 12. The highest grade musical entertainment given in Tecumseh in many years

Chicago Journal: "Mr. Carbury was the chief object of interest. His voice is of good quality, peculiarly sympathetic, appealing and satisfying, his method ever artistic and his production excellent."

Musikerheim, Magdeburg, Europe: "Miss Jeanette Durno, evidencing such deep sentiment and pure artistic inspiration, charmed us to such a degree that we wish to call the attention of the musical world to the new star on the pianist's heaven."

Admission, 25c.

Joseph Smith received a letter from the Weber piano company, Chicago, this morning, stating that they had shipped a Weber Grand Concert piano to Tecumseh and instructing him to have it put in the best condition and to return it to Chicago after the Carbury-Durno entertainment next Tuesday evening. It is evident that Miss Durno is a distinguished pianist as this company furnishes the piano as a special advertisement

Mrs. M. Banister.

Mrs. M. Banister, whose maiden name was Marion Hillman, was born Sept. 30th, 1820, in Philadelphia, and died Feb. 3d, 1901, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. E. Bice, in Tecumseh.

The first eleven years of her life she spent in the Quaker City, then with her parents she came to Salem, Ohio, where at the age of 17 she was married to John Salander, but after a happy wedded life of only 11 years her husband died.

During the War of the Rebellion, she enlisted in the service of the Union as a regular army nurse, in which capacity, she served faithfully for three years in Jeffersonville, Ind., and Louisville, Ky., hospitals. She received from the government an honorable discharge at the close of the war. At the time of her death she was one of only three army nurses receiving a pension from the Detroit pension office.

In 1878 her second husband died and she moved to Portland, Mich., as also did her daughter, Mrs. M. E. Bice, with whom she has lived ever since. They came to Tecumseh 12 years ago. She was the mother of 4 children, one son and three daughters, but only one of them, Mrs. Bice, is now living.

She was converted at the age of 15, joined the M. E church and was a faithful member of this, the church of her choice, at her death. Of her it may be truthfully said, she was lovely in her character, beautiful in her life and resigned and peaceful in her death She was a genuinely sincere Christian, truly devoted to the church and generous in the support of the Gospel.

The testimony of her friends is that she was beloved by all who knew her. Many will mourn her death, but her only daughter, Mrs. Bice, feels her bereavement only as a daughter can the departure of such a mother, so gentle, kind and loving, but her sweet memory like the perfume of a broken vase, will remain to fill the whole room of her soul while life lasts.

Beers Post attended her funeral services as a grateful tribute of respect to the memory of a noble, patriotic and loyal woman. The veteran soldier has always regarded the army nurse as a very dear friend. It is true that not many of them were in the hospital under their tender ministrations, but out in the more active service, yet they feel toward them as Christ does toward the righteous, "In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." While none of the members of Beers Post were ever in either of these large hospitals where she was one of the principal nurses for three years, yet many of their comrades were, and her tender, loving services to them while sick, wounded and dying are as truly and gratefully appreciated as if rendered to themselves. Her services were just as much a factor in the Grand Army of the Republic as the soldier himself She could not do battle for her country, but she could and did help those that could.

Comrades, let us learn this lesson from the example of the departed one: If there is anything in the battle of life that ought to be done and we cannot do it, let us help those that can do it.

On the occasion of the funeral held in the M. E. church, Rev. M. T. Seelye delivered a very impressive and appropriate discourse, and then the remains of the deceased were laid away to rest in Brookside cemetery to await the Resurrection Morn.

CHAPLAIN OF BEERS POST.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

Council Chamber, Village of Tecumseh.

Regular meeting held February 4th, 1901

Present, the president and clerk, Trustees Heck, Vedder, Eckert and Smith Absent, Avery and Shepard.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Clerk reported that he had received from the Chase National Bank 26 coupons of series 17 and bond No. 6 of the waterworks issue and that the same had been paid and cancelled. Report accepted.

The following appointments were confirmed: Election commissioners, Elijah Ames, F. J. Temple and Sam'l Shutt; board of registration, Trustees Vedder and Heck with the clerk.

On motion the following ordinance was submitted:

A ordinance granting certain side-track privileges to the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company:

The village of Tecumseh ordains: That the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company be hereby granted the right to construct and maintain a side track in the village of Tecumseh, along and upon the north half of Brown street, from the intersection of Brown street with the right of way of the Jackson Branch of said Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company, easterly to the public grounds at the northwest corner of Brown and Mill streets, thence easterly and northeasterly across said public grounds to Mill street, thence northeasterly and northerly across and along the east half of Mill street and across Water street to, and into, the mill yards at the northeast corner of Mill and Water streets; provided, however, that said side track shall at no time be used for the storage of freight cars, nor to obstruct the streets in any manner.

Moved that the above ordinance be passed and adopted. Aye. Heck, Vedder, Eckert and Smith; nay, none. Declared passed and adopted.

The finance committee reported favorably on the following bills and on motion the clerk was instructed to draw orders for the amounts:

D. L. Whitenack & Co., sundries per bill,	$5[illegible] 14
Jas. E[illegible]ott, blacksmith'g for year	93 65
R. J. Pulver, sundries per bill,	13 55

Wm. Hayden Milling Co., feed,	1 96
Clark Bros., water alarm,	11 50
H. W. Stevens, marshal,	125 00

The bill of the Tecumseh Electric Co. for lights for the month of January, $203 was allowed. The bill of same company for incandescent lamps for the council building, amounting to $2 00, was disallowed.

There being no further business the council adjourned to February 25th, 1901.

DON H. C. BOWEN, village clerk.

This is not War.

At a village beyond Chao-pei Khon a regiment of Bombay cavalry hacked to pieces a hundred or so supposed Boxers. An officer who saw this fight told me that all the Chinese thus slaughtered were unarmed. Most of them were sabred while on their knees praying for mercy. Even some of the Sepoy soldiers, who are not at all squeamish, shrunk before the task of hewing down helpless men. The division was delayed by dust storms and did not reach Pao Ting-Fu until October 22.—From "Punishment and Revenge in China," by Thomas F. Millard, in the February Scribner's.

Word from the Island of Hayti.

This letter from Mrs. Colp, was allowed the HERALD for publication through the kindness of Edward Russell.

DEAR UNCLE EDWARD:

Sometime ago Mr. Colp was engaged to go to Dutch Guiana to take the management of some gold mines for a Holland company. One day came a cablegram informing us that we were to sail from New York at 1 o'clock, December 19th on the Dutch steamer Oranje Nassau. At 12 o'clock of that day we summoned a cab, not daring to remain at the hotel for lunch, and were driven rapidly to the dock. Trust a Yankee to be on time. We went aboard the steamer at 12:45. She started at 6:15. As we had learned before that the Dutch move slowly, we were not surprised—and we are still moving slowly. I was the only woman who started from New York, excepting the stewardess, and we are at present the only white women aboard.

We did not sail for Amsterdam as expected, but are going direct to South America. Will reach our destination January 19th, just one month from the day we left New York. We stop so often.

We are now in port at Aux Cayes, Island of Hayti, an island which is interesting at least from its history. Formerly owned by the French who brought slaves from Africa, something less than 100 years ago the negroes revolted, drove the French from the island, established their own republic with one of their people for president. We make six stops at Hayti, but none at San Domingo, the other republic on the island.

At Cape Hayti, the first port, a relative of the president, a woman, came aboard. Although black, she is a cultured and stylish lady of wealth. Educated in Paris, she speaks English well, although French is the language of Hayti. We became quite friendly and at parting she gave me two beautiful handkerchiefs from Paris, where she informed me her clothes are made. She was bound for Port au Prince, the capitol and principal city of Hayti, a place of some 75,000 souls. Mr. Colp and I went ashore and through the courtesy of the lady were fortunate enough to meet the president. In no city of the United States have I seen more prettily dressed children than at Port au Prince.

On Saturday we reached Petite Gueves and there had the pleasure of going to market "all on a market day." It was a queer sight. The wares were spread on the ground on either side of the street, which was very narrow, and only space left between for a carriage to pass through. One could buy almost anything; here was a space devoted to the display of laces and ribbons, next to it persons were coming with their dishes to get the mid-day meal, consisting of steaming hot rice with currie or some other vile smelling stuff. Then there were crockery, sweet cakes, etc., while the air was laden with the odor of fish in the neighborhood.

On the 21st of December we had a severe storm. It was a grand and awful sight. First we seemed to be in a valley with the waves mountain high coming toward us from the distance. Anon we were carried up on those waves, and looking down into the depths, while the great ship careened to one side until the masts appeared to be at an angle of about 35 degrees Down, down we went again, then up—but at that time I began to feel that other things besides the waves were coming up and I went to my stateroom where my sensations for the next 24 hours were simply indescribable.

It was quite cold when we left New York, but in a couple of days we began to feel the warmth of a southern sun, and for a week have been near a land of perpetual summer, and now we are complaining of the heat as we were of the cold ten days ago Don't you know, as long as it is human nature to find fault with something, I consider it quite convenient to have weather that is never just right.

And this is New Year's Day on the water! The fourth year that we have spent the holidays away from the United States, and where the days were warm instead of cold. There is a big cargo of coffee to take aboard from Aux Cayes, but as this is a holiday, the natives will not work, hence we are lying idle. The water is too shallow for the ship to reach the dock, so we are at anchor in the sea. The natives bring the cargo in large row boats and also come in small boats to take the passengers ashore.

New Years' eve was celebrated right royally with us. The early hours were passed with music and a jolly time, interspersed with cigars, champagne, cakes and confections. At 12 o'clock, guns were fired, bells rung and as much noise made as possible. Then each man from the captain to the deck boy took my hand and wished me a happy new year. And now wishing you and all of the friends a prosperous and happy year, I will say good bye.

Your niece,
LUCY HAIGHT COLP.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, County of Lenawee ss Probate Court for the County of Lenawee.

At a session of the probate court for the county of Lenawee, holden at the probate office, in the City of Adrian, on the 7th day of February in the year one thousand nine hundred and one.

Present, Harry L. Larwill, judge of probate.

In the matter of the estate of HORACE R. BREWER, a minor.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Hettie W. Lawrence, guardian of said minor, praying that she may be authorized, empowered and licensed to sell the real estate described in said petition at private sale for reasons therein stated.

It is ordered that Monday, the 11th day of March next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published in the Tecumseh Herald, a newspaper printed and circulating in said county of Lenawee for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

The Skin and the Lungs.

"That the skin is intimately connected with the lungs is proved by the fact that our minor ills of the respiratory tract—colds, for instance—are almost always traceable to a checking of the perspiration, so that the impurities of the blood poison us," says Harvey Sutherland, in Ainslee's. "Everybody knows the story about the little boy that was covered with gold leaf as a cherub for some Roman pomp and how he died in agony a few hours afterward. The poisons manufactured by his own organisms slew him, to say nothing of his suffocation. Burns involving more than one-third of the general surface are fatal because the excretory powers of the skin are lessened beyond the abilities of the other depuratory organs to make up for.

"Varnish an animal and it will die in from six to twelve hours, say some authorities. This incontrovertible fact is matched by another equally incontrovertible—that nobody ever heard of any case of tarring and feathering that killed the victim. He might have had all kinds of trouble in getting the stuff off, and he might have felt a shock to his pride, but he didn't die that anybody ever heard of. I never assisted at a ceremony of this kind at either end of the joke, and so I can't speak as to the completeness with which the body is covered with the tar, but from my general knowledge of the character of the people of the west and southwest, where such sports are freely indulged in, I should say that it would most likely be a thorough and comprehensive pigmentation. It may be that the man breathes through the quills of the feathers stuck on, but I doubt it. I should think tar would seal up the pores of the skin quite as effectually as varnish, and it is a paint warranted to wear in all weathers and not to crack or scale off."

The Kiss That Made Him Mad.

A Boston man, in speaking of certain foreign characteristics, told the following story: "A middle aged American couple traveling abroad some years ago called in Rome on a sculptor with whom they had been acquainted years before. The visit passed off pleasantly, but at its close the host gallantly, but none the less to her surprise and chagrin, kissed the lady as he said goodby. The sculptor was an elderly man, but nevertheless it was a liberty, and she was not astonished to hear her husband ejaculate: 'Why, I never heard of such cheek! I've a good mind to go back and tell him what I think of him!'

"After two or three remarks of a similar tenor, in which the note of anger was rising, the wife decided to pour oil on the troubled waters and so, laying her hand on his arm, said: 'I know, dear, he shouldn't have kissed me, but what does it really matter? What does a kiss count in a woman of my years? He is a very old man, and probably he was following the fashion of the country.'

"Her husband turned an astonished face. 'Of course I don't mind his kissing you,' he raged, 'but,' and his voice rose, 'it's his having kissed me that has hurt my feelings!'

"The sculptor had followed the Italian custom and kissed both wife and husband."—New York Tribune.

Not the Bass Viol Man's Fault.

A capital story relating to good old times is still told in the Fen district of the eastern counties. As is well known by many and even now remembered by some, a bass viol was often procured to help the choirs in parish churches.

One lovely Sunday morning in the summer while the parson was droning out his drowsy discourse and had about reached the middle a big bull managed to escape from his pasture and marched majestically down the road, bellowing defiantly as he came. The parson, who was somewhat deaf, heard the bull bellow, but, mistaking the origin of the sound, gravely glanced toward the singers' seats and said in tones of reproof:

"I would thank the musicians not to tune up during service time. It annoys me very much."

As may well be imagined, the choir looked greatly surprised, but said nothing.

Very soon, however, the belligerent bull gave another bellow, and then the aggrieved parson became desperately indignant.—Cassell's Magazine.

A Mountain Accident.

A serious seeming accident with a fortunate termination is reported by a western exchange.

A man and his wife, while driving along a mountain road in Oregon, met with a curious mishap. The wagon was overturned, and the occupants fell out. The woman dropped into the branches of a tree 50 feet below, and the man went sliding and bumping fully 300 feet to the bottom of a ravine.

When he recovered his senses, he was comparatively unhurt and went to his wife's rescue, but it was an hour before he could extricate her from where she hung by her skirts.

Taken by Surprise.

"That cousin of yours is from Chicago, isn't he?" asked the village postmaster.

"Yes," replied Farmer Haycraft. "How d'ye know?"

"When he was in here yesterday and asked if there was any mail for the Haycrafts, I told him no. And then a second later when he was turning away I said: 'Hold up. There is one letter for them.' I noticed that when I said 'Hold up' he threw up his hands quicker'n lightning."—Chicago Tribune.

Dr. Pellet—Yes; I once attended them, but I never succeeded in getting a penny out of them.

Dr. Pill—Well, I have had better luck. I got a nickel out of one of the children after it had nearly choked the kid to death.—Exchange.

Discouraging.

"It's very discouraging," said the young man. "I confess that at times I considered myself a genius."

"But perhaps you are," suggested his friend soothingly.

"Impossible. I explained my plans to half a dozen hard headed, practical men, and not one of them seemed to think that I was a blamed fool."—Life.

The Commercial Instinct.

Tommy—No; I want a nickel.

Mamma—Why, you little rascal, you were quite satisfied to be good yesterday for a penny.

AFTER 20 YEARS.

A Lady of Grand Rapids Strikes the Right Thing.

Many extraordinary cases of the work of the little conqueror are coming to light in Michigan. Hundreds of them have been investigated by our representative and each but gives added strength to those which have gone before. Such well deserved words of praise are daily showered on this modern wonder-worker from all parts of the Union. Speaking of her experience, a lady of Grand Rapids, Mrs. Jas. Gardner, who resides at No. 309 Second street, says:

"For over twenty years I was bothered with kidney trouble and, despite treatment by physicians and using almost every remedy that came to my notice I received no permanent relief until I tried Doan's Kidney Pills. No one except those who have been through the mill of kidney complaint can tell the torture that one endures. The constant pains across my back extending up the right side; totally unable to lie on my right side; the stiffness and numbness of my limbs; the excruciating pain, is something much more easy to think about than to express. Many a time my husband has had to rub my back to get up the circulation before I was able to get on my feet. My family prevailed on me to try Doan's Kidney Pills but as I had used dozens of other remedies I had very little hope of finding relief. They persisted in their advice and in the fall of 1897 I used three boxes. I felt like a different person. I was in better health than I had been in years. The pain in my back left, I slept well at night, I could do my housework as well as I ever could, and I give the entire credit to Doan's Kidney Pills. I make this statement so that other women who suffer as I suffered may be in a position to know what to use if they wish to get rid of that too prevalent disease, kidney complaint."

DANDELIONS.

Oh, mute, wild prophets, what of life know ye,
Of eager breath?
E'en as I pray, ye molt your living gold
And, gray and hopeless on the morning breeze,
Drop into death.

Oh, wayworn brethren, what of earth know ye,
What end of strife?
Lo, as I grieve, ye bound from chilling sleep,
Breaking the firmament of the somber glebe
With beaming life!

—Philip Gerry in Lippincott's.

THE OUTWITTING OF SORROWFUL JIM.

Allyn rode across the prairie joyously and looked longingly toward the east, where the sun was scarce an hour high. The fresh, bracing air seemed to permeate every fiber of his being, and he drew in great breaths of it, feeling a wild sort of pleasure in the mere fact of being alive.

For once in three years he was happy, and he had been in that beatific state for two whole days. The rest of the cowboys of the outfit did not know what to make of it. Cayuse Ike swore he had been "locoed," for Allyn had been nicknamed by the camp Sorrowful Jim, and to see him boyishly exuberant and in a gay humor was an unheard of thing until the last day or so.

Allyn had once made the mistake of considering life a very serious matter indeed, and then, after trying for a year to practice law and not getting any one to practice upon he had given it up in disgust and migrated to the home of opportunity in hope of getting rich.

During his idle hours Allyn had fallen in love, and he took that very seriously also. It went hard with him, for he had nothing on earth except a few bonds an old aunt had left him, and the revenue from [illegible] amount to $300 a year. At the rate his practice was not increasing Methuselah would have been a youngster compared with Allyn if he waited for the revenue from his profession to enable him to marry.

"Jim," she said, "you are acting very foolishly. What does it matter if you haven't any money? I don't want money. I've got enough, or will have when I am 24, when I get control of it. That would keep us very nicely and would hold us up until you could establish a paying practice. Now don't be silly."

"Nelly," he said solemnly. "I cannot afford to marry now. People would say that I married you for you money, and I don't intend to put myself in a position where such a motive could be imputed to me. It would be unjust to me and to you."

"Well, Jim," and there were tears in her voice, "I don't think you are acting fairly toward me. Here I am an orphan, with nobody on the earth to love except an old guardian, and I despise him. You've made me love you so that life without you will be worse than no life at all, and now you say you cannot marry me until you make what it took my father a lifetime to accumulate. Why, by that time I'll have wrinkles and maybe false teeth and glasses and be a horrid, snuffy fussy old woman."

"No, Nell, I don't want to make $200,000. If I had $100,000 it would be all right. And it will not take long. Out west I will make it quickly. Just you stand fast and wait for me."

"Oh, I'll wait, but I think you are hateful and pigheaded just the same. Would you marry me if I hadn't any money at all?"

"Yes, gladly, and we would be happy too. You would manage somehow. But now my self respect will not allow me."

So it was that he went to make his fortune and at the same time peace with his unduly active conscience. To his utter disgust he found, after a year's prospecting, that gold mines were not at all plentiful, and that every foot of the mountains had been prospected over time and again. A year in Mexico assured him that the business of finding silver mines lying around loose had also played out long ago, and that it took lots of capital to start ranching on a paying basis. Funds were getting low, so he secured a place as one of the herdsmen of the XXX outfit and on account of his grave demeanor was promptly named by the other cowpunchers Sorrowful Jim. And the name stuck to him.

During all his wanderings he had written to Nell as regularly as possible and had begun to regret in a measure his Puritanical conscience. At $40 a month and grub he did not see that a fortune was in immediate prospect. Absence had indeed made his heart grow fonder, and he longed for a sight of Nell's laughing eyes and dimpled face.

Yet he would not acknowledge himself beaten or that he would give in. Much against his inclination he remained consumed with a desire to see her, yet impelled to remain in stiff necked pride, acting as avant courier and escort for a lot of wild eyed, long horned steers, all the while cursing himself for a fool. So he and the rest of the outfit did not have very much in common together, and he grew more and more unsociable and lonely.

Small wonder was it, then, that when he received a letter from her he felt that his voluntary exile was broken. His penance was done, and he was free to return to civilization and Nelly.

"You come on, Jim, dear," the letter said—"that is, of course, if you care to take an almost dowerless bride. I have now only enough left to bring me in $300 a year—exactly what you had. I do not own another thing on earth. I had concluded that the money without you is not worth having, and as long as you are so stubborn about it I saw that I must give in, so I have done so gladly. I have got to be 24, as you know, and have absolute control over my property. So, in order to get you, I have given away my fortune.

"You have cost me nearly $100,000, so I'm of the opinion that you had better come on and deliver yourself up as a victim. I don't propose to tell you another thing about it, as you have no right to know now. After—after—oh, well, some time I will tell you what I did with the rest of the money, but just now it is no affair of yours. You will simply have to take my word for it. Come on, Jim. I am anxious to see you."

So it was that Jim was so happy. He had only two more days to wait; then he would get his month's wages. He had $400 saved up, and he reflected that he and Nelly would manage to get along nicely on that for awhile. His pride was riding rampant, also, and his conscience was very self satisfied, indeed, for had he not held out against the allurements of beauty, wealth, position, ease—everything? It was a victory well worth rejoicing over.

* * * * * * *

The ceremony was over, the few intimate friends had taken their departure, and Jim and Nell looked at each other in a bewildered sort of way.

"I think we ought to take a trip, Jim. I'm so deadly tired of this place. I don't know what to do. Let's go to Europe. I've always wanted to go there."

"Nelly, are you daft? I can't afford a trip to Europe, and you know it. And you haven't any money either, so how are we to go?"

"I think it is very unkind of a person of your wealth to be taunting me with my poverty. For a man as rich as you, I think you are undoubtedly 'close.'" Her eyes twinkled merrily. "I want to go to Europe, and now I've got you to go with me you ought to be glad of the opportunity."

"Nell, dear, if I could afford it you know I would be delighted to take you."

"Well, you can afford it."

"I tell you I cannot."

"I know better—you can. Why, just look at these," and she handed him a bundle of books and papers. He picked up the first one and read the inside page: "First National Bank, in account with James M. Allyn. Deposited May 1, $35,000; May 9, $12,000; May 12, $12,000."

"What does this mean, Nell?" he asked wonderingly as he looked at another book and read: "Received May 9, bonds, mortgages, stocks and securities duly transferred and assigned to James M. Allyn, and aggregating $130,000, and more particularly described as follows: The Trust and Safe Deposit company." Nell was hugely enjoying the situation. She seated herself on the arm of the chair and said:

"You dear old stupid, mulish, stubborn thing. I told you the truth, for I gave everything I owed to you before I wrote that letter. I told the truth, for I reserved just enough to bring me in $300 a year."

"Well, I'll be"— She kissed him and stopped the word.

"Are you going to Europe?" she asked.

"Yes. I think I would enjoy the trip myself, but don't you think you paid too much for me?"

"Oh, I don't know. Not as long as you are nice as you are now. Come on. Let's get ready and catch the steamer leaving tomorrow evening."—St. Louis Star.

Consumption

is destruction of lung by a growing germ, precisely as mouldy cheese is destruction of cheese by a growing germ.

If you kill the germ, you stop the consumption. You can or can't, according to when you begin.

Take Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil: take a little at first.

The genuine has this picture on it, take no other.

It acts as a food; it is the easiest food. Seems not to be food; makes you hungry; eating is comfortable. You grow stronger. Take more; not too much; enough is as much as you like and agrees with you. Satisfy hunger with usual food; whatever you like and agrees with you.

When you are strong again, have recovered your strength—the germs are dead; you have killed them.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample, its agreeable taste will surprise you.

Two Sorts of Women.

"She is just the most wonderful woman I ever saw," said the speaker. "Why, she does every bit of her own work, and her house is spotless from cellar to garret. I never saw such housekeeping in all my life. I keep two servants myself, and I can't begin to come up to her standard. She does all her own sewing. She and her children are always exquisitely dressed, and there isn't a more stylish looking woman on the street than she. It's a standing wonder to me how she does it all."

A wonderful woman?

Yes, indeed. And there are so many of these women nowadays that they are fast ceasing to be wonderful. You find them in every town, on every street, in every social circle, and in every graveyard their names are chiseled on tombstones, and little children come often to lay flowers on "mamma's grave." They are the women who are trying to do the impossible—trying to make the silk purse out of the sow's ear, trying to bridge the 40 foot chasm with the 20 foot pole, trying to make both ends meet when they never were intended to meet, trying to keep up appearances, trying to conform to the requirements of society, burning the candle at both ends, going the pace that kills, using up their vital forces and dying 25 years too soon.

The really wonderful woman today is the woman who takes things easy. She is not known among her neighbors as a model housekeeper, but she takes a complete bath, a long walk and a long nap every day. She is not always exquisitely dressed, and she frequently wears the same bonnet and wrap two seasons, but she keeps two servants and employs a seamstress twice a year to help with the sewing. Her children do not look like walking fashion plates, but they are healthy and happy. She is not renowned for charitable work or club work or missionary work; but, on the other hand, she never has nervous prostration or headaches, and people tell her she looks as young as she looked the day she was married. Her name is seldom seen in the society columns of the newspaper, but the neighbors declare

Trying to Keep Out.

A sick man who was really near to death could not resist the temptation to have a little fun with his spiritual adviser. He had a lingering malady, but his days were certainly numbered by a few weeks at the most. He had not been known as a man of strong religious convictions, and yet there was little if anything which could be said against him. It was one of those delicate cases in which it is hard for the minister to do anything. Some one suggested to Rev. Paul Weyand, then stationed at Morningside, that he make a call upon the patient.

Going to the house, he found the man propped up in bed to relieve a smothering sensation. The sick man could scarcely talk above a whisper, and Rev. Mr. Weyand began to make subtle inquiries about his spiritual welfare. The invalid's answers were all noncommittal and evasive, and finally in despair the pastor asked:

"Do you really want to go to heaven, Mr. Blank?"

"Do I want to go to heaven?" repeated the dying man in a hoarse whisper. "Why, that's the place I've been fighting so hard to keep out of for the last two years!"—Pittsburg News.

Met on a Screen.

One of the happiest uses served by that wonderful and many named invention, the moving picture machine, appears in a story told in the London Music Hall.

A party of gentlemen were watching the pictures when in one of the South African scenes they recognized an officer friend. The wife of the officer, on being told of this, wrote to the manager and asked that this picture might be put on on a certain evening when she would purposely journey from Glasgow.

She had not seen her husband for over a year, but at last observed him in a group—on the screen of a cinematograph.

Her Own Selection.

Through oceans of remnants and ribbons the puffing big woman towed the meek little man.

"What in the world shall I send her, John?" she blustered. "Come, suggest something that would please Aunt Betsy. Something inexpensive. Why don't you say something?"

"Stationery, books or workboxes," suggested the meek little man.

"Nothing of the kind. You couldn't select a present for the ashman. I will look at some of those fancy boxes of soap."

They were before the soap counter, and she had her finger on an elaborate box containing six round cakes of white soap.

"Fancy and perfumed!" she said, lifting a cake. "The very thing that would please her the most. You may wrap that up, miss!"

"But, my dear," protested the meek little man.

"You just keep quiet. I don't care for any suggestions from a person without taste."

"Really"—

"Keep quiet, John Tenbrook!"

It seemed as if her voice had penetrated every corner of the great store, and the little man shrank away in mortification.

* * * * * * *

"Well, John, what did she say about the little gift? Something nice, I know."

"She returned it."

"What?"

"Yes; you will find a note in the box."

She unfolded the missive and read:

"Niece—I return the box of shaving soap. I am a little too old to appreciate the joke of being called the 'Bearded Lady.' Your Aunt Betsy."—Chicago News.

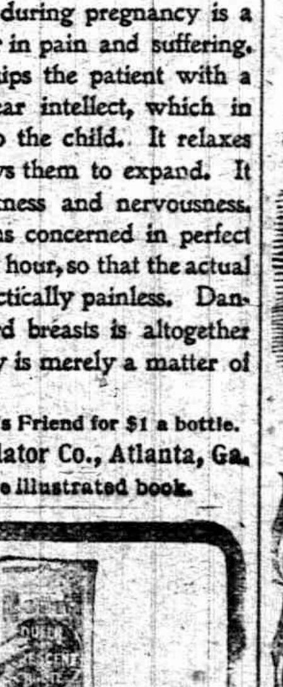
A Wife Says:

"We have four children. With the first three I suffered almost unbearable pains from 12 to 14 hours, and had to be placed under the influence of chloroform. I used three bottles of Mother's Friend before our last child came, which is a strong, fat and healthy boy, doing my housework up to within two hours of birth, and suffered but a few hard pains. This liniment is the grandest remedy ever made."



Mother's Friend

will do for every woman what it did for the Minnesota mother who writes the above letter. Not to use it during pregnancy is a mistake to be paid for in pain and suffering. Mother's Friend equips the patient with a strong body and clear intellect, which in turn are imparted to the child. It relaxes the muscles and allows them to expand. It relieves morning sickness and nervousness. It puts all the organs concerned in perfect condition for the final hour, so that the actual labor is short and practically painless. Danger of rising or hard breasts is altogether avoided, and recovery is merely a matter of a few days.

HOW A WOMAN GOT HER STRENGTH BACK.

She Took Our Vinol with Good Results.

WE WANT EVERY ONE TO KNOW ABOUT IT.

READ WHAT WE HAVE TO SAY. COME AND SEE US.

We don't want any one in this city to drag themselves through life in pain and misery for the want of enough strength to feel well and happy.

If you feel listless, without ambition and run down, it is a bad sign.

You are running grave chances. You are in a condition to be attacked by most any disease.

This feeling of debility is a symptom that your system is generally demoralized. You should take a tonic.

You should take Vinol, which we know and will guarantee will restore your strength.

Following is one case where it did this. Mrs. T. H. Boyle, of 56 Chestnut St., West Newton, Mass., says:

"Last spring I used one bottle of Vinol. At that time I was all run down and sick. I find that it did me lots of good, and by its use my strength came back to me."

Vinol is a delicious preparation, containing the active curative principles that are found in cod-liver oil, dissolved in a delicate table wine.

Vinol acts directly on the stomach, aiding digestion and at the same time creating a healthy appetite. It gives strength and vigor to every organ of the body.

We endorse Vinol, and guarantee its action, and will gladly refund to any one who is not satisfied the money which they paid for it.

LIFE OR DEATH

Every human being is growing better or worse, both morally and physically. There is no such thing as standing still in these respects. If you are troubled with nervousness, dyspepsia or constipation, you are probably steadily growing worse physically; and in a few years you will surely die, unless you obtain relief. Take warning before it is too late. Peptorene Tablets are a common sense remedy, harmless to the system; but unless you have delayed too long, they will save you as sure as the sun shines. Sold by druggists, 25 cents per box.

WENT SLOW LAST WEEK

Business in the Legislature Failed to Make a Record for Speed.

MANY COMMITTEES VISITING

Supreme Court Relief Killed—G. A. R. Badge Protection—Meeting of Supervisors—Advice to Farmers.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 12.—Last week was a very dull one in legislative circles, very little business of any importance being accomplished. Owing to the observance of John Marshall day the two houses did not convene until Tuesday afternoon, and from that time on the attendance in each house was very light, the senate quorum vanishing Thursday night, so that no session could be held Friday morning.

This light attendance was due to the fact that many committees were away on visits to state institutions. I have always insisted that, notwithstanding the great hue and cry that the taxpayers make against a ten days' recess for the purpose of having the institution visiting all done up at once and over with, it is good money in their pocket to have the legislature take it. All the taxpayers see in this recess is a general junket to the remote parts of the state, and I am free to confess that this is not calculated to inspire the average citizen with feelings of pride and satisfaction. However, the recess gives an opportunity for getting the visiting out of the way so that at its close the great majority of the two houses return and settle down to business, whereas, without such recess, the visiting extends over several weeks, and leaves the two houses with so few members present that practically nothing can be accomplished. Advantage is taken of the light attendance to kill certain bills which might be passed were there a full attendance, as was the case with the Colby primary election bill last week, while for the same reason action on other important measures is postponed until persons interested in them return, and thus, between the two millstones, the long suffering taxpayer gets the worst of it because, forsooth, it was his howl that prevented all the heavy absenteeism from being indulged in at the same time and being done with.

Bill That Was Put to Sleep.

As was predicted in my last letter, the bill providing for an increase in the number of justices of the supreme court was put to sleep in the very first round of the battle. There was a general impression up to the day that it came up for consideration that the bill would at least pass the senate, but all of a sudden sentiment changes, and on a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause only two votes were recorded in favor of the bill. The attempt to pass this bill having been signally defeated so soon after the rejection by the people of the proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to establish an intermediate court, makes it certain that the entire subject of furnishing relief for the supreme court will not be agitated again for many years. Time alone can determine whether the people and the legislature were wise or shortsighted in their treatment of this important subject.

Protection for Army Society Badges.

Another effort will be made this year to enact a law making it unlawful for persons who are not in good standing of the Grand Army of the Republic and Loyal Legion to wear the buttons of those orders. A similar measure was passed two years ago, but Governor Pingree vetoed it on purely sentimental grounds. Should the present legislature pass it, it will meet with executive sanction.

The question of franchises will come up for consideration during the present session, Representative Bauman of Detroit having introduced a bill which provides that before any franchise granting the use of any street, alley or public place becomes effective it shall be ratified by a majority of the electors of the affected municipality at a general election.

Defeat for Primary Elections.

The defeat of the Colby primary election bill, which applied to Wayne county only, has stirred up considerable excitement. The bill passed the house without a dissenting vote, but the senate disposed of it for all time before it was even considered by the elections committee to which it had been referred. Representative Dingley of Kalamazoo has introduced bills designed to extend caucus reform to all parts of the state by providing for the use of the Australian ballot at all primary elections. A general law doing away with political caucuses as at present conducted will also be introduced, so that the issue is not yet disposed of by any means. The indignation over the snap judgment on the Colby bill may possibly stir up a sentiment that will force the passage of a bill extending the reform to the entire state.

Representative Randall of Oceana thinks the university is receiving too much money. He argues that since the direct tax or the support of this institution was increased to one-fourth mill the taxable property of the state has so materially increased that a tax of one-fourth of a mill hereafter will produce all the revenue that the university requires for its need. He has, therefore, noticed a bill to change the rate.

Representative Stumpenhuesen of Washtenaw will endeavor to reform the morals of the people of the state by introducing a bill to prohibit the hunting and killing of birds, etc., on Sunday.

Some Advice to Farmers.

In urging that the farmers of Michigan devote more attention to dairy and other pursuits that would tend to keep the products of the farm on the land and thus enrich the soil, instead of selling everything produced and permitting the soil to deteriorate, Secretary of State Warner submitted some very instructive and significant figures in his annual address as president of the State Dairymen's Association at the Agricultural College last week. He called attention to the fact that in the twenty-eight counties of the southern four tiers of counties 62 per cent. of the farms and 70 per cent. of the improved lands of the state are located, and 85 per cent. of the wheat, 78 per cent of the corn and 65 per cent. of the oats produced in Michigan are grown. This section contains 60 per cent. of the population of the state. During the past ten years the total loss in polulation of these twenty-eight counties has been 40,000. Gains were noticed in only four counties, and these were readily traceable to local causes. Secretary Warner said that these figures show that there has been a migration of the people from the farms because of the lack of profit in farming. While there has been an increase of 15,000 cows and 8,000 cattle other than milch cows in this district in the last ten years there has been a loss of 15,000 horses, 125,000 hogs, and 540,000 sheep in the same period. The land, becoming poorer each year, furnishes subsistence for less stock. The farmers of the state were urged to feed their hay and grain on the farms, rather than rob the soil by following short-sighted methods that deplete it. A gratifying increase in the number of creameries and dairies during the past year was reported.

Meeting of the Supervisors.

About thirty-five counties were represented at the recent biennial meeting of the State Association of Supervisors, and the delegates received much information through an informal discussion of the tax laws. They listened attentively while Attorney General Oren explained his scheme of separating state and local taxes, the state government to be supported by the revenue from specific taxes exclusively, and adopted resolutions heartily indorsing the plan. They also adopted resolutions protesting against the passage of the pending bill to exempt from taxation the stock of foreign corporations held by residents of Michigan, believing this to be unjust so long as credits are taxed; requesting the legislature to enact an equitable law providing for a clearance sale of tax lands; asking for a law authorizing boards of supervisors to prescribe the form of bookkeeping to be followed by county officials; indorsing the bill substituting salaries to be fixed by boards of suprvisors for fees as compensation for county officers, except sheriff; and asking that the contagious disease law be amended so that the expense of handling no contagious diseases, except smallpox, cholera, scarlet fever and diphtheria shall be a charge against the county, but shall be met by the municipality in which the disease occurs. In nearly every county in the state there was a perfect flood of contagious disease bills presented at the January meeting of the boards of supervisors, and the evil has grown enormously of late. The supervisors also want the legislature to repeal the law which permits highway commissioners to purchase road machinery. Since the law requiring the concurrence of the township board in these matters was amended the machine agents have raided the state most successfully. A legislative committee was appointed to look after these requests before the legislature. The committee, which is composed of influential supervisors from various sections of the state, will meet here Thursday morning to map out a plan for an active campaign.

Governor Visits the Legislature.

Governor Bliss strolled into the lower house while it was in session a few days ago, and being observed by some of the lawmakers, was formally invited to address that body. The governor took advantage of the opportunity to inform the legislators that they were elected for the purpose of carrying out certain well defined reforms, and that they were expected to do their duty. Without entering into specification he stated that many of the bills already introduced were not in line with the party's pledges of economy, and the representatives were advised to kill these bills at the first opportunity. All proposed improvements and extensions at state institutions, except where absolutely necessary were declared to be excellent material for slaughter, and the house was informed that there were altogether too many boards and commissions in the state and taxpayers were not demanding any more as would seem to be indicated by the numerous bills creating them. It was broadly intimated that the bill to increase the membership of the supreme court did not meet with executive sanction, and altogether the governor's talk was one of the stiffest bits of economy oratory that has been heard in the legislature this year. Doubtless it will have its effect.

As to Cigarettes and Tanglefoot.

Representative Vandercook of Kent has no faith that any of the bills prohibiting the sale of cigarettes will become laws; and so he has introduced a bill to amend the law prohibiting the sale of tobacco in any form to minors. The present law prohibits the sale to minors under the age of 17 years, but the Vandercook amendment increases the age to 21 years.

The State Anti-Saloon League, which has its headquarters in this city, has not been very active thus far this season, and it is understood will not ask for any very radical changes in the laws, being quite well satisfied with them just as they are. The only change the league has thus far manifested a desire for is one designed to do away with the acceptance of straw bonds furnished by retail liquor dealers. The bill, which was introduced by Representative Dingley of Kalamazoo requires sureties on liquor bonds before qualifying to file with the clerk of the municipality a sworn statement or schedule of their property. Thus far not a single bill emanating from the liquor dealers has been introduced, and probably none will be.

Companies to "Pay the Freight."

As a means of helping along the proposed bill to establish the office of state fire marshal with a view to reducing the fire waste which reaches enormous proportions annually Representative Hastings has introduced a bill which requires local fire insurance agents to take out licenses the fee for which ranges from $25 to $100 per annum, according to the population of the place where the agent is located. The revenue from this source is to be used in defraying the expenses of the fire marshal system if it is established, and if not, is to go into the primary school fund.

HE IS DETERMINED.

Gov. Yates, of Illinois, Will Engorce the Law Against Prize Fights.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 12.—Regarding his determination to stop prize fighting in Illinois, Gov. Yates Monday made the following statement:

"The law and the people of this state are against prize fighting, and the law will be enforced whenever and wherever I have the power to enforce it. I have not the power to prohibit by proclamation, but I have the power to stop any fight, for the statute gives me the power 'on the application of any civil officer or otherwise' to call out all force necessary to execute the law whenever any body of men are about to break it. I have every confidence, however, that every Illinois sheriff will enforce the law without my interference. The law specifically makes prize fighting a felony and exhibitions of sparring and boxing a misdemeanor, the penitentiary being the punishment for the former and the jail and fine for the latter. I believe that when the public know this as well as sheriffs now do there will be no attempt to incur these penalties."

SHORTEN SESSIONS

Senator Pierson Wants to Limit Time for Introducing Bills.

REP. COLBY WILL TRY AGAIN

He Notices Six Bills to Abolish Conventions—Believes He Can Get Consideration by Coupling Other Counties With Wayne.

Lansing, Mich., Feb 12.—The senate convened Monday night at [illegible] o'clock and the house half an hour later.

Senator Pierson noticed a joint resolution providing that the rules of both houses be amended so that in legislatures to follow, the time limit for the introduction of bills shall be decreased from 50 to 30 days.

"My object is to shorten legislative sessions," said Pierson in explanation.

Senator Bangham noticed a bill to appropriate $50,000 with which to build a wing on the hospital of the state university for the treatment of people affected with mental diseases.

The senator says he believes the appropriations asked for by various state asylums for the treatment of similar diseases will aggregate about $50,000, and that it would be better to have but one such institution in the state.

Senator Palmer noticed a bill to amend the act governing the agricultural college board so as to cut out absolute sections, such as, for instance, the one requiring every student to work three hours each day on the farm. There are now women students.

Palmer also noticed skeleton bills for appropriations for an upper peninsula experiment station, as well as for an experiment station at South Haven.

Senator Doherty noticed a bill to place all other normal schools in the state on the same basis as the one at Ypsilanti as to the conferring of degrees.

Senator Goodell noticed a bill to amend the act relative to the board of county auditors of Wayne county, and then had the notice tabled.

He says he "presumes" it will be the same bill as that to be fathered by Rep. Baumann in the house, which provides that all the members of the board shall be elected by the people.

Rep. Colby in the house Monday night began to carry out his program to fight the senate for summarily killing his bill to abolish political conventions in Wayne county. He noticed no fewer than six new primary election bills, each to apply to Wayne and some other county.

Bay, Iron, Kent and Kalkaska are the counties thus coupled with Wayne, and one bill is to apply to the whole upper peninsula. Colby says that by coupling any other county with Wayne he can make the senate consider his bills under the rules.

Rep. Burns, of Grand Rapids, introduced a bill appropriating $89,000 to the state reform school at Coldwater. Of this amount, $65,000 is wanted for maintenance; $10,000 for a new heating plant; $6,000 for an electric light plant; $2,700 for two boilers; $2,500 for repairs to buildings and grounds; $1,500 for addition to a baby college; $1,000 for shower baths for children, and $1,200 for a greenhouse.

Rep. Nevins noticed a bill to appropriate $7,500 for the farmers' institute, or $2,000 more than usual; also a bill to allow the State Agricultural college a one-fifteenth mill tax, which amounts to about $73,000.

Rep. Wade noticed a joint resolution asking congress to call a constitutional convention with a view to having United States senators elected by a direct vote of the people.

Rep. McCall offered a resolution to pay the clergymen who conduct religious exercises in the house $3 a day, but Rep. Alward had it tabled, claiming the proposed action would be unconstitutional.

Rep. McFarlane noticed a bill to increase the term of Wayne county circuit court commissioners from two to four years and to take the appointment of the clerk in the commissioners' office out of the hands of the county auditors and place it in the commissioners' hands.

Rep. Randall, of Oceana county, noticed a bill to amend the act creating the state board for the registration and licensing of physicians and surgeons.

Her Dream Came True.

Port Huron, Mich., Feb. 12.—Miss Elma Czischke, aged 19 years, died at her home in Wales township Sunday afternoon under pathetic circumstances, and now sleeps in the gown which was to have been a part of her wedding trousseau. A few hours before the end came, she called her mother to the bedside and said that she had just had a dream, and in it she saw herself die. In her dream she saw a young undertaker friend, who was also a distant relative, come to their home. He laid her out in her wedding clothes. The final summons came, and the young woman passed away in the arms of her betrothed. The young undertaker, whom she had seen in her last dream, was called, and he dressed her in the handsome gown in which she was to have gone to the altar.

Murderer Aplin in Prison.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 12.—Samuel Aplin, sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of Lewis Campbell at Greenville, arrived at Jackson Monday, and unless executive clemency is extended to him, Aplin will spend the rest of his life here. He is 71 years of age, and during the last 25 years has served six terms in prison for various crimes. He is said to be a model prisoner.

$150 in Cash Burned.

Flint, Mich., Feb. 12.—A stove in the cellar set fire to the house of Wm. Wisner at Fenton Sunday night, and the building was destroyed. The loss is $1,000, with no insurance. One hundred and fifty dollars in cash in the house was destroyed.

McGovern Matched.

New York, Feb. 5.—Terry McGovern has been matched to fight Tim Haggerty, of Australia, who, it is claimed, is the champion of his class in that country. The fight will take place on April 30, at 126 pounds, for a purse of $5,000, at a place not decided upon. Haggerty, it is announced, already has sailed for this country, and he will be met in San Francisco by James C. Kennedy, who leaves for that city today.

Ball Player Dead.

Pittsburg, Feb. 5.—Word was received here yesterday that Tom O'Brien, the Pittsburg club's first baseman, died of consumption at Phoenix, Ariz., Sunday night. O'Brien had been in poor health since his trip to Cuba, and had gone to Arizona to build up.

HE IS TOO OLD.

Why Benton Hanchett Will Not Be Attorney General.

Washington, Feb. 12.—President McKinley has declined to appoint Benton Hanchett of Michigan attorney-general of the United States during the second term of his administration. John W. Griggs, of New Jersey, the present attorney-general, declines a reappointment. Mr. Hanchett is about 60 years old and that is the reason he will not be appointed. The president wants an attorney-general not over 50 years of age. Atty-Gen. Griggs was 48 when appointed.

Benton Hanchett's name was submitted to the president jointly by both Senators McMillan and Burrows last week. The president is acquainted with Mr. Hanchett's high abilities as a lawyer. Although not in congress at the time, he is familiar with the circumstances of how President Harrison in the closing weeks of his administration in 1893 elevated Justice Jackson of the United States court of appeals to the supreme bench, and proposed Mr. Hanchett for his successor. The time was too short to consummate the plan to make the Michigan man an appeals justice, although no one questioned that it would be an eminently fitting appointment.

President McKinley at first was inclined to consider Mr. Hanchett favorably for attorney-general, but when he learned his age he informed the senators that a man 60 years of age was too old to be attorney-general. The president has never quite forgotten the small troubles that came to the state department in 1897, when he appointed John Sherman, then past 75 years, to be his secretary of state. The troubles, such as they were, occurred because Mr. Sherman's mental qualities were in their decline. Largely on account of the Sherman experience, the president is averse to bringing a man near 60 or over into his cabinet, particularly as attorney-general. He is further averse to the appointing of men along toward that age to federal judgships. Men between 40 and 50 are the ones that are in line for judicial positions, and for the office of attorney-general.

No other Michigan name has been submitted for attorney-general, and probably none will be. The president is considering several names from other states for the position.

Michigan Crop Report.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 12.—In the official crop report for February, issued Monday night, Secretary of State Warner says there was very little precipitation in the southern counties during the first half of January, while in the central and northern counties there was a considerable fall of snow. On the 15th ult., the average depth of snow in the southern counties was 1.16 inches, central counties, 2.05 inches, and northern counties 9.09 inches. On the 31st ult. this had increased to 3.05, 3.37 and 11.28 inches respectively.

In reply to the question "has wheat suffered injury from any cause during January," 226 correspondents answered yes and 346 no. One hundred and forty-nine correspondents report that the ground has been well covered with snow during January, while 414 report that it was practically bare.

Live stock throughout the state is thrifty and in good condition, the average condition of horses being 97, and of cattle, sheep and swine, 96.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Feb. 12.—Michigan pensions were granted Monday as follows: Additional—Thomas W. Dougherty, soldiers' nome, Kent, $10; James W. Frazee, Riverside, $10. Supplemental—Augustus H. Follsom, Paw Paw, $6. Increase—Norman A. Smith, Pontiac, $6; George Lambert, Hillsdale, $50; Lyman E. Bement, Ravenna, $12; John Rhinevault, Flint, $12; Oscar Neal, Grand Rapids, $10; Frank Filble, Petersburg, $24; Joseph Rubens, Escanaba, $8; Peter Neetcher, Prattville, $8; Emery J. Yost, Frontier, $14. Reissue—Elijah Halsel, Howard City, $10. Widows—Almeda Watterson, St. Joseph, $8; Sylvia H. Lamoreux, Holland, $8; Helen F. North, Dildine, $8; Cynthia M. Ayers, Bancroft, $12; Martha E. Haight, Mecosta, $8; Elnora E. Myers, Mount Pleasant, $8; Matilda Siggins, Burr Oak, $12; Anza Boneman, Brooklyn, $8; Janes E. Lusha, Menominee, $8. War with Spain: Widows—Jane A. Gillespie, Detroit, $12.

Wife is Anxious.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 12.—Henry Summerville, aged 41, a blacksmith of Jackson, has been missing for several months. He has dark hair, gray eyes and is undersized. Summerville left Jackson last April and his wife has not heard from him directly since that time. Indirectly she heard that he was in Grand Rapids last September and applied to Masonic friends for aid. Mrs. Summerville is supporting herself and three small children, taking in washing, and is anxious to hear from her lost husband. She believes that he is either out of his head or has been killed.

Took Rough on Rats.

Flint, Mich., Feb. 12.—The funeral of Mrs. Henry Frost took place in Forest Monday. Mrs. Frost on account of ill-health took a dose of "rough on rats" on Friday, and died that night. She leaves a husband and family, and was a sister of George Meade, at one time county surveyor.

Ex-King Milan Dead.

Vienna, Feb. 12.—Ex-King Milan of Servia is dead, as the result of an attack of pneumonia from which he had been suffering for several days. The remains will be interred at Kronchol, a sacred monastic shrine in Smyrna Slavonia, with the honors due a member of the reigning dynasty.

On Leave of Absence.

Washington, Feb. 12.—It is said at the state department that Lloyd Griscom, United States secretary of legation and charge at Constantinople, has not resigned but is coming home on leave of absence, to which he is titled.

Grain Supply.

New York, Feb. 12.—The statement of the visible supply of grain, in store and afloat, on Saturday, Feb. 9, as compiled by the New York produce exchange is as follows: Wheat, 58,494,000 bu, decrease 1,278,000 bu; corn, 16,051,000 bu, increase 1,226,000 bu; oats, 10,290,000 bu, increase 361,000 bu; rye, 1,205,000 bu, increase 10,000 bu; barley, 1,779,000 bu, decrease 94,000 bu.

Dividends Declared.

Montreal, Feb. 12.—At a meeting of the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. Monday the usual dividend of 2 per cent on the preference stock for the half year ended December last was declared, and a dividend of 2½ per cent for the same period was declared on the common stock.

NO BALLOTS CAST

Many Shots Fired in a Riot at a St. Louis Polling Place.

A POLICE SERGEANT WOUNDED

Two Negroes Also Injured—While the Riot Was Going on Some One Carried the Ballot Box from the Polling Booth.

St. Louis, Feb. 12.—More than 150 shots were fired, a sergeant of police and two negroes were wounded and a ballot box was stolen in the course of a riot about the second district polling place of the fourth ward at Twelfth and Linden streets early Monday evening.

It was only after a riot call had brought Capt. Kiely with 40 policemen and riot guns to the scene that a semblance of order was restored. Even then the streets were filled with negroes and some white men, all of whom were armed, many of them intoxicated and looking for trouble.

Not a ballot was cast there during the day.

The wounded were:

Sergeant Quinlivan, of the fourth district, shot in the leg.

George Monroe, shot in the right arm.

Fred Jones, shot in left leg.

The trouble had been brewing all afternoon. When it came time to open the polls the Tinker judges had not yet arrived. Later the Tinker men disagreed with the Wells men as to the advisability of opening the back door of the polling place. One claimed that the other had a host of heelers in waiting, and if the back door was open these men would press in and prevent their opponents from voting. The Noonan crowd claimed that both the other factions were jockeying to prevent any voting whatever because, they said, the ward was overwhelmingly for Noonan. The judges, being unable to agree, no voting was done.

That was the situation up to the time of the riot.

The first shot was on Twelfth street just south of Linden. Rumor has it that the first man to draw a revolver was a negro named Arthur Gardiner. As soon as the shot rang out the street about the polling place became the scene of a fusillade. Every man drew one or two revolvers.

Judge John J. Ryan ran out from his desk to the street and shot squarely at a negro advancing upon the booth, gun in hand. There was no time to make arrests, but the police under Sergeant Quinlivan rushed upon the bolder rioters, attempting to disarm them. It was while he was arresting George Munroe, who had resisted an attempt to disarm him, that Sergeant Quinlivan was shot. Detective McGrath ran to his assistance, disarmed the negro and in the midst of a scattering fire wrapped a handkerchief about the sergeant's wounded leg to stop the flow of blood from a severed artery.

Ten policemen were on the spot within a few moments and succeeded in quelling the riot and dispersing the 200 negroes who had figured most prominently in the affray.

After order had been restored it was found that the ballot box had been stolen. Every judge and clerk had been at the windows or front door holding the fort. Some one slipped in the back way and took the box from behind them. The upshot was that no votes were polled in the second district of the fourth ward.

New British Loan.

New York, Feb. 12.—Tenders for the new issue of British exchequer notes were the subject of cable negotiations between bankers in this city and London Monday. The Western National bank notified customers that the notes could be purchased around 97½ and offered to negotiate bids. Other agencies were also believed to be active in representing investors in this country, but since the offering has not taken the form of public subscription little is known about the details of the bids.

Bail for Barker Deferred.

New York, Feb. 12.—Marshall van Winkle, of counsel for Thomas G. Barker, who shot the Rev. John Keller in Arlington, N. J., a week ago, applied to Judge Blair in court of common pleas at Jersey City Monday for an order directing County Physician Converse to visit the wounded man from time to time and report to the court on his condition, in order that an application may be made to admit the defendant to bail. Judge Blair deferred the matter of admitting Barker to bail a few days.

A Great Naval Display.

London, Feb. 12.—The departure of the duke and duchess of Cornwall and York for Australia will be the occasion of a great naval display at which the king and queen will be present. The British channel squadron will escort the heir apparent as far as Gibraltar. The continued speculation as to the visit of their majesties to Germany has brought out an official utterance that it is not even certain any visit will be made.

In Favor of American Wife.

Washington, Feb. 12.—The state department has decided in favor of the American wife of Marcus Ezzegui as the rightful possessor of the $5,000 indemnity which the government of Morocco is to pay on account of the killing of Ezzegui. The money has not been received at the state department, but it is said there is no doubt that it will be forthcoming.

Aid to Pan-American.

Washington, Feb. 12.—Senator Depew Monday reported from the committee on expositions a bill appropriating $500,000 for the Buffalo Pan-American exposition.

ALL JOINTS CLOSED.

Topeka Saloons Shut Up as a Result of Citizens' Meeting.

Topeka, Kan., Feb. 12.—As a result of the meeting of the citizens of Topeka all the joints of the city were closed Monday night. The citizens made the peremptory order that the sales be discontinued by noon, and so far as is known the order was regarded.

Early Monday morning Chief of Police Stahl, with some of his officers, made the rounds of the joints and notified the keepers as far as they could be found that they would be expected to close at once. They were in each case presented with a printed copy of the citizens ultimatum and commanded in the interest of law and order to close at once. Chief Stahl told the jointists that there was an army of a thousand men waiting to march on a minute's notice to close the joints, and that they were of a class that would not be frightened out of performing their duty as they interpreted it. Notices were slipped in under the doors of the closed places.

In only one place did the officers find any liquor sold, and the proprietor agreed to close at once. Last night Topeka was practically a dry town so far as the joints were concerned. Some of the drug stores are said to be doing a thriving business, but the condition is much different from a week or even a day ago when there were about 80 joints running openly, most of them equipped with the finest of fixtures.

The citizens' committee has made all the necessary arrangements for the enforcement of the order regarding joints and will insist that the order be carried out to the letter and that every drinking place be closed and the stock and fixtures removed from the city by next Friday noon. The condition of public sentiment in Topeka is something remarkable. There has never been anything here approaching it. The vigilance committee is ready to move on very short notice.

Ask for Sunday Closing.

Philadelphia, Feb. 12.—At the weekly meeting Monday the Presbyterian ministers of this city adopted a petition to the management of the Pan-American exposition asking that the exhibition be closed on Sundays. This action was taken in compliance with a request made by the American Sabbath union.

Memorial to the Queen.

London, Feb. 12.—King Edward, responding to the inquiries of the lord mayor, Mr. Frank Green, respecting a national memorial to Queen Victoria, suggests that a small committee should be formed of members of the present and former governments to consider the matter.

All Are Well.

Caracas, Venezuela, Feb. 12.—The Hamburg-American line cruising yacht Prinzessin Victoria Luise, which sailed from New York Jan. 26, via Port Au Prince, etc., on a West Indian cruise, has arrived at La Guayara. All on board are well.

Claims Reported On.

Washington, Feb. 12.—Senator Warren Monday reported from the committee on claims an omnibus claims bill. It aggregates $2,989,008, for which there are 775 claimants. The claims include, under the Bowman act, $902,959; French spoliation claims, $479,718; Selfridge board findings, $809,133; state claims, $477,894. The membership of the court of claims is increased from five to nine.

To Reduce Metal Tariff.

Washington, Feb. 12.—Representative Babcock, of Wisconsin, has introduced a bill repealing a considerable part of "schedule C" on metals of the tariff act of July 24, 1897. The proposed repeal applies to bar iron, round iron, beams, boiler iron, anchors, hoop iron, railway bars, steel ingots, wire of various kinds, mills and wheels for railway purposes.

The Chinese Cook.

Mrs. White determined in the first flush of her newly wed dignity that she was not going to be "squeezed" by the Chinese cook and the storekeeper, as it was quite plain every one else was. Accordingly she purchased scales and weights and announced her intention of personally weighing everything. For some days this method proved very satisfactory, but she was sometimes a little puzzled on finding that the provisions occasionally weighed more than was charged for.

One day the mystery was solved. She was carefully weighing a chicken. In China not only is everything, living and dead, sold by weight, but fowls are always supplied alive. The chicken during the weighing operation suddenly entered a vigorous objection and began to flap and struggle with all its might, and during these flappings and strugglings something weighty fell with a thud to the floor, evidently from somewhere about the chicken. This turned out to be a large piece of lead which had been cunningly fastened under one of the wings. Further investigation led to the discovery of a similar piece underneath the other wing. The overweight of the past few days was now accounted for.—Chambers' Journal.

Christening the Children.

An English parson of a church in Berbice, British Guiana, writes entertainingly of his pastoral duties. In the matter of christening the choice of name is left to the taste or fancy of the parents. This leads to strange combinations. He copies from his register "Nannie Bellona," "Trank Locust" and "Whisky Emmanuel." Of earlier times he tells the following:

One black man brought his child, and when the minister asked its name he said, "Seriatim ad Valorem."

On another occasion the parson asked, "What is the name of the child?"

The father said, "Ax, parson." The minister looked inquiringly at the man and said:

"But I don't understand you."

"Well, parson," said the man, "my mind gi'e me to go troo de New Testament. I have had four boys. The first was named Matthew, the second Mark, the third Luke and the fourth John. Now, this, the fifth one, is to be Ax [Acts], parson."

The levees on both sides of the Mississippi are of sufficient extent that if they were built in a single straight line they would be about 1,300 miles long or long enough to stretch the greater part of the distance between New Orleans and New York.

Arms and The Woman

CHAPTER XXII.

I was very unhappy. Three days passed, and I saw neither Phyllis nor Gretchen. The city was still talking about the dramatic ending of Prince Ernst's engagement to the Princess Hildegarde. Twice I had called at the Hohenphalian residence to pay my respects. Once I was told that their highnesses were at the palace. The second time I was informed that their highnesses were indisposed. I became gloomy and disheartened. I could not understand. Gretchen had not even thanked me for my efforts in saving her the unhappiness of marrying the prince. And Phyllis, she who had called me "Jack," she whom I had watched grow from girlhood to womanhood, she, too, had forsaken me. I do not know what would have become of me but for Pembroke's cheerfulness.

Monday night I was sitting before the grate reading for the hundredth time Gretchen's only letter. Pembroke was buried behind the covers of a magazine. Suddenly a yellow flame leaped from a pine log, and in it I seemed to read all. Gretchen was proud and jealous. She believed that I loved Phyllis and had made her a princess because I loved her. It was the first time I had laughed in many an hour. Pembroke looked over his magazine.

"That sounds good. What caused it?"

"A story," I answered. "Some day I shall tell you all about it. If you will excuse me, cousin mine, I'll make a call on her serene highness the Princess Hildegarde."

Just then the door opened and Pembroke's valet came in. He handed a card to me, and I read upon it, "Count von Walden." I cast it into Pembroke's lap.

"That's the man. He is the inseparable of the Prince of Wortumborg." Then to the valet, "Show him up."

The count gravely passed over the threshold.

"Good evening," he said, with a look of inquiry at Pembroke.

"This gentleman," said I as I introduced him, "will second me in the affair tomorrow morning. I suppose you have come to make the final arrangements?"

"Pardon me," began Pembroke, "but I do not understand"—

"Oh, I forgot! You are," I responded, "to be my second in a duel tomorrow morning. Should anything happen to me it were well to have a friend near by, better still a relative. Well, count?"

"The prince desires me to inform you that he has selected pistols at your request, and despite the fact that he has only the use of his left hand he permits you to use either of yours. There will be one shot each, the firing to be drawn for on the grounds. The time is 6, the place one mile out on the north road in the rear of the Strassburg inn. I trust this is entirely satisfactory to you?"

"It is," I answered.

"Then allow me to bid you good night." He bowed and backed toward the door. He remained a moment with his hand on the knob, gazing into my eyes. I read in his a mixture of amusement and curiosity. "Good night." And he was gone.

Pembroke stared at me in bewilderment. "What the devil"—

"It is a matter of long standing," said I.

"But a duel!" he cried impatiently. "Hang me if I'll be your second or let you fight! These are not the days of Richelieu. It is pure murder. It is against the law."

"But I cannot draw back honorably," I said. "I cannot."

"I'll notify the police and have them stop it," he said, with determination.

"And have us all arrested and laughed at from one end of the continent to the other. My dear cousin, that man shot the dearest friend I had in the world. I am going to try to kill him at the risk of getting killed myself. He has also insulted the noblest woman that ever lived. If I backed down, I should be called a coward. The people who respect me now would close their doors in my face."

"But you have everything to lose, and he has nothing to gain."

"It cannot be helped," said I. "The woman I love once fought a duel for me. I cannot do less for her. You will be my second?"

"Yes. But if he wounds you woe to him."

"Very well. I'll leave you," said I.

It was not far to the residence of their highnesses, so I walked.

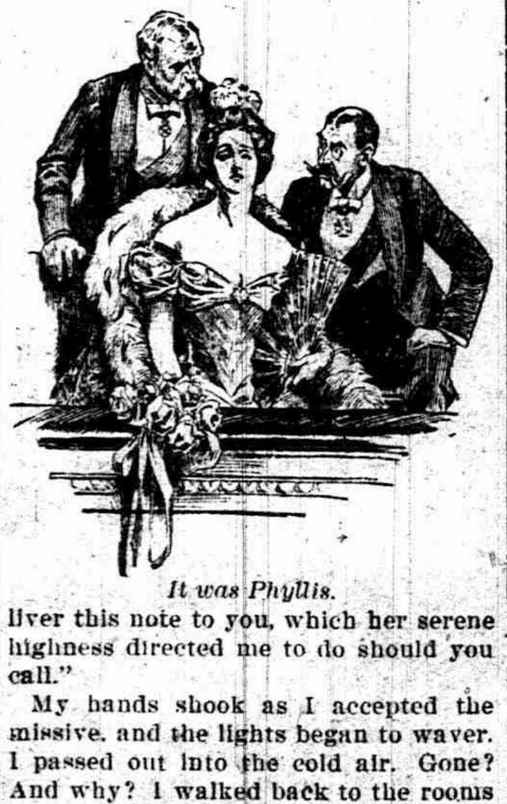
The liveried footman took my card.

"Present it to her highness the Princess Hildegarde," I said as I passed into the hall.

"Her serene highness has left town, I believe, your excellency. Her serene highness the Princess Elizabeth is dining at the palace."

"Gone?" said I.

"Yes, your excellency." He examined my card closely. "Ah, allow me to deliver this note to you, which her serene highness directed me to do should you call."



It was Phyllis.

My hands shook as I accepted the missive, and the lights began to waver. I passed out into the cold air. Gone? And why? I walked back to the rooms in feverish haste. Pembroke was still at his reading.

"Hello! What brings you back so soon?"

"She was not at home," I answered. I threw my coat and hat on the sofa. I balanced the envelope in my hand. I drew forth the contents and read it.

> Herr Winthrop—Forgive the indiscretion of a princess. On my honor I am sorry for having made you believe that you inspired me with the grand passion. Folly finds plenty to do with idle minds. It was a caprice of mine which I heartily regret. There is nothing to forgive; there is much to forget. However, I am under great obligations to you. I am positive that I shall love my sister as I have never loved a human being before. She is adorable, and I can well comprehend why you should love her deeply. Forgive me for playing with what the French call your summer affections. I am about to leave for Hohenphalia to prepare the way for the new sovereign. Will you kindly destroy that one indiscreet letter which I, in the spirit of mischief, wrote you last autumn?
>
> THE PRINCESS HILDEGARDE.

The envelope reminded me of a rusty scabbard; there was a very keen weapon within. I lit my pipe and puffed for awhile.

"Cousin," said I, "I have a premonition that I shall not kill Prince Ernst of Wortumborg at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning."

"What put that into your head? You are not going to back down after all, are you?"

"Decidedly not. Something strikes me that I shall miss fire."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Pembroke. "I have been thinking it over, and I've come to the conclusion that it would not be a bad plan to rid this world of a man like your prince. It'll all come out right in the end. You will wed the Princess Hildegarde just as sure as—as I will not wed her sister." He spoke the last words rapidly, as though afraid of them.

"I shall never marry the Princess Hildegarde," said I. "She has gone."

"Gone? Where?"

"It matters not where. Suffice it is that she has gone. Pembroke, you and I were very unfortunate fellows. What earthly use have princesses for you and me? The little knowledge of court we have was got out of cheap books and newspaper articles. To talk with kings and princesses it requires an innate etiquette which commoners cannot learn. We are not to the manner born. These princesses are but candles, and now that we have singed our mothy wings and are crippled so that we may not fly again let us beware. This may or may not be my last night on earth. Let us go to the opera. Let us be original in all things. I shall pay a prima donna to sing my requiem from the footlights before I am dead."

"Jack!" cried Pembroke anxiously.

"Oh, do not worry!" said I. "I am only trying to laugh, but I can't."

"Are you truly serious about going to the opera?" he asked.

"Yes. Hurry and dress," said I.

So we went to the opera. They are full of wonderful scenes, these continental opera houses. Here and there one sees the brilliant uniforms, blue and scarlet and brown, glittering with insignias and softened by furs. Old men with sashes crossing the white bosoms of their linen dominate the boxes, and the beauty of woman is often lost in the sparkle of jewels. And hovering over all is an oppressive fragrance. Pembroke's glasses were roving about. Presently he touched my arm.

"In the upper proscenium," he said.

It was Phyllis. The chancellor and the Grand Duke of S—— were with her.

"We shall visit her during the first intermission," said I.

"You had better go alone," replied Pembroke. "I haven't the courage."

The moment the curtain dropped I left the stall. I passed along the corridor and soon stood outside the box in which Phyllis sat. I knocked gently.

"Enter!" said a soft voice.

"Ah," said the chancellor, smiling as he saw me. "Duke, I believe their majesties are looking this way. Let us go to them. I am pleased to see you, Herr Winthrop. Duke, this is the gentleman who has turned us all upside down."

The duke bowed, and the two left me alone with Phyllis.

There was an embarrassing silence, but she surmounted it.

"Why have you not been to see me?" she asked. "Are you done with me now that you have made me a princess?"

"I did call, but was told that you were indisposed," said I.

"It was because I did not see your card. I shall never be indisposed to my friends—the old ones. However, they will be crowding in here shortly. Will you come and see me at 4 tomorrow afternoon?"

"Is it important?" I was thinking of the duel when I said this.

"Very—to you. You have a strange funereal expression for a man who is about to wed the woman he loves."

"Your sister has left town?" not knowing what else to say.

"Only for a few days. At least so she told me. Have you seen her?"

"No, I have not. A princess!" dropping into a lighter tone. "You carry your honors well. It was to be expected of you. I might have made you a queen, but that would not have changed you any."

"Thank you. Do you know, a title is a most wonderful drawing apparatus? Since Thursday it has been a continued performance of presentations. And I care absolutely nothing for it all. Indeed, it rests heavily upon me. I am no longer free. Ah, Jack, and to think that I must blame you! I have been longing all the evening for the little garden at home. Yes, it will always be home to me. I am almost an alien. I would rather sell lemonade to poor reporters who had only 25 cent pieces in their pockets than queen it over a people that do not interest me and with whom I have nothing in common." She smiled, rather sadly, I thought, at the remembrance of that garden scene so long ago.

"Time has a cruel way of moving us around," said I, snapping the clasps on my gloves and pulling the fingers and looking everywhere but at her. I was wondering if I should ever see her again. "When is the coronation to take place?"

"In June. The king does not wish to hurry me. You see, I must learn to be a princess first. It was kind of him. And you will be at Hohenphalia to witness the event?"

"If nothing happens. We live in a continual uncertainty."

She regarded me somewhat strangely.

"Is there a significance in that last sentence?"

"No," I answered. I felt compelled to add something. "But here come some of your new admirers. Their glittering medals will make me feel out of place if I remain. I shall do my best to accept your invitation."

"Jack, you are hiding something from me. Are you going to leave the city to search for her?"

"No," said I. "The truth is," with a miserable attempt to smile, "I have an engagement tomorrow morning, and it is impossible to tell how long it will last. Good night."

Fate played loose with me that night. As I was turning down the corridor I ran into the prince. He was accompanied by Von Walden and an attache whom I knew.

"Good evening," said the prince. "Do you not prefer the French opera, after all?"

"All good music is the same to me," I answered, calmly returning his amused look with a contemptuous one. "Wagner, Verdi, Gounod or Bizet, it matters not."

"Till we meet again," he said as I continued on. "Shall I add pleasant dreams?"

"I am obliged to you," I answered over my shoulder, "but I never have them. I sleep too soundly."

"Cousin," said I later, "what was that opera?"

"I forgot to bring along a programme," said Pembroke.

CHAPTER XXIII.

When Pembroke and I arrived at the Strassburg inn, on the north road, neither the prince nor Von Walden was in evidence. I stepped from our carriage and gazed interestedly around me. The scene was a picturesque one. The sun, but half risen, was of a rusty brass, and all east was mottled with purple and salmon hues. The clearing, a quarter of a mile away, where the prince and I were to settle our dispute, was hidden under a fine white snow, and the barren trees which encircled it stood out blackly. Pembroke looked at his watch.

"They ought to be along soon. It's five after 6. How do you feel?" regarding me seriously.

"As nerveless as a rod of steel," I answered. "Let us go in and order a small breakfast. I'm a bit cold."

"Better let it go at a cup of coffee," he suggested.

"It will be more consistent, that is true," I said. "Coffee and pistols for two."

"I'm glad to see that you are bright," said Pembroke. "Hold out your hand."

I did so.

"Good. So long as it doesn't tremble I have confidence of the end."

We had scarcely finished our coffee when the prince, followed by Von Walden, entered.

"Pardon me," he said, "for having made you wait."

"Permit me," said I, rising, "to present my second. Mr. Pembroke, his highness Prince Ernst of Wortumborg."

And the four of us left the inn and crossed the field. The first shot fell to me. Pembroke's eyes beamed with exultant light. Von Walden's face was without expression. As for the prince, he still wore that bantering smile. He was confident of the end. He knew that I was a tyro, whereas he had faced death many times. I sighed. I knew that I should not aim to take his life. I was absolutely without emotion. There was not the slightest tremble in my hand as I accepted the pistol. There is nothing like set purpose to still the tremors of a man's nerves. I thought of Hillars, and for a moment my arm stiffened; then I recalled Gretchen's last letter. I fell to wondering where the bullet would hit me. I prayed that his aim might be sure.

"Many persons think that I am a man without compassion," said the prince, as we were about to step to our places. "I have an abundance of it. You have everything to lose, and I have nothing to gain. If it is your desire, I shall be happy to explain that you wish to withdraw. But say the word."

He knew what my reply would be. "Withdraw," said I, "and have you laugh at me and tell your friends that I acted the poltroon? Really, you do me injustice."

"And do you hate me so very much?" mockery in his eyes.

"Not now. I did hate you, but hatred is a thing we should not waste any more than love. I have taken the bird and the nest from your hands; that is more than enough. You are merely an object for scorn and contempt and indifference now. No; I have no wish to withdraw."

"You read between the lines," he said. "Indeed, I should like nothing better than to have the privilege of calling you a poltroon and a coward and to tell your princess of it." He sauntered back to his place leisurely.

"Aim the slightest to the left," whispered Pembroke; "the wind will carry it home."

I pressed his hand. A moment later I stood facing the prince. I lifted the pistol and fired. Had the prince been ten feet to the right he must have been hit. I threw the smoking pistol aside, let my arms fall and waited. I could see that Pembroke was biting his lip to hide his anxiety and disappointment. Slowly the prince leveled the weapon at my breast. Naturally I shut my eyes. Perhaps there was a prayer on my lips. God, how long that wait seemed to me! It became so tedious that I opened my eyes again. The pistol arm of the prince appeared to have frozen in the air.

"It is getting cold," I cried. "Shoot, for God's sake shoot, and end it!"

In reply the prince fired into the air, took the pistol by the barrel and flung it at my feet. The rest of us looked on dumfounded.

"They are all of the same kidney, count, these Americans," said he. "They would be dangerous as a nation were it not for their love of money." Then to me, "Go tell your princess that I have given your life to you."

"The devil take you!" I cried. The strain had been terrible.

"All in good time," retorted the prince, getting into his coat and furs. "Yesterday morning I had every intention of killing you. This morning it was farthest from my thoughts, though I did hope to see you waver. You are a man of courage. So was your friend. It is to be regretted that we were on different sides. Devil take the women! Good morning!"

After the count had gathered up the pistols the two walked toward the inn. Pembroke and I followed them at a distance.

"I wonder if he had any idea of what a poor shot you were?" mused Pembroke. "It was a very good farce."

"I aimed ten feet to the right," said I.

But, oh, to be the one pale orb of night,

Night dewdrop now to be, my noonday flower, for thee!

Their First Victory

An Exciting Race Among College Men.

As the freshmen sat in their shell that beautiful May afternoon they felt within themselves that their time had come at last. The warmth of the setting sun as it slowly approached the hilltops which guard Cayuga on the west, the deep blue of the lake and the breath of spring in the soft southern breeze seemed all to foretell some good fortune. Then, too, as the crews rowed up the lake the first year men had pulled together beautifully, their oars had struck the water in perfect unison, with never a break from bow to stroke. It was coming, and they knew it, for they had struck their stride, as the runners say.

A blast from the whistle of the coach's launch drew their attention to the varsity and the sophomore crews which had proceeded a mile farther up the lake. From this point the two senior crews were to race for three miles, picking up the freshmen at the mile mark. As the freshmen watched them the distant shells turned slowly and took their positions. A moment they lay motionless; then, as a jet of white steam shot up from the launch, 16 broad oar blades flashed in the sun, and the race was on.

It looked to the eager freshmen as if the sophomore crew had leaped to the front with the first stroke, the heavier varsity being unable to catch the water as quickly as had their nimble rivals, and as the two shells came racing over the glassy surface of the lake it was evident that the second year men were increasing their advantage.

"Look at 'em gain! Look at 'em gain!" cried Crowell up in bow seat. Crowell always became excited whenever he watched others racing, but as soon as he got in a race himself he was the steadiest man in the boat.

"That's all right," said Bruce, the sturdy stroke; "the sophs may jump 'em at the start, but you wait until that varsity gets down to work."

And almost before he had uttered them his words were proved true, for the class crew ceased to gain on their seniors. For a time the two shells pulled at almost equal speed, the white launch speeding along close behind the second, the coach up in the bow directing the oarsmen through his great aluminium megaphone. Though the freshmen could not hear him they knew that he was upbraiding the varsity for allowing a class crew to get ahead of them. And soon his reproaches had their effect, for the sophomores were seen to be slowly losing their lead as the older men began to put their hearts into the work. Slowly but surely the second crew crawled up until the length and a half of open water that had separated it from its fleeing rival was reduced to less than a foot, and then the coach's voice came ringing over the water:

"Get ready there, freshmen!"

The little cockswain ceased craning his neck over his shoulder and, grasping the rudder lines firmly, shouted:

"Ready al-l-l!"

In response the eight sunbrowned boys before him settled themselves into their seats and, leaning far forward, dipped their oar blades into the water.

"Eyes in the boat," cautioned the cockswain, and they waited while their opponents came flying toward them. They heard the panting of the launch's engine and then the sound of the rushing shells cleaving the still water and the "schuh" of the oars in the rowlocks as 16 pairs of arms shot out on the recover. Then the "old man's" voice again:

"Are you ready, freshmen? Then go!"

And with one giant heave they were off.

Bruce kept his eye steadily fixed on the water just beyond the port gunwale as it slipped past, still swirling and dimpling from the blows of the stout blades behind him. Quickly and yet with the utmost care he pulled stroke after stroke; a sharp catch and a powerful heave, then out shot his hands, and his shoulders followed on the recover, but as his seat neared the end of the slide he slowed it down that there might be no checking of the boat. And the seven men behind him were doing likewise, for once as he caught the water he felt the frail shell rise beneath him and quiver like a living thing. A thrill of exultation passed through every man in the crew. They knew then that the victory was theirs. For the first time they had felt the shell live, and that spelled victory.

And now the little cockswain found his voice.

"Steady, boys; steady!" he cried. "Keep your eyes on the stroke—catch—catch—catch!"

Then, with a note of triumph in his voice, he shouted:

"We're gaining, boys; we're gaining. Keep her up."

By this time Bruce's breath was coming fast, and the great drops of sweat poured off his face. For an instant he ventured to glance away from his patch of water, and out of the corner of his eye he saw the other boats now racing along on even terms and not half a length ahead. He was recalled by the voice of the cockswain:

"I'm going to give you ten, fellows, and when I get through you've got to be even with them. Ready now—one, two, three—good work, boys—four, five—we're gaining—six, seven—No. 2, don't clip your stroke—eight, nine, ten! We're up to them! Now ten more! One, two, three"—

But the other crews were pulling their hardest, and between strokes Bruce could hear the voices of their cockswains as they, too, counted tens. At the end the three were still even, and the question seemed to be one of endurance. The "old man" in the launch behind was shouting encouragement to the freshmen, for their burst of speed surprised and delighted him.

"Go it, freshmen!" he called.

And "go it" they did. His words put them on their mettle, and again the boat quivered as eight broad backs heaved simultaneously. Inch by inch and stroke by stroke they crept ahead. Again Bruce glanced at the other crews and saw the varsity stroke laboring desperately to make up what had been lost, and farther back he saw the sophomore crew now permanently in third place. A great sob of joy shook him; then his eyes went back to that bright patch of water, and his oar blade bit more fiercely as it struck the surface of the lake. The little cockswain was fairly beside himself. He shouted aloud in his joy.

"It's half over, boys," he cried as they flashed by the old windmill on the shore. "Just keep it up, and we've got 'em dead. Stroke—stroke—stroke!"

Yes, but could they keep it up? Already Bruce's wrists were beginning to grow numb, and his legs shook on the slow recover.

And still a mile to go!

His heart thumped and pounded, and the hot breath came gasping through his open lips. He could hear No. 7 groan at every stroke, but there was no thought of quitting. Death rather than that.

"But will we never reach the half mile?" he wondered.

Even as the thought entered his head the cockswain called:

"Only half a mile more, and we're a length ahead."

Oh, luckless boat! Scarcely had the words left his lips when No. 3 caught a crab. The starboard side of the shell sank almost to the water's edge as the unfortunate oarsman tried to drag his blade out by main force. At once the speed was checked, and the other boats drew up rapidly. But Bruce kept his head and never let the stroke vary a fraction of a second. The cockswain, too, remained cool. His calm voice in this moment of consternation reassured the rowers, who quickly responded to his monotonous "Stroke—stroke—stroke" as Bruce's blade caught the water. In a moment all were rowing again as evenly as before the accident, but the varsity was almost abreast of them. The danger of defeat after victory had seemed so sure made the freshmen almost mad. They tugged at the sweeps as if they would break them in twain. Men animated by such a spirit could not be beaten, and soon they were forging to the front again. As they entered on the last quarter mile they were more than half a length to the good and still gaining slowly. But the strain was beginning to tell. Bruce's arms were numb to the elbows, his breath came in quick pants and a haze seemed to have settled over him which dulled the pain in his aching muscles, but made his work only mechanical. Forward and backward, forward and backward, his body swayed, while the shrill voice of the cockswain sounded faint and far away.

"If I could only stop for an instant," he thought: "only a stroke." And then he fell to thinking of what he would give if he could rest for one stroke—$5, yes, $10, even a week from his summer vacation, and he dreamed of how he would lie on the cool grass under the trees during that vacation, too blissfully lazy to move—and all the while his weary body swayed backward and forward, backward and forward, without ceasing. He was aroused by that strident voice, now grown strangely hoarse. How he hated it! It was shouting:

"Only a hundred yards more, fellows! Now give her ten—one, two, three"—

And as the tired crew responded to the appeal their light boat again leaped forward. When the ten was over, there was open water between them and the varsity, while the sophomores had dropped four lengths behind. Still that little torment in the stern was not satisfied.

"I'm going to count till we cross the line," he announced, and then began those terrible numbers once more:

"One, two, three, four"—But with "23" he stopped and then called:

"Let her run!"

Thank God, it was over! Eight pairs of weary hands dropped the oars at which they had been tugging over those two long miles, and eight weary bodies slouched down into their seats, too tired to sit erect.

Bruce leaned over the gunwale and plunged his arms into the cold, clear water. Perfectly content was he as, filled with the joy of triumph, he gazed over the fast darkening bosom of the lake and up the hill to where, here and there, a light already twinkled on the campus. And as he gazed softly, sweetly, from the tower the chimes pealed forth "The Evening Song."—New York Sun.

Had to Conquer or Die.

"I was just about gone," writes Mrs. Rosa Richardson, of Laurel Springs, N. C., "I had consumption so bad that the best doctors said I could not live more than a month but I began to use Dr. King's New Discovery and was wholly cured by seven bottles and am now stout and well." It's an unrivaled life saver in Consumption, Pneumonia, La Grippe and Bronchitis; infallible for Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Hay Fever, Croup or Whooping Cough. Guaranteed bottles 50c and $1.00. Try bottles free at C. A. Wright's drug store.

They Got Through.

Abraham Lincoln was a captain of Illinois volunteers in the Black Hawk war. Mr. Norman Hapgood in his "Life of Lincoln" relates that during this campaign Lincoln once had his company marching in a column 20 men wide when he was suddenly confronted with a high fence with an open gate, through which only one man could pass at a time. He had no idea of the proper way to get his men into single file, so he halted the company and said:

"This company is dismissed, but it will come together immediately after getting through that gate."

Working Overtime.

Eight hour laws are ignored by those tireless, little workers—Dr. King's New Life Pills. Millions are always at work night and day, curing indigestion, biliousness, constipation, sick headache and all stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Easy, pleasant, safe, sure. Only 25c at C. A. Wright's drug store.

When people with a critical tendency say "some people" they mean you

Everybody's liable to itching piles Rich and poor, old and young—terrible the torture they suffer. Only one sure cure. Doan's Ointment. Absolutely safe; can't fail.

It is often easier to be thought stupid than to make an effort.

No man can cure consumption. You can prevent it though. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup cures coughs, colds, bronchitis, sore throat. Never fails.

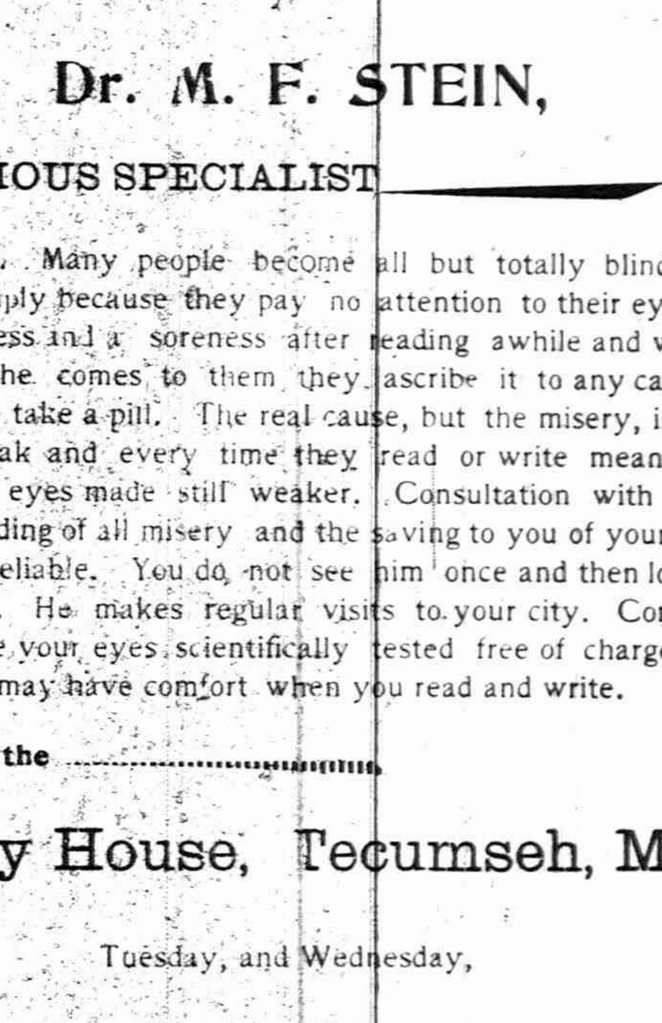
ARE YOUR EYES BAD?



Dr. M. F. STEIN,

THE FAMOUS SPECIALIST

Will cure you. Many people become all but totally blind and at an early age, simply because they pay no attention to their eyes. They notice a dimness and a soreness after reading awhile and when a miserable headache comes to them they ascribe it to any cause but the right one and take a pill. The real cause, but the misery, is that their eyes are weak and every time they read or write means an added strain and the eyes made still weaker. Consultation with a specialist means the ending of all misery and the saving to you of your eye-sight. Dr. Stein is reliable. You do not see him once and then look for him again in vain. He makes regular visits to your city. Come and see him and have your eyes scientifically tested free of charge, that you may have comfort when you read and write.

He will be at the ....

CLUB NOTES.

Miss Bertha Smeltzer invites the Monday Club to hold their next meeting February 18th at her home. The members are requested to meet at Miss Gertrude Hialey's at one o'clock, where conveyances will be in waiting to take them to the Smeltzer home, a mile south of town. Miss Smeltzer cordially invites a full attendance. This little departure from the Club's usual routine is intended for a sleigh ride. and in the event of the sleighing being gone, the meeting will be held at the usual place and time, Universalist church at 2 o'clock. The program will be:

William and Mary—Mrs. B. J. Garlinghouse.
Battle of the Boyne—Mrs. Weller.
Queen Anne—Miss Stacy.
Pope—Miss Smeltzer.
Steele—Mrs. Tribou.
William Hogarth—Mrs. Brown.
James II, the "Stuart Baby" by Van-Dyck—Mrs. Hillman.
George Fox and the Early Quakers—Mrs. Howland.

The Monday Club give another of their pleasant evenings Friday of this week at the club room at the Universalist church. A fine collection of views have been secured and a stereopticon entertainment is promised, which will both entertain and instruct. The views are of London, Scotland and some from Italy. Mrs. C. A. Wright will do the talking. The slides have all been selected with a view to securing pictures of places visited by Mrs. Wright on her recent trip abroad and thus is secured the additional pleasure of hearing them described by one who is familiar with them by actual observation. The ladies have decided as the capacity of the church is so limited to charge an admission fee of ten cents to cover expenses. The entertainment will begin at 8 o'clock and the club hope to see all their friends.

The regular meeting of the Research Circle February 5 took the form of a social evening, to which were invited the officers of the Monday Club and friends of the Circle. At eight o'clock the president, Mrs. Andrew Wilson, called the meeting to order and all enjoyed two solos by W. S. Dickinson. Mrs. Tiffany and Miss Hosmer then took charge of the rest of the evening's program and with eight assistants entertained the company with "Dumb Crambo" and all were surprised at the latent histrionic talent our town holds. At half past nine dainty refreshments were served under the direction of Mrs. Freeman and Mrs. Helm, during which Messrs. Maus and Bidwell rendered some very fine music on the mandelins. When the evening was over, all were sorry that the Circle did not have open meetings oftener.

Program of the Research Circle Feb. 19:

Roll call, Aphorisms of the Colonial People.

American Colonies and their Legislature—Mrs. Smeltzer.

Miscellaneous, review of To Have and To Hold.—Miss Stevens.

Tale of Arcadia in connection with Longfellow's Evangeline.—Mrs. Tiffany.

The regular meeting of the Wit and Wisdom Club was entertained by Mrs. Rector, Miss Rector and Fred Rector at their home north of town. A very enjoyable time was had by all, barring the fact that Mrs. Rector was ill.

The Crokinole club were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Will Raymond at their home last evening.

Birthday Party.

Last Saturday evening a number of guests assembled at the residence of Mrs. Corey to celebrate the birthday anniversary of Miss Minnie. It seems that a number of these ladies meet on the occasion of their birthdays, Miss Corey being one of this number. The regular birthday celebration was at 6 o'clock, then in the evening with the assistance of a number of invited guests, cards and refreshments took up the time till near 12 o'clock, all having a most delightful time.

Very Interesting.

On Friday evening at the Universalist church, will be the stereopticon entertainment, illustrating places in Europe familiar to Mrs Wright. The admission has been placed at 10 cents and no doubt many will attend. Tickets may be obtained at the library or of members of the Monday Club. Beautiful pictures have been secured from Chicago and the entertainment will be one of the most entertaining and instructive of the winter.

And yet there are people who hold that if a woman finds an ideal husband the first time she is married she is insane. This demonstrates that someboby is liable to consider you insane, no matter what you do.

Oliver Dilliard, a lad 18 years old living near Hudson was instantly killed last Friday afternoon. The young fellow was standing in the barn before going hunting and in some manner lost hold of the gun he was holding in his hand. The hammer struck the side of the door and discharged the charge tearing off the whole front portion of his face.

Morenci has what seems to be a real instance of faith cure. Mrs. Mary A. Valentine, wife of a retired minister has been bed ridden for over four years suffering great pain, and being unable to obtain help from physicians. She and her husband were praying for her relief when she felt strength come to her and she immediately rose from her bed. She resumed her household duties and a few days later went to a meeting of her church society. Her pastor testifies to the truth of her statements.

A dispatch from Coldwater to the Detroit dailies says: The boom which struck this town two years ago, resulting in new industries, has apparently been pricked and much poverty results. Scores of families came here expecting to find employment in the new factories, but work was scarce. The sudden closing of four cement factories at Quincy, Union, Bronson and Coldwater, together with the shutting down of several smaller plants, threw several hundred men out of employment, resulting in much distress. Grip is also prevalent and the superintendent of the poor is kept busy.

AN AGED VETERAN.

A Detroit Veteran Talks of the War And the Legacy it Left Him.

When the annual reunion of the G. A. R. is held, Michigan is always well represented. Around the camp fires of the encampment our boys tell of the hardships they have gone through and the listener who knows nothing of war will wonder how they lived to tell the tale. Few men who followed old glory and escaped the shot and shell returned home without some legacy as a constant reminder of their war days. Our representative found Veteran O. P. Newcomb of Detroit, at his place of residence, No. 137 Second street. Mr. Newcomb told him how the little conqueror had rendered him invaluable service. We give his account here and some words of advice tersely told. He said:

"A lake covering about two acres in extent, containing the dead bodies of 20 mules, is not tempting water to drink, but I was one of many who drank it, and all of us would have done so if we had known there was death in every swallow. This illustrates but one of the many hardship and privations passed through during the civil war, and it is no wonder that G. A. R. men suffer from aches and pains, the most prevalent of these being due to kidney disorders. I am pleased to note that a great many others who passed through as trying ordeals as I, have now learned how these troubles can be mitigated. When I say Doan's Kidney Pills will cure them I not only speak from experience but from observation. To all old soldiers or anyone suffering from kidney complaint my advice is to try that remedy."

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

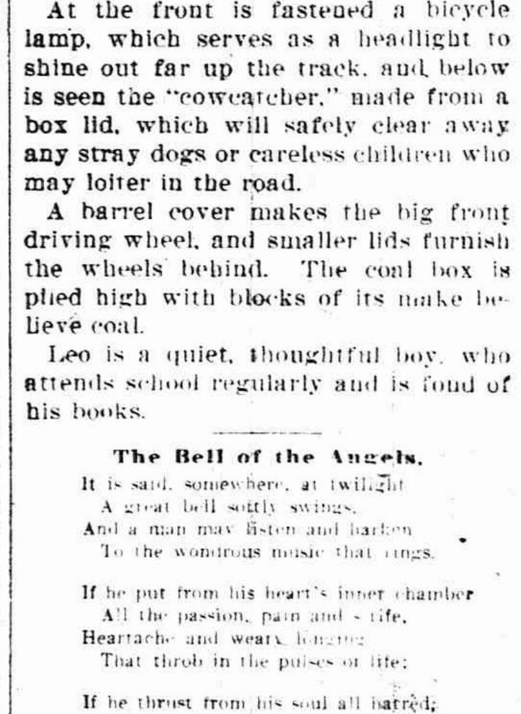
A BOY'S LOCOMOTIVE.

The Choo-choo a New Jersey Boy Made Out of Boxes and Things.

Leo Ellsworth Kenney, a boy of 7 years, who lives at Plainfield, N. J., has a marked talent for "inventing things." All his playtime is taken up in making some sort of contrivance that amuses him far more than the toys which most little boys enjoy playing with.

The picture given herewith shows an engine which Leo built for himself, and it is just as real to him as though it could draw a real train, and when he sits in the "cab," with his hand on the "throttle," his imagination carries him through space as fast as any limited express between Jersey City and Chicago.

One day Leo was sent out in his father's barn, and he gathered up all the grocery boxes he could find about, together with barrel and keg covers. The biggest packing box he uses for the body of the engine, which is large enough for him to get in and out of easily. Two smaller boxes piled in front support the smokestack, which is a short log of wood, and the smoke pouring from its top is illustrated by a bunch of black, curled hair.



CLEAR THE TRACK

At the front is fastened a bicycle lamp, which serves as a headlight to shine out far up the track, and below is seen the "cowcatcher," made from a box lid, which will safely clear away any stray dogs or careless children who may loiter in the road.

A barrel cover makes the big front driving wheel, and smaller lids furnish the wheels behind. The coal box is piled high with blocks of its make believe coal.

Leo is a quiet, thoughtful boy, who attends school regularly and is fond of his books.

The Bell of the Angels.

It is said, somewhere, at twilight
A great bell softly swings,
And a man may listen and harken
To the wondrous music that rings.

If he put from his heart's inner chamber
All the passion, pain and strife,
Heartache and weary longing
That throb in the pulses of life;

If he thrust from his soul all hatred,
All thoughts of wicked things,
He can hear in the holy twilight
How the bell of the angels rings.

Let us look in our hearts and question,
Can purer thoughts enter in
To a soul if it be already
The dwelling of thoughts of sin?

So then let us ponder a little,
Let us look in our hearts and see
If the twilight bell of the angels
Can ring for you and me.

Game of Postman.

Any number of people can play "postman." A blindfolded player is the "postman," and a second player is the "postmaster." The other players sit in chairs at the sides of the room. The postmaster gives each person the name of a city or town and leads the blind postman within the circle of players. Then he says, "I am sending a letter from New York to Chicago" (or between any other two towns), and the players having those names must jump up and change places. If the postman catches one of them while changing or gets to the empty chair first, that person has to take the postman's place. A player who does not get up when his city is called also becomes his postman.

A Handkerchief Trick.

To perform a simple trick you will need a round stick about 12 or 18 inches long. Insert a needle in one end of it so that about three-quarters of the pointed end projects. Hold the stick upright and throw a handkerchief on to it so that the center alights on the uppermost end where the needle is. When the stick is twirled rapidly between the palms of the hands, the handkerchief will stand out as if it were a piece of stiff card, and, as the needle does not show, you can pretend that the handkerchief adheres owing to the magnetism of the stick.

That Cough Hangs On

You have used all sorts of cough remedies but it does not yield; it is too deep seated. It may wear itself out in time, but it is more liable to produce la grippe, pneumonia or a serious throat affection. You need something that will give you strength and build up the body.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

will do this when everything else fails. There is no doubt about it. It nourishes, strengthens, builds up and makes the body strong and healthy, not only to throw off this hard cough, but to fortify the system against further attacks. If you are run down or emaciated you should certainly take this nourishing food medicine.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

SHE IS MY LOVE.

[In the measure of the original Irish Gaelic love song.]

She is my love beyond all thought,
Though she hath wrought my deepest dole;
Yet dearer for the cruel pain
Than one who fain would make me whole.

She is my glittering gem of gems,
Who yet contemns my fortune bright,
Whose cheek but glows with redder scorn
Since mine has worn a stricken white.

She is my sun and moon and star,
Who yet so far and cold doth keep;
She would not even o'er my bier
One tender tear of pity weep.

Into my heart unsought she came,
A wasting flame, a haunting care;
Into my heart of hearts, ah, why?
And left a sigh forever there.

—Alfred Perceval Graves in Spectator.

A DAUGHTER OF THE VELDT

How Two Enemies Met On "Lovers' Walk."

About six miles from our lines I ran against a dainty little farmhouse cuddled up against the slope of a shrub covered kopje. On one side of the dwelling a trellisswork of vines broke the wind at both front and rear, while a pretty flower garden, fragrant with flowers, spread far away in front of the substantial dwelling. I was admiring these things from my horse's back, when it suddenly dawned upon me that I had possibly played the imbecile in straying so far from camp. But it was too late to hang back. If the farmer folk were friendly, I was in luck, for the inside of such a dwelling could not be ill supplied with creature comforts. If, however, they were hostile, I was at their mercy. I had no desire to match my pony's pace against the flight of a Mauser bullet, so, humming a song and thinking of a psalm, I rode forward as if certain of a kindly welcome. An elderly Boer with a kindly face met me at the door and gave me the time of day with all civility, a negro lad took hold of my bridle, and I swung myself out of the saddle just in time to receive a civil greeting from the farmer's wife—healthy, wholesome, substantial, well fed and clothed. They invited me inside, and there their four daughters introduced themselves to me. They all talked English as well as I could, and before I had been there 20 seconds I had arrived at the conclusion that I should never get a better chance to study the language of the people of our foes and determined to sacrifice myself upon the flinty shrine of duty. Three of the maidens were plain faced, good, honest looking girls, but the fourth had a face like a young preacher's first public prayer—a face that many a man would risk his life for.

So much of my whole career has been passed amid the rougher and more rugged scenes of life that a description of dainty womanhood comes awkwardly from me. But I have read so much about the ugliness and clumsiness of the Boer woman in British journals that I should like to try to describe this daughter of the veldt, although only a farmer's daughter. I do not know if she should be called short or tall, but her cheek could have been nestled comfortably on the shoulder of a fairly tall man. I don't know how much hair she had, but there was enough of it to make a fellow feel as if he didn't care a rap if half the earth was bald. It was not red nor yellow; it was like honey kissed by sunshine. She had the sort of forehead which one never sees on the face of a fool, nature's signboard for an emporium of brains. Her eyes were large, brown and fearless, not bold nor yet wavering. Her mouth was perfect—not one of those sepulchers which disfigure some feminine faces, not childishly small like a bud bursting into bloom, but a strong, true mouth, large enough for a prayer to slip through, but not big enough to swear with. Her waist would just about fill the crook of a man's arm and make him feel that there was no room for anything else under heaven. The arch of her bust was like the curve on a wave as it breaks on the beach in the bay, not the stiff lath and plaster model one is apt to see walking around the streets of cities. Her hands were shapely, brown and strong, cracked a little by wind and weather; not toy hands, but hands that could spank a baby or help husband back to paths of rectitude when all the world had damned him past redemption.

So she looked when I saw her, and I said unto my soul, "Verily, it is a good thing for his enemies' language." It was the fifth evening after that, and I had registered my fifth visit to the farm, when an event befell which put an end to my studies in Dutch for the time being. I had dined with the farmers, the plain sisters had made music for me. They had lifted their voices in song also, for I was an honored guest, having been enabled to do some little deeds of kindness through the favor of the courteous general to a relation of the ladies who was a prisoner in our lines. They had given me blankets and rugs for the poor beggar, and the general had handed them to the man.

The night was a beautiful one, so, lighting a cigar, I rambled down toward the quarter mile long avenue of orange trees. It was to be my last visit, for our troops were on the move at dawn. As I sauntered forward I heard the rustle of a woman's skirts amid the bushes on my right, and, looking in that direction, I saw the navy blue dress and the red gold hair of the girl who had been teaching me Dutch. I had not many seconds to look at her, but brief as the time was I had long enough to notice that one hand held the blue skirts switched up so that about a foot of white petticoat was displayed. I also noticed that she was heading toward the orange walk, which I had long since learned was known in the family as "the lovers' walk." She did not look in my direction, did not turn toward me at all, but like many another fool I was puffed up in my folly. "What harm is there in it," I mused, "if I take my lesson in Dutch in the shade of the orange trees?" Tossing my cigar away, I sauntered after the flying figure out of the flower garden, over the field, into the shady walk. I meandered like a he goat through a gap in a hedge, I walked about 50 yards and saw no one, heard no one. Then all at once I found myself looking right into the face of a big hairy savage who wore a tweed coat and a bandolier full of cartridges. In his hands he carried a handy little Mauser carbine.

"Well, Mr. Spy," said the hairy individual, "you are my prisoner."

I tried to smile, but somehow the springs in my face had got out of order and would not work.

"What did you want sneaking after me for, you beastly Englishman?" snarled the man with the gun. "I could have shot you last night and the night before that if I had liked, but I did not want to bring trouble on this farm. What do you want to hunt me for?"

I found my tongue for a moment then.

"Hunt you? I didn't know such a chap existed."

He lowered his carbine an inch or two. "Then what the devil are you doing in the lovers' walk?"

"What are you doing here?" I blurted.

We stared at each other like two grass fed calves in the starlight, and I edged a foot or two away from the gun. Just then I heard the patter of girlish feet on the gravel behind me and, turning my head, saw one of the plain sisters hurrying toward us, and almost at the same second the reddish gold head of the "beauty," the head of the girl who had been teaching me Dutch, passed from a patch of shadow into the streak of starlight where the hairy young giant was standing fondling his gun. I saw her clasp his arm, heard her hurriedly whisper something in Dutch which caused the giant to grin as if half his head ached to part company with the other half. The "beauty" pointed toward me and the plain sister, who had come to a halt beside me. The plain girl put her hand kindly on my shoulder and whispered, "Don't you think it's too chilly out here?"

Chilly was no name for it. I was as cold as Klondike. The sight of that carbine in the starlight had taken all the warmth out of the atmosphere as far as I was concerned. I turned to go, when a little hand touched mine. The girl who had been teaching me Dutch was at my side. "Before you gentlemen leave," she said, "I want you both to make a promise. You are enemies now. Some day when the war is over you may be friends. But promise not to hurt each other by talking of this meeting. Otto had no business to come. Father had forbidden him until the trouble ended with the British."

"I came out of love for you," grunted the man with the gun.

"And you came out of fondness for me," murmured the plain girl, her voice shaking with laughter that was almost choking her. I muttered the biggest lie I had ever parted with.

The hairy individual rested his gun against a tree, stepped forward and lifted his slouch hat to the plain girl, "For your sake I promise."

I lifted my helmet to the "beauty" and said something similar. A few minutes later as I was buckling my girths I heard him galloping off southward to join Olivier's commando. As I swung into my saddle the plain sister slipped away, and the "beauty" lifted her hand in farewell. As our hands met she said, "Why did you come to lovers' walk?"

"To get a lesson in Dutch," I said, with a sheepish grin.

"Well," she answered, "I hope you'll remember your lesson." And I heard the two of them laughing as I galloped out on the veldt.—Argonaut.

Down the Chimney.

Job May was one of the first settlers of Bureau county, Ills. His cabin was built on the side of the river bluff. The site for it was partly made by an excavation into the bank, so that the roof was little above the ground. The chimney, built of stones, mud and sticks, was a huge affair, with a fireplace six feet wide in the living room.

One fall a neighbor gave the May boys an old blind horse. The little fellows were delighted with Old Bob and made a great pet of him.

The second winter of Bob's life with his young masters proved a hard one. The snow was deep, and the poor horse, unstabled and with little hay or grass, found existence a doubtful blessing.

One night Bob was wandering around searching for comfort in some form when he discovered that hot air was rising from the chimney and took up a position near by.

Suddenly the family, sitting around the blazing log fire, were startled by a tremendous racket up the chimney, and the next moment a huge body tumbled down into the fireplace. It was Old Bob, who began snorting and plunging about, scattering hot coals and ashes in all directions.

The family fled with cries of dismay. Old Bob was soon recognized and, with one shoulder badly scorched, was led limping out of the door. Meantime there had been a scrambling after the coals and firebrands, to prevent the house from taking fire.—Youth's Companion.

He Was Slow.

Lincoln used to be fond of telling a story of a lawyer in a western town who desired the nomination for county judge. On the morning preceding the evening on which the county convention was to meet he applied to the livery stable keeper in his village for a horse and buggy in which to drive to the county town, 16 miles distant, where the convention was to be held. "Give me the best and the fastest horse you have, Sam," said he, "so that I will have time to go around and see the boys before the convention comes in."

The liveryman, however, was supporting a rival candidate and gave the lawyer a horse that outwardly appeared perfect, but which broke down entirely before half the journey was completed, so that when the candidate arrived the convention had adjourned and his rival had been nominated.

On his return to the stable late the following afternoon, knowing that it was useless to resent the trick played upon him, he said to the owner: "Look here, Smith, you must be training this horse for the New York market. You expect to sell him to an undertaker for a hearse horse, don't you? Well, it's time wasted. I know from his gait that you have spent days training him to pull a hearse, but he'll prove a dead failure. Why, he's so slow he couldn't get a corpse to the cemetery in time for the resurrection."

Spinsters.

Unmarried women are called spinsters, or spinning women, because it was a maxim among our forefathers that a young woman should not marry until she had spun enough linen to furnish her house. All unmarried old or young, were then called spinsters, a name still retained in all legal documents.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

EXPERT CHILD PIANISTE.

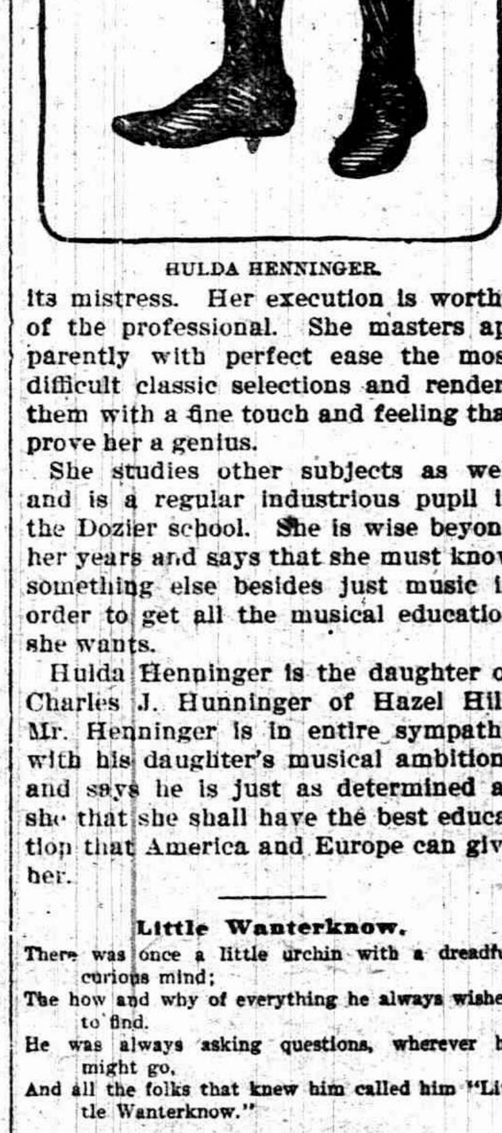
A Little Missouri Girl Who Composes as Well as Performs.

Eleven-year-old Hulda Henninger of Hazel Hill, St. Louis county, is a youthful composer of music, says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. And she is as ambitious as she is youthful. Already she has well formed plans for her musical education both in this country and abroad. She says she will have the best the two continents afford, and while she is getting it music shall be her support as well as her study.

In execution of this plan she composed a waltz last summer called "Moonlight on Creve Cœur Lake," and it has recently been published.

It is by her compositions that little Hulda proposes to pay the expenses of her musical education, and her work of last summer is just a beginner.

Hulda began the study of the piano five years ago, and today she is almost its mistress. Her execution is worthy of the professional. She masters apparently with perfect ease the most difficult classic selections and renders them with a fine touch and feeling that prove her a genius.



HULDA HENNINGER.

She studies other subjects as well and is a regular industrious pupil in the Dozier school. She is wise beyond her years and says that she must know something else besides just music in order to get all the musical education she wants.

Hulda Henninger is the daughter of Charles J. Hunninger of Hazel Hill. Mr. Henninger is in entire sympathy with his daughter's musical ambitions and says he is just as determined as she that she shall have the best education that America and Europe can give her.

Little Wanterknow.

There was once a little urchin with a dreadful curious mind;
The how and why of everything he always wished to find.
He was always asking questions, wherever he might go,
And all the folks that knew him called him "Little Wanterknow."

He'd want to know "How far is it from here up to the sky?"
And "What made George so awful sure he couldn't tell a lie?"
What made the noise inside his drum and why a cow don't fly,
And "How much would a million million million dollars buy?"

And also, if you pleased, he'd like to know about these things:
"When will tomorrow come?" and "Are the stars all worked with strings?"
"How big'll I be when I'm big?" and "Ain't it teatime yet?"
And why it's cold in winter and "What makes water wet?"

And "Do all naughty boys get drowned?" and "Do all good ones die?"
And "Do you think that doughnuts are better'n berry pie?"
And "Where does money come from?" and "When is by and by?"
And when his questions all gave out he'd simply say, "Well, why?"

—Browning, King & Co.'s Monthly.

English Peers Can't Vote.

Disfranchisement is one of the peculiar disabilities under which a peer of the realm suffers. Lord Salisbury once attempted to secure a vote for Hertford and Middlesex, but the revising barrister at Hatfield refused the claim on the ground that time had given the disability the character of law and that peers by the law of parliament necessary for the dignity and freedom of the two houses were not permitted to vote for members of the house of commons. Lord Salisbury took the case to the appeal court, but as he could quote "neither precedent nor authority" he was obliged to go back to Hatfield without his vote.—London Chronicle.

Beginning Early.

"Shall I have to get married when I grow up?" asked little Flossie one day of her mother.

"Just as you please, dear," answered her mother, with a smile. "Most women do, however."

"Yes; I suppose so," continued the little girl musingly, "and I think I'd better start and look out for a husband now. They say that Aunt Jane has been at it for 20 years and hasn't caught one yet."—Exchange.

PUNY CHILDREN
TOO MANY OF THEM DIE.
Their Little Bodies Unable to Stand the Ordeal of Development.
WE THINK EVERY MOTHER IN THIS TOWN SHOULD KNOW ABOUT VINOL.
It is the Delicious Tonic We Advise for Growing Children.

Is your boy or girl pale and listless? Do they act differently from other children? Do they sleep poorly and eat poorly? Does your boy avoid the sports and games of other boys? Does your girl complain of headache and find her studies a hardship?

If so, you may make up your mind they are growing too fast. They need something to help nature in her great work of furnishing the necessary elements for creating flesh and muscle tissue, bone structure and rich, pure, red blood.

They need a tonic in the full sense of the word and we can tell you what to get.

It is Vinol Wine of Cod-Liver Oil, the great modern reconstructor. Children like it, it is so delicious to the taste, in spite of the fact that it contains a highly concentrated extract of the medicinal principles that are found in cod-liver oil.

But because the vile-smelling and tasting grease has been discarded and all of the other disagreeable features eliminated, the benefits of Vinol are easily understood.

Vinol acts favorably on the stomach, creates an appetite and enables the food that is eaten to do the greatest possible amount of good.

Following is a letter that bears directly on this subject:

"I was all run down and took Vinol. It did me so much good and it was so pleasant to take, that I gave it to my children. They were growing fast and needed something in the way of a tonic and I found it to be just the thing for them."—SARAH PICKERING, 1932 Fall River, Mass.

We cordially invite mothers interested in the welfare of their children, as well as any one else needing a sure, safe and delicious tonic, rebuilder and rejuvenator, to call on us. We will gladly tell any one all we know about Vinol and why we so highly endorse it.

Inasmuch as we are always ready and pleased to refund the cost of Vinol to those who don't find it exactly what we claim it to be, it will be seen that we are prepared to substantially endorse our claims for the excellence of this marvelous preparation.

CONSTIPATION
the frequent cause of Appendicitis and many other serious ills should never be neglected. The objection to the usual cathartic remedies is their costive reaction which increases constipation instead of curing it. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is the proper remedy. THANKING SAMPSON

President McKinley Sends a Message to the Senate.

SCHLEY'S FRIENDS PROTEST

Against Sampson's Preferment Over Schley as an Insult to a Gallant Officer, and the Senators Are Urged to Protest.

Washington, Feb. 15.—President McKinley Thursday sent a message to congress urging that the thanks of congress be tendered to Adimal Sampson for his work during the Spanish war as commander of the naval force of the North Atlantic squadron. The message is as follows:

During our recent war with Spain the United States naval force on the North Atlantic station was charged with varied and important duties, chief among which were the maintenance of the blockade of Cuba, aiding the army in landing troops and in subsequent operations, and particularly in the pursuit, blockade and destruction of the Spanish squadron under Admiral Cervera.

This naval campaign, embracing objects of wide scope and grave responsibilities, was conducted with great ability on the part of the commander-in-chief and of the officers and enlisted men under his commond. It culminated in the annihilation of the Spanish fleet in the battle of July 3, 1898, one of the most memorable naval engagements in history.

The result of this battle was the freeing of our Atlantic coast from the possibilities to which it had been exposed from Admiral Cervera's fleet, and the termination of the war upon the seas.

I recommend that, following our national precedents, especially that in the case of Admiral Dewey and the Asiatic squadron, the thanks of congress be given to Rear Admiral William T. Sampson, United States navy, and to the officers and men under his command, for highly distinguished conduct in conflict with the enemy and in carrying on the blockade and naval campaign on the Cuban coast, resulting in the destruction of the Spanish fleet at Santiago de Cuba July 3, 1898. WM. M'KINLEY.

The Schley-Sampson controversy was renewed yesterday as the result of the president's nominations, and a number of senators announced their oppositions to the nominations. During the afternoon a number of them received a telegram from Gen. Felix Angus of Baltimore, protesting against the preferment of Admiral Sampson. This telegram is as follows:

"I ask in the name of truth and justice that you will not allow history to be perverted by permitting the advancement of Admiral Sampson over Admiral Schley, for a victory in which he had no part, not even firing a single shot. Had Sampson, in announcing the American victory, told the truth and said that while he was unavoidably absent at the time of the action, be it said for the glory of the flag that Schley was on the spot, America would still be ringing with his plaudits. This he did not do, as you well know. Instead he started the controversy which has just culminated in the nominations sent to the senate. If these are confirmed history will have been falsified and a monstrous injustice done a brave American officer. May I ask you to prevent these confirmations at this session?"

Quarreling Over a Kingdom.

Ras Jibutil, French East Africa, Feb. 15.—Tekla, king of Gojam (also written Godjam), northwest of the kingdom of Shoa, recently died of poisoning and two pretenders are now quarreling for the throne. Emperor Menelik has dispatched an army to restore peace.

Probably the foregoing information from Ras Jibutil explains the dispatch from Caro published Feb. 1st by Le Francais of Paris, announcing tuat news had been received at the Egyptian capital of a great battle in Abyssinia in which 7,000 had been killed, the supposition then being that the chiefs had rebelled during the absence of the Negus, who had gone to the Egyptian frontier in connection with the delimitation of the Egypto-Abyssinian boundary.

An Original Idea.

New York, Feb. 15.—The Correspondents' Club of New York, an organization consisting of correspondents of the leading out-of-town newspapers, inaugurated an original idea at their annual dinner Thursday evening. A symposium contributed to by many prominent men of the country on the question "how can the influence of the press be increased" was read. Truthfulness, accuracy, more careful editing and less sensationalism were the predominating opinions among the contributions. Dinner was attended by the entire membership of the club, as well as by several guests. Addresses were made by President C. P Brown and Mr. Serano S. Pratt, chairman of the entertainment committee, who called attention to the widespread interest shown by persons throughout the country in the club and topics it had suggested for discussion.

Caused a Slight Panic.

Chicago, Feb. 15.—Fire which for a time threatened the destruction of the Great Northern hotel broke out on the fourth floor of the building Thursday evening. The flames originated in a room used for the storage of bedding and spread rapidly, causing a slight panic among the guests. A fire-proof wall adjoining the room prevented the blaze from spreading, and the firemen, fighting the flames from the fire escape, soon had it under control. The total damage done did not exceed $1,500.

Asks a Postponement.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The secretary of the treasury has sent to the house a letter from Commissioner of Immigration Powderly asking that the date within which Chinese in Hawaii may be registered be fixed at Jan. 31, 1902. An earlier date was fixed by the organic act, but there are difficulties of accomplishing the registry within the specified time.

HE MADE LOVE

And Swindled His Proposed Bride Out of Good Money.

St. Joseph, Mich., Feb. 15.—The authorities of Berrien county are trying to find Clarence Wagner, aged 70, who courted Mrs. Mary Schaus of Colomo, and, it is alleged, skipped out with $250 of her money. The story leaked out Thursday when it was learned that Wagner could not be found.

Ten days ago a stranger came into the village of Coloma and called at the home of Mrs. Schaus. He asked for lodging for the night. She took him in and gave him lodging for the night. He told Mrs. Schaus that his name was Clarence Wagner and proceeded to make love to his hostess. He recited a wonderful story about his wealth. He declared that he owned four big farms and other property. Mrs. Schaus, who is 72 years old, accepted the old man's attentions, and it was agreed that they should get married at once. Last Saturday Wagner secured $15 from his wife-to-be and called on County Clerk Church for a license to wed. The applicant failed to remember the bride's name, and was unable to give other necessary information, and Mr. Church therefore refused to issue the license. Wagner went back to Coloma and said he would have to have $250 more before he could get the license. Mrs. Schaus trustingly gave him the money. Wagner then stated he was going to St. Joseph, but since that time he has not been seen.

IMPORTANT LITIGATION

Instituted by Atty.-Gen. Oren Against an Iron Company.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 15.—Important litigation, which is attracting attention all over the upper peninsula, has been instituted by Atty.-Gen. Oren, who has, on the relation of Edward N. Breitung of Marquette, commenced quo warranto proceedings in the supreme court to compel the Pioneer Iron Co. to show cause why it continues to exercise the functions of a corporation.

The company was originally incorporated in 1857, and its charter expired in 1887. It is claimed by the attorney-general that this corporate existence was never revived, and that the company practically abandoned its existence until a short time ago, when it sought to reassert its powers. It erected a $50,000 furnace at Marquette, which it is still running, but has not done any actual mining. It claims the mineral right in lands of which Breitung is the owner of the fee, and the latter is desirous of having the company declared legally dead so that he will be the undisputed owner of the mineral rights in this land as well as the fee. Prospectively, several million dollars are involved in the controversy.

Carnegie's Gift.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 15.—Andrew Carnegie, the steel king, has sent the city of Grand Rapids a letter, declaring that he is favorably disposed toward giving the city a public library building to cost from $100,000 to $150,000. Ex-Senator John Patton has been at work for a year trying to interest Mr. Carnegie in the needs of this city. The gift will be bestowed on condition that the city donate a site and give $10,000 a year to support it.

A Huge Wildcat.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Feb. 15.—J. D. Anderson, aged 78, was here Thursday from Floodwood to claim a bounty for the biggest wildcat ever seen in the northern country. It weighed 97 pounds and dragged a steel trap with a 60-pound block attached, two miles before it was overtaken and killed by the aged man. It made a furious resistance.

Instantly Killed.

Lowell, Mich., Feb. 15.—Pere Marquette train No. 35 struck Mrs. Joseph Adams of Lowell at the Main street crossing here Thursday afternoon at 3:50 p. m., causing her death almost instantly.

Good Indian Dying.

Redwood Falls, Minn., Feb. 15.—Chief Good Thunder, who was one of the friendly Indians during the uprising in the '60s and was on of the scouts of the late Gen. H. H. Sibley, who was at the head of the expedition to suppress the uprising, is dying at his home at the Indian agency, six miles east of this city. Good Thunder is nearly 90 years old.

Accidentally Killed.

Butler, Pa., Feb. 15.—Warren Armstrong, the 2-year-old son of James Armstrong, was killed Thursday afternoon by being shot through the head by a bullet from a revolver in the hands of his 6-year-old brother or his 3-year-old cousin. The children found the revolver in a drawer and were playing with it when it was accidentally discharged.

Expunged from Record.

Topeka, Kan., Feb. 15.—The house has expunged from the record the note of King Edward VII, thanking the legislature for its resolution of sympathy over the death of Queen Victoria, because the communication contained the word "loyalty." The note was received Wednesday and entered in the journal of the house without delay. Thursday a legislator raised an objection to the word "loyalty" in the note and it was stricken from the record.

Burglars to be Sentenced.

New Philadelphia, O., Feb. 15.—John Day, Robert Haley and James Fitzgerald, three of the safe blowers and burglars who robbed the Shanesville bank Dec. 13, and supposed to be members of the gang who robbed the Seville bank a few nights before, will receive their sentences within a few days. Day pleaded guilty, while Haley and Fitzgerald stood trial and were found guilty.

Bitten by a Mad Dog.

Chicago, Feb. 15.—A mad bull dog dashed into a recitation room of the Kozminski school, at Fifty-fourth street and Ingleside avenue, Thursday. Before the animal was driven out it had severely bitten three of the children and created a panic, in which a number of others were badly bruised.

Wheelwomen in Europe.

Wheelwomen in Europe meet with many difficulties. In Russia everything is managed "by order of the czar," and cycling is no exception to the rule. Before a woman can possess a wheel she must obtain royal consent, and as this is granted quite sparingly there are but few wheelwomen in Russia.

France recognizes the right of the husband to be boss, and before madame can join the touring club she must first obtain a signed declaration from her spouse granting her the privilege.

In Florence women cyclists must carry two bells to warn pedestrians of the machine's approach. Men are required to have only one bell.

SOLAR PLEXIS BLOW

Judge Hollister Enjoins the Jeffries Ruhlin Contest.

DECLARES IT A PRIZE FIGHT

Gives His Reasons in a Very Lengthy Decision and Declares It a Nuisance —The Case Will be Appealed, and the Fight Is Postponed.

Cincinnati, Feb. 15.—Judge Hollister Thursday issued a permanent injunction against the Jeffries-Rurlin contest scheduled for Saengerfest hall in this city to-night. The decree of the court permanently restrained the managers of the contestants and the Saengerfest Athletic association and all connected with the proposed event from proceeding at Saengerfest hall on any date.

Attorneys for defendants gave notice of appeal, and took exception to the findings of law and facts by the court. If the case shall be carried to the court of last resort it is expected that counsel on both sides will agree upon a mere entry in the circuit court and proceed thence to the supreme court next Tuesday. Since the issue has been raised on an alleged distinction between prize fights and boxing contests, interested parties on both sides seem now to want a decision in the court of last resort in Ohio for a precedent in the future, even if the event shall be indefinitely postponed or declared off, as seems most probable.

There was a very large crowd at the court house in waiting for the final decree. The directors and members of the Saengerfest Athletic association, with their counsel, Managers Brady, Cook and Madden and others were among the most interested spectators, but it is doubtful whether they were more interested than the large assemblage of clergymen and other citizens who were opposing the contest. Nearly all the members of the Hamilton county bar were present. Judge Hollister began reading his decision at 11:25 a. m. and concluded at 1:40 p. m. He commanded the closest attention during the time he was engaged in reading his opinion.

The court cited cases at great length in deciding the following points:

First, that the proposed contest was to be a prize fight in fact and such as is prohibited under the Ohio statutes, and that the contentions of the defendants that they proposed to give a boxing contest had not been maintained.

Second, that the proposed fight would constitute a public nuisance, such as courts of equity are bound to restrain.

Third, that as a court of equity he had the power to enjoin the fight, although there was legal remedy after its occurrence.

Fourth, that in view of all the circumstances he was bound to grant a permanent injunction against such a public nuisance as was contemplated in the proposed prize fight.

The judge stated that he found a prize fight, rather than a boxing contest, to be contemplated, not only from the evidence of the state but also from that of witnesses for the defense.

After quoting from various decisions on the contention of counsel as to the difference between private and public nuisances, Judge Hollister said:

"The difference between public and private nuisance is that a private nuisance involves private property and a public nuisance involves all the interests of mankind."

Judge Pack at once gave notice of appeal and took exceptions to the findings of the court, both in law and in fact. After court adjourned counsel for the defendants were in conference during the afternoon and evening as to their future course, and the promoters postponed the contest on account of the decree of the court.

When the joint conference adjourned last night it was announced that nothing had been accomplished except an indefinite postponement of the contest that had been scheduled for to-night. It was announced that there would be another meeting this afternoon, at which it would be decided whether the defendants would carry the case to the circuit and supreme courts and the contest be postponed to such a date as would allow time for counsel to carry the case to the higher courts.

Among those who were at the conference of the directors of the Saengerfest Athletic association and their counsel were Jeffries, Brady, Madden, Cook, Eagen and Delaney. There was very small sale of tickets Thursday, although the Saengerfest people announced that all money received for tickets would be refunded if the fight shall not come off.

It is reported that the question of the $5,000 forfeit was under consideration Thursday afternoon and that this was the principal cause of the adjournment until to-day without definite action, or at least without any specific announcement of the event being postponed to any given date or declared off.

Earthquake in Tennessee.

Nashville, Feb. 15.—Quite a severe earthquake shock was felt at 6:15 o'clock Thursday night at Union City, Tenn. Houses rocked and windows and crockery rattled. The wave was from west to east and lasted several seconds.

Memphis, Feb. 15.—A slight earthquake shock, lasting about 20 seconds, was felt here at 6:15 o'clock Thursday evening.

Will Move Amendments.

London, Feb. 15.—The Irish Nationalists held a sessional meeting Thursday afternoon under the chairmanship of John Redmond, and decided to move amendments to the address on questions regarding compulsory land purchase, Irish administration, the South African war and Catholic universities.

Told the Truth.

Mother—Now, Georgie, I shall tell your papa to punish you severely for telling an untruth. You said you didn't touch one of those six peaches, and there is only one left, and I found the five stones in your nursery.

Georgie—I told no story, mamma. The peach I didn't touch is the one that's left.

Spoiled His Breakfast.

"How is the landlady this morning?" asked one of the boarders.

"Threatening and cooler," answered the man with the newspaper, misunderstanding the question.

And the other boarder, who was notoriously slow in settling with the landlady, looked partly cloudy.—Chicago Tribune.

SOUNDED A WARNING.

Senators Call Attention to Increased Expenses of the Government.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The senate devoted practically the entire day Thursday to the agricultural appropriation bill. The measure was not completed. Mr. Hale of Maine and Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts sounded notes of warning against the enormous appropriations being made by the present congress. Mr. Hale declared the people of the country soon would become alarmed and then those who were responsible for the immense expenditures would seek the rocks and mountains to hide from the wrath of the people.

Mr. Lodge declared that the expenditures of the government, as shown by the appropriations, were approaching rapidly the billion dollar mark, and he believed it was time now to draw the line. Every necessary expenditure ought to be made, but he asserted that some bills, notably the river and harbor bill, were loaded down with needless and useless appropriations. The speeches attracted much attention among senators.

A brief night session of the senate was held to complete the reading of the District of Columbia code bill.

The events in connection with the sale of the old New York custom house to the National City bank, which has heretofore has been the subject of much comment, occupied the center of the stage during the debate on the sundry civil appropriation bill in the house. Much excitement attended the debate. Mr. McRae, an Arkansas democrat, raised the issue with a motion to strike out the appropriation of $371,047 for rent of the custom house, and with this motion as a basis Mr. Jones of Virginia launched a fierce attack upon the manner and circumstances of the sale and the vast profits which he claimed the bank made out of the transaction.

Secretary Gage was sharply criticized and several references were made to the letter written by Mr. Hepburn to Secretary Gage apropos of the political claims of the bank.

Mr. Cannon and Mr. Hopkins of Illinois both defended the custom house transaction, and the latter turned the tables on the democrats by springing upon them a series of letters written by prominent democrats, including Senator Jones of Arkansas, to the secretary of the treasury under the Cleveland administration asking the deposit of government funds in banks with democratic proclivities. His center shot was a letter written by Representative Richardson of Tennessee in which the democratic leader of the house wrote on behalf of a bank at Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Mr. McRae of Arkansas indignantly charged that the letters were private letters and had been furnished to divert attention from the sale of the custom house. He and Mr. Hopkins had hot words and for a moment it looked almost as if there would be a personal encounter. In the end Mr. McRae's amendment was lost, 89 to 98 —a strict party vote—and another amendment offered by Mr. Richardson to provide that the rent should not be paid until the title to the old custom house passed from the government to the bank failed on a tie vote.

Forty-three of the 137 pages of the sundry civil bill were completed.

The house adjourned at 5:25.

Pan-American Rates.

New York, Feb. 15.—At a meeting of the trunk line passenger agents Thursday, the report of the sub committee to arrange rates for the Buffalo Pan-American exposition was adopted. This report, which has been heretofore published, provides for three general bases upon which to establish rates, each varying according to the time allowed and the accommodations given. The cheapest will be the coach excursion for five days at slightly more than the single fare for the round trip. Tickets good for ten days will be sold for about one and a half the single fare cost. It was decided that no application would be allowed for the charter of coaches to be used for hotel purposes at the exposition.

Challenge Billiard Match.

New York, Feb. 15.—Five hundred dollars was posted Thursday afternoon for a challenge billiard match in which Ora C. Morningstar of Chicago and Leonard Howison of Montreal engage, commencing next Monday night. The men will meet in Daly's academy for six nights of play. The game will be 14-inch balk line, with the anchor barred, two shots in balk. They will play in blocks of 300 points each night, a grand total of 1,800 points.

Record Filed.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The record in the case of Capt. Oberlin M. Carter was filed in the United States supreme court Thursday. The case is an appeal from the decision of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas denying Carter's motion for a writ of habeas corpus.

Explanation Called For.

Alfred (whose sporting opportunities have been limited by parental decree)—Papa, what does it mean by base on balls?

Papa (who is reading an account of the latest heavyweight fight)—Alfred, you could better employ yourself with your Sunday school lesson. I'm too busy now to explain.

Alfred (still thirsting for knowledge) —Did it mean the same as base on balls when you telephoned last night that as mamma was away you were going out on a bat?

Mamma (who is always listening)—Benjamin Ridgely, you will take time right now to make two explanations, with the most important one coming to me.—Denver News.

RUSHED THROUGH

Bill Abolishing Detroit's Board of Works Passed the Senate.

WILL BE A ONE MAN BOARD

Kent's Primary Election Bill Passes the Senate—House Again Breaks the Record in Introducing Bills—Ninety-four of Them.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 15.—Quietly and without ostentation Thursday the republicans in the Detroit delegation, aided by Thos. J. Navin, Frank C. Andrews and Allan H. Frazer, rushed through both houses of the legislature the bill to make a one-man head commission of the Detroit board of public works.

The senate yesterday afternoon passed the Burns house bill to abolish political conventions in Kent county. A similar bill for Wayne county was killed in the senate awhile ago, while 12 members were absent.

The Kent county bill came up in committee of the whole, with Senator Helme in the chair. Senators Atwood and Moore tried to have the bill amended so as to make it apply to Grand Rapids alone and not to the county outside of the city.

Senators Loomis and Weeks both said that the whole county wanted the bill and asked the senate not to change it. The amendment was lost by 16 to 11.

Senator Murfin offered an amendment providing that the bill should be submitted to the electors of Wayne county at the coming spring election, and that if adopted it should thereafter be the election law of that county. The amendment was carried by one vote, but both Senator Loomis and Rep. Colby said they thought the amendment would probably kill the bill, and, rather than be placed in the attitude of endangering the measure, Murfin withdrew the amendment.

The bill was then agreed to with no material amendments. Later the bill was passed by the senate.

Later, Senator Loomis tried to have the bill given immediate effect, so as to be operative at the spring election. Atwood opposed this, saying that he understood that the county commissioner of schools had already been nominated and it would not be fair to make him go out and get his nomination again. Loomis' motion failed.

The bill has already passed the house.

In the house Thursday afternoon 94 new bills were introduced, by far the largest number for any day so far this session of the legislature. Besides, several bills were considered and passed, the house remaining in session till nearly 5 o'clock.

Rep. McFarlain introduced a bill to prevent labor of any kind being performed in theaters on Sunday, the first day of the week. The bill was prepared by the theatrical union of Detroit and introduced by Mr. McFarlain at their request.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Feb. 15.—Michigan pensions were granted Thursday as follows: Original—Wm. H. McDowell, Adrian, $6; David F. Elkerton, Alaska, $6; John F. Wendell, Detroit, $12. Increase—Peter Houser, Constantine, $14; Harrison R. Johnson, Grawn, $12; Edgar D. Welch, Byron, $14; Ralph Taylor, Lansing, $14; Andrew S. Jolly, Ovid, $14; Edward Case, Fowler, $17; John Reidstadt, Fowler, $8. Widows—Julia Colton, Parma, $8; Mary M. Vanriper, St. Louis, $8. War with Spain: Widows—Lucy M. Whiddon, mother, Saginaw, $12.

Will Contest.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 15.—Counsel for Mrs. Louise Sutton of Orleans, Ionia county, appeared in the probate court here Thursday in opposition to the petition to the probate of the will of her deceased sister, Diona Elliott, who deeded and willed a farm and other property in Rives township, estimated to be worth between $15,000 and $20,000, to her hired man, Willis R. Butler, who gave the old lady his care during the last months of her life. She suffered from paralysis. The case was resumed this morning. It is alleged that Mrs. Elliott was incompetent to make the will.

The State Fair.

Pontiac, Mich., Feb. 15.—Pontiac's chances for securing the state fair seem favorable. Pontiac offers 50,000 people aside from those who will attend simply because it is the state fair. The state fair committee ask to be guaranteed against loss. The state fair committee also ask a guarantee against loss on expenses. It is now up to the local committee for a decision, and it is thought it will accept the terms offered.

Work of Demented Woman.

Grayling, Mich., Feb. 15.—A demented woman confined in a cell in the court house, set fire to the building Thursday, which burned to the ground, causing a loss of about $15,000 over and above the insurance. The insurance carried amounted to $8,000. It is believed that the records in the vaults are safe. The libraries, consisting of supreme court reports and legal works, were entirely destroyed.

Strike Settled.

Cleveland, Feb. 15.—A settlement in the strike between the 600 molders and the National Foundrymen's association has been reached and the molders who are idle because of the strike, about 300, will go to work in a few days. The terms of the agreement will probably be announced at a meeting of the foundrymen on Saturday. A condition of the settlement is that it must be ratified by the iron molders' union of Cleveland to-day and by the Cleveland Foundrymen's association Saturday afternoon.

THE LEADERS

Averages of the American League Baseball Players.

Chicago, Feb. 15.—The American league baseball averages for last year were issued by President Johnson last night. First Baseman Ganzel, who played with the Kansas City team until the middle of the season, when he was traded to the Chicago National league club, heads the batting list with an average of .391. Yeager of Milwaukee was a close second with an average of .387. Buelow of Cleveland came third with .353. Foreman of Buffalo gets fourth place with .340. Tamsett of Cleveland is last on the list, with but .141.

The Chicago team, which won the championship, is at the bottom of the list in club batting, with .237. Kansas City secured first place with .274. In club fielding, Milwaukee takes the lead with .947, Chicago second, .945, and Indianapolis was last with .929 per cent.

Waddell of Milwaukee heads the list of winning pitchers with an average of .750; Patterson, Chicago, second, .739; Miller, Detroit, third, .731, and Ehret, Minneapolis, last with .314.

Broderick of Buffalo has the best record as a shortstop with an average of .941. In the list of first basemen, Clark of Milwaukee gets the honors with an average of 1000.

First places in the other positions were secured by the following players:

Second basemen—Hallman, Buffalo, 940; third basemen, Coughlin, Kansas City, .920; outfielders, McAleer, Cleveland, .982; catchers, Ryan, Detroit, .976.

CALLED IMPOSSIBLE.

Arthur J. Balfour's Scheme for the Benefit of London's Poor.

London, Feb. 15.—Mr. Arthur J. Balfour's remedy for housing the poor of London is, as he explains it in a letter to Mr. Francis Herbert Stead, warden of the Robert Browning settlement, a scheme that would involve the construction in London of a system of radiating thoroughfares devoted exclusively to traffic of a speed of 15 miles per hour and upwards. His idea is that these thoroughfares, not being blocked by surface cars, could be used by automobiles or other fast vehicular devices at the public expense, or at that of companies or private individuals. There would be no cross-street traffic or pedestrians allowed to interfere, and hence persons residing at a considerable distance could go to and from their work.

Mr. Balfour suggests some form of auto-car propulsion. His notion seems to be that any village outside of London could run a sort of motor-omnibus to carry its inhabitants to and from London, and that these radiating causeways could be confined to this kind of traffic.

The Daily Chronicle calls the scheme "almost Eutopian and quite impossible so far as London is concerned."

Has Lost Interest.

Washington, Feb. 15.—It is said here that our government is taking no active part in the negotiations in progress at Copenhagen respecting the sale of the Danish West Indian islands to the United States. About a year ago our government was actively seeking to purchase the Danish West Indies. An adverse Danish cabinet obstructed the negotiations. Now a cabinet more ready for the transfer is in power, but our government has largely lost interest in the matter, and so what is going on in Copenhagen is not binding in any way on our side. It is said there is no expectation that the United States government will acquire these islands in the immediate future.

Not Likely to Agree.

London, Feb. 15.—Yachting World, commenting on the new proposals of the Royal Ulster Yacht club, says: "It is doubtful if the yachtsmen of Great Britain would support a request for a flying start. While Britishers are satisfied that it is a sporting way to begin a race, it must be remembered that flying starts are unknown to the New York Yacht club, and they would be, therefore, distinctly in favor of the British skippers, who have been trained to this method since they began to handle a tiller. It is not expected the New York Yacht club will agree to the innovation. Therefore, it is a pity the proposal was made."

Fight Postponed.

Dallas, Tex., Feb. 15.—The fight scheduled for to-night before the Olympic Athletic club of Dallas between Dan Creedon of New York and Harry Covert of Chicago, for a purse of $1,000, has been postponed to Feb. 22. Creedon requested the postponement in a telegram from New York Thursday night. He says he is not sufficiently recovered from his recent attack of grip.

To be Retired To-day.

Washington, Feb. 15.—Generals Jas. H. Wilson, Fitzhugh Lee and Theodore Schwan will be retired to-day, the last named on his own application. Col. A. S. Daggett, Fourteenth infantry, will be promoted to a brigadier general, succeeding Schwan, and will be retired immediately with his higher rank.

Destroyed by Fire.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 15.—The packing department of the Buffalo Bolt Co.'s plant at North Tonawanda, with a large stock, was destroyed by fire Thursday. The loss is estimated at from $15,000 to $100,000, and is covered by insurance.

A Costly Coating.

On one occasion Cluny Macpherson had dealings in his castle with one of the very poorest of his clansmen. He received him in one of the rooms which had just been decorated at great expense, and after their business was transacted the chieftain asked: "What do you think of this room? The varnishing alone cost me £150."

"That's naethin ava," was the astonishing response. "If you come along tae ma bit hoose, A'll show ye a room that cost fair mair than that tae be coated."

Macpherson wondered that he had never heard of it before and arranged to call around and see it. When he visited the place, a poor looking, thatched little "bigging," he was shown into a room so dark that he could scarcely see, with its walls literally blackened by the smoke from a peat fire.

"Here's ma room," exclaimed the triumphant tenant. "A make oot that it took five hunner loads o' peat tae coat it, and at 10 shillings the load that mak's two hunner and fifty pun!"

Arms and The Woman

"What?"

"Yes."

"Then you knew"—

"Pembroke," said I, "I had no intention of killing him or even wounding him. And I never expected to leave this place alive. Something has occurred during the last 24 hours which we do not understand."

"He was taking great risks."

"It shows the man he is," said I, and the remainder of the distance was gone in silence.

The carriages were in the road a short way from the inn. Pembroke and I got into ours. As the prince placed a foot on the step of his he turned once more to me.

"Pardon me," he said, "but I came near forgetting to tell you why I did not kill you this morning. In some way your princess came into the knowledge that we were going to fight it out as they did in the old days. She came to my rooms and there begged me to spare your life. There was a condition. It was that she get down on her knees to sue—down on her knees. Ah, what was your life compared to the joy of her humiliation! Not in the figure of speech—on her living, mortal knees, my friend—her living knees!" The carriage door banged behind him.

It was only because Pembroke threw his arms around me that I did not leap out of the carriage.

"Sit still, Jack, sit still! If she begged your life, it was because she loves you."

And, full of rage, I saw the carriage of the prince vanish. As the carriage vanished, so vanished the prince from the scene of my adventures.

Arriving at our rooms, we found them in possession of a lieutenant of the guard hussars. He was drumming on the hearthstone with the end of his sword scabbard. As we entered he rose and briefly saluted us.

"Which of you two gentlemen is Herr Winthrop?" he asked.

"I am he," said I.

"His majesty commands your immediate presence at the palace."

"The king?"

"Yes."

At the palace the chancellor met me in the anteroom. His face was grave almost to gloominess.

"Have you ever seen a king angry?" he asked. "Ah, it is not a pleasant sight, on my word; least of all to the one who has caused a king anger."

"You alarm me," I said. "Have I done aught to bring the anger of the king upon my head?"

"Ah, but you have! The king is like a bear in his den. He walks back and forth, waving his hands, pulling his mustache and muttering dire threats."

"Might I not take to my legs?" I asked. After all, I cared more than I thought I should in regard to what the king might do to me.

The chancellor gave my back a sounding thump and roared with laughter.

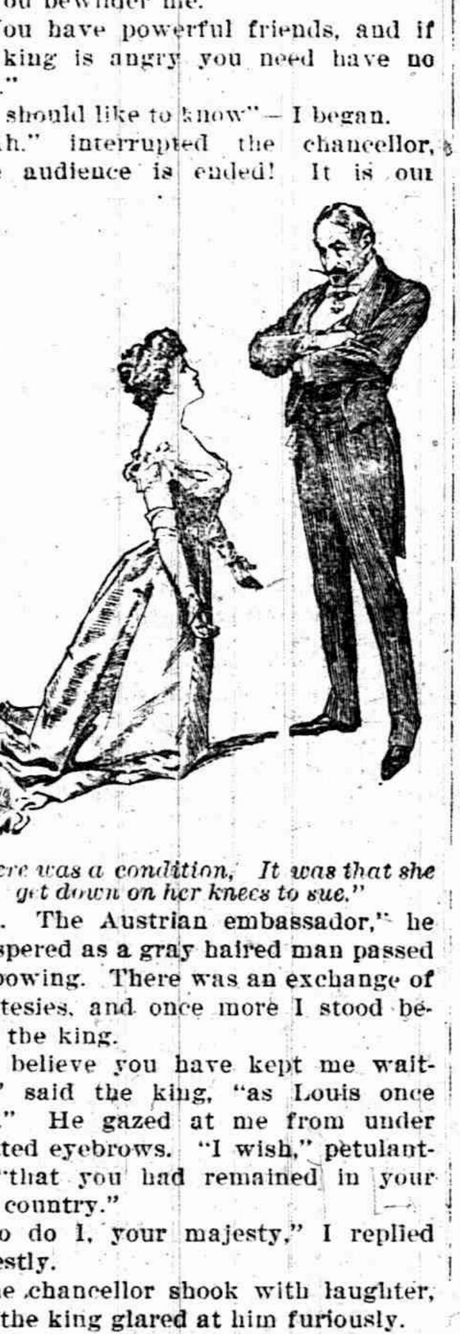
"Cheerful, my son; be cheerful! You are a favorite already."

"You bewilder me."

"You have powerful friends, and if the king is angry you need have no fear."

"I should like to know"—I began.

"Ah," interrupted the chancellor, "the audience is ended! It is our turn." The Austrian embassador," he whispered as a gray haired man passed us, bowing. There was an exchange of courtesies, and once more I stood before the king.



"There was a condition. It was that she get down on her knees to sue."

"I believe you have kept me waiting," said the king, "as Louis once said." He gazed at me from under knotted eyebrows. "I wish," petulantly, "that you had remained in your own country."

"So do I, your majesty," I replied honestly.

The chancellor shook with laughter, and the king glared at him furiously.

"What is your name?" asked the king in a milder tone. He was holding a missive in his hand.

"John Winthrop," I answered. I was wondering what it was all about.

"Were you born in America?"

"Yes, your majesty."

"Is your family an honored one in your country?"

"It is," I answered proudly.

"Then why in heaven's name do you scribble?" cried the king.

"In my country one may have an honored name and still be compelled to earn a competence."

"Ah, yes! After all, scribbling is better than owning a shop." This is the usual argument of kings. "Can you trace your pedigree very far back?" the king proceeded.

"My ancestors came over in the Mayflower," said I.

"The Mayflower?" said the king, puzzled.

"All the Americans," explained the chancellor, "went over in the Mayflower. The ark and the Mayflower were the largest ships ever put to sea, your majesty." To hide his smile the chancellor passed over to the window and began drawing pictures on the frosted panes.

Continued the king: "If you loved one of my countrywomen, would you be willing to sacrifice your own country? I mean would you be willing to adopt mine, to become a naturalized citizen, to uphold its laws, to obey the will of its sovereign and to take up arms in its defense?"

My knees began to knock together. "I should be willing," I answered, "if I should never be called upon to bear arms against the country in which I was born."

"I should never ask you to do that," replied the king.

"Yes, your majesty."

"Then marry the Princess Elizabeth," he said, tossing the missive to me.

"Yes, marry her," said the irrepressible chancellor, "and some day the king will put a medal on your breast and make you a baron of the realm. Your majesty, come and help me with this last pane."

The Princess Elizabeth? I glanced at the writing on the envelope. It was Gretchen's. "And, your majesty," I read, "it is true that they love each other. Permit them to be happy. I ask your forgiveness for all the trouble I have caused you. I promise that from now on I shall be the most obedient subject in all your kingdom. Hildegarde." I dropped the letter on the table.

"Your majesty," I began nervously, "there is some mistake. I do not love her highness the Princess Elizabeth."

The king and his chancellor whirled around. The decorations on the panes remained unfinished. The king regarded me with true anger and the chancellor with dismay.

"I love the Princess Hildegarde," I went on in a hollow voice.

"Is this a jest?" demanded the king.

"No; on my honor." For once I forgot court etiquette and left off "your majesty."

"Let me see the letter," said the chancellor, with a pacific purpose. "There is some misunderstanding here." He read the letter and replaced it on the table and went back to his window.

"Perhaps, your majesty," said I, "it is possible that her highness—the likeness between her and her sister—perhaps, knowing that I have known her highness Phyllis—that is, the Princess Elizabeth—she may believe that I"—It was very embarrassing.

"Continue," said the king, "and please make your sentences intelligible."

"What I meant to say was that her highness the Princess Hildegarde believes that I love her sister instead of herself—I thought—she has written otherwise"— And then I foundered again.

"Prince," said the king, laughing in spite of his efforts to appear angry, "for pity's sake tell me what this man is talking about."

"A woman," said the chancellor. "Perhaps her highness the Princess Hildegarde—that is, I believe—she may love this man—perhaps, thinking he loves the other"— He was mocking me, and my face burned.

"Prince, do not confuse the man. He is bad enough as it is." The king smoothed away the remnant of the smile.

"Your majesty is right," said I desperately. "I am confused. I know not what to say."

"What would you do in my place?" asked the king of the chancellor.

"I should say in an ominous voice, 'Young man, you may go, but if you ever enter our presence again without either one or the other of the Hohenphalian princesses as your wife we shall confiscate your property and put you in a dungeon for the remainder of your natural days.' I put in the confiscation clause as a matter of form. Have you any property?"

"What I have," I answered, my confidence returning, "I can [illegible] t in my pockets."

"Good," said the king. "What the chancellor says is but just. See to it that his directions are followed."

"Now, my king," concluded the chancellor, "put a medal on him and let him go."

"In time," replied the king. "You may go, Herr Winthrop."

"Go and scribble no more," added the chancellor.

I could hear them laughing as I made my escape from the room. It could not be expected of me to join them. And Gretchen was as far away as ever. Phyllis love me? It was absurd. Gretchen had played me the fool. She had been laughing at me all the time. Yet she had begged my life of the prince and on her knees. Or was it a lie of his? Oh, it seemed to me that my brain would never become clear again.

In the afternoon at 4 I was ushered into the boudoir of her highness the Princess Elizabeth. It was Phyllis no longer. Phyllis had passed, and I became conscious of a vague regret.

"I am glad," she said, "that you were able to come. I wanted to speak to you about—about my sister."

"Your highness"—

She laughed. "Our interview shall end at once if you call me by that title. Sir," with a gayety which struck me as unnatural, "you are witnessing the passing of Phyllis. It will not be long before she shall pass away and never more return, and the name shall fade till it becomes naught but a dear memory. Phyllis has left the green pastures for the city, and Corydon followeth not."

"Phyllis," said I, "you are cutting me to the heart."

"But to the matter at hand," she said quickly. "There is a misunderstanding between you and my sister Hildegarde. She sent me this letter. Read it."

It differed but little from the one I had read in the king's chamber that morning. I gave it back to her.

"Do you understand?"

"I confess that I do not. It seems that I am never going to understand anything again."

Phyllis balanced the letter on the palm of her hand. "You are so very blind, my dear friend. Did you not tell her that there had been another affair? Do you not believe she thinks your regard for her merely a matter of pique, of consolation? It was very kind of her to sacrifice herself for me. Some women are willing to give up all to see the man they love made happy. My sister is one of those. But I shall refuse the gift. Jack, can you not see that the poor woman thinks that you love me?" Phyllis was looking at me with the greatest possible kindness.

"I know not what she thinks. I only know that she has written me that she is sorry for having played with my affections. Phyllis, if she loved me she would not leave me as she has done."

"Oh, these doubting Thomases!" exclaimed Phyllis. "How do you know that she does not love you? Have you one true proof that she does not? No, but you have a hundred that she does."

"But"—

"Do you love her?" demanded Phyllis, stamping her foot with impatience.

"Love her? Have I not told you that I do?" gloomily.

"And will you give her up because she writes you a letter? What has ink to do with love and a woman? If you do not set out at once to find her, I shall never forgive you. She is my sister, and by that I know that you cannot win her by sitting still. Go find her and tell her that you will never leave her till she is your wife. I do not mean to infer," with a smile, "that you will leave her after. Go to her as a master. That is the way a woman loves to be wooed. Marry her and be happy, and I shall come and say, 'Heaven bless you, my children.' I have accepted the renunciation of her claims so that she may be free to wed you. If you do not find her, I will. Since I have her promise to teach me the lesson of being a princess she cannot have gone far. And when you are married you will promise to visit me often? I shall be very lonely now. I shall be far away from my friends. I shall be in a prison, and men call it a palace."

"I will promise you anything you may ask," I said eagerly. A new hope and a new confidence had risen in my heart. I wonder where man got the idea that he is lord of creation when he depends so much upon woman? "And you will really be my sister, too!" taking her hands and kissing them. "And you will think of me a little, will you not?"

"Yes." She slowly withdrew her hands. "If you do not find her, write to me."

"Your highness, it is my hope that some day you will meet a prince who will be worthy of you, who will respect and honor you as I do."

"Who can say? You have promised the king to become a subject of Hohenphalia."

"Yes."

"Then you will be a subject of mine. It is my will—I am in a sovereign mood—that you at once proceed to find Hildegarde, and I will give her to you."

"Auf wiedersehen!"

"Goodby!"

My ear detected the barest falter in her voice, and something glistened on her eyelashes. Ah, why could not the veil have remained before my eyes and let me gone in darkness? Suddenly I was looking across the chasm of years. There was a young girl in white, a table upon which stood a pitcher. It was a garden scene, and the air was rich with perfumes. The girl's hair and eyes were brown, and there were promises of great beauty. Then, as swiftly as it came, the vision vanished.

On reaching the street I was aware that my sight had grown dim and that things at a distance were blurred. Perhaps it was the cold air.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Immediately Pembroke and I journeyed to the feudal inn. When we arrived, a mixture of rain and snow was falling. But I laughed at that. What if I were drenched to the skin with chill rain and snow, my heart was warm, warmer than it had been in many a day. Woman is infallible when she reads the heart of another. Phyllis said that Gretchen loved me. It only remained for me to find her.

"Where is the innkeeper?" I asked, my heart sinking.

"He is not here," was the answer.

"Is her highness the Princess Hildegarde"—

"Her highness!" he cried in astonishment. "She has never been here. This is an inn. The castle is in the village."

"How long have you been here?" asked Pembroke.

"Two weeks, your highness." Doubtless he thought us to be high personages to be inquiring for the princess.

"Is Stahlberg here?" I asked.

"He is visiting relatives in Coburg," was the answer.

"Do you know where her highness is?"

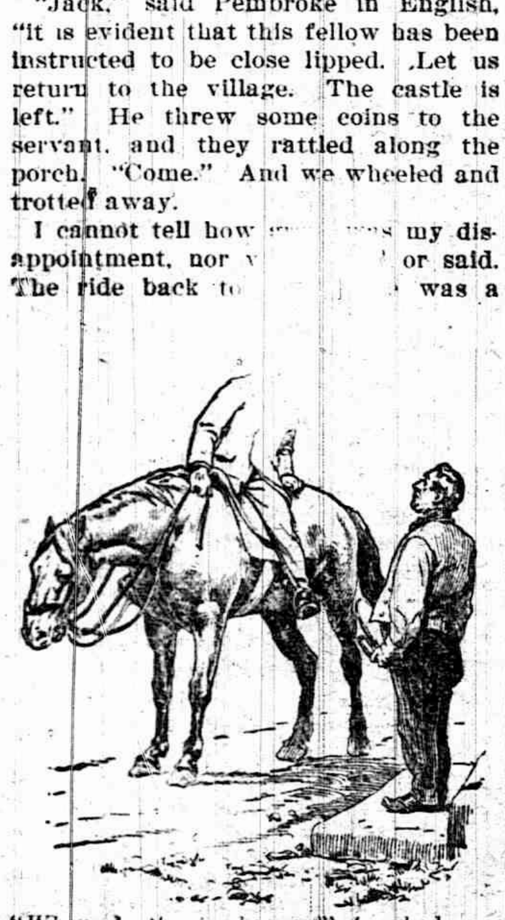
"No." It occurred to me that his voice had taken to sullen tones.

"When will the innkeeper be back?"

The fellow shrugged his shoulders. "I cannot say, your highness. The inn is not open for guests till March."

"Jack," said Pembroke in English, "it is evident that this fellow has been instructed to be close lipped. Let us return to the village. The castle is left." He threw some coins to the servant, and they rattled along the porch. "Come." And we wheeled and trotted away.

I cannot tell how [illegible] my disappointment, nor [illegible] or said. The ride back to [illegible] was a dreary affair so far as conversation went. At the castle we found not a soul.



"Where is the innkeeper?" I asked, my heart sinking.

"It is as I expected," said Pembroke. "Remember that her highness is accustomed to luxury and that it is not likely for her to spend her winter in such a deserted place. You're a newspaper man. You ought to be full of resources. Why don't you telegraph to all the news agencies and make inquiries? She is a personage, and it will not be difficult to find her if you go at it the right way."

Cautious.

Many years ago, when printed music was dearer than it is now, a plain, quiet man, evidently from the country, went into a London music shop and asked to see a certain book of tunes. The clerk laid before him an oblong volume with two tunes on a page, a book familiar to old time choir singers.

The old man drew out of his coattail pocket an ancient yellow fife and, opening the book at the first page, began to play softly, turning the leaf with careful fingers as each page was finished.

The clerks, very much amused at first, grew weary of the droning noise after a time, and one of them, waiting till a tune was ended, ventured to say politely:

"Do you think you will take the book, sir? Does it seem to suit you?"

The fife was lowered, and the player, looking over it at the youth in mild surprise, said gently:

"I cannot tell. I have played only half the tunes," and placidly turned another leaf.

STORM IN THE SUMMER.

Storm in the summer's a mighty funny thing,
Like a woman's temper when it takes a fling;
Comes of a sudden, and you don't know why;
You start in guessing, and it's all gone by;
Swish and sweep, and it's in full blast;
You catch your breath, and it's flown clear past;
Thunder and lightning and sulphur in the air,
And the very next minute the sun shines fair!

And it's just this way that the truth is shown
Why sweet Dame Nature is a woman known;
She can nurse her wrath through a mighty long truce,
But it breaks for keeps when it does break loose!
And she storms like a tyrant and makes things hum
Till its easy to believe that it's kingdom come,
And all of a sudden there's mercy in her eye,
And she laughs and dimples, and the storm's gone by!

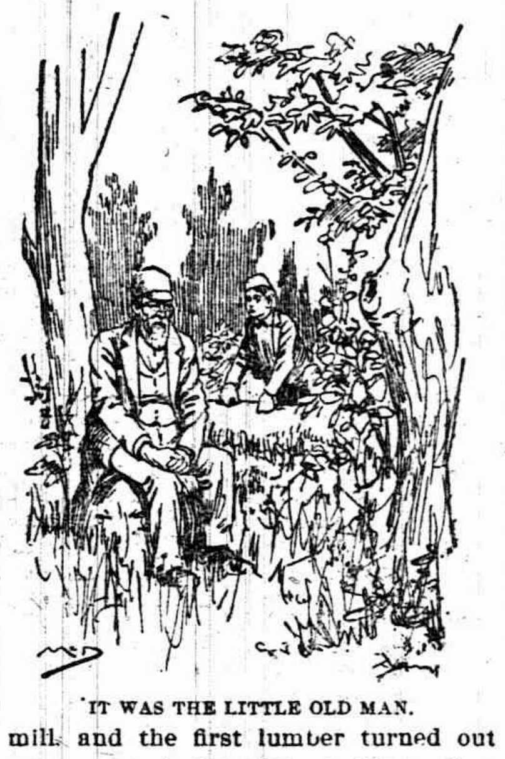
Old Parker's Ghost

By M. Quad.

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY C. B. LEWIS.

That I really and truly saw a ghost on a certain occasion is a matter of legal record, and I believe it is the only ghost ever legally known to a community.

I was a boy of 11 when the family emigrated from Ohio to Michigan and settled in a town of 1,500 people. There had just died a citizen named John Parker, who was always referred to as old Parker. He was one of the pioneers of the town, and his eccentricities had greatly retarded its growth. No one ever learned where he came from or anything about his private life. He came alone, lived alone and died alone. He was a queer looking little old man, stoop shouldered, of shambling gait, and there were days when he refused to speak to any one. He bought 200 town lots and then refused to sell or lease. He built a sawmill, and the first lumber turned out was wanted for the erection of a church. Because the old man was asked to make a discount in price in favor of the Lord, as it were, he shut down the mill, boarded up doors and windows, and the saws never turned again. He bought two stores and five or six houses and shut them up, and he bought every improvement for the benefit of the town. On the other hand, he lent men money at a low rate of interest to make improvements, encouraged people to settle there and built the first schoolhouse entirely at his own expense.



IT WAS THE LITTLE OLD MAN.

While owning five or six comfortable houses, which were empty, old Parker lived alone in a miserable shanty and cooked and washed and mended for himself. No one was ever permitted to enter his house, and he never entered the home of any one else. There were a few men with whom he would converse, but he did not give them his confidence. There was no mourning in Red Oak when it became known one morning that old Parker had been found dead in his shanty. The feeling was rather one of relief and congratulation. It was soon ascertained that his affairs were in a muddle. He had left no will, and the papers in the hands of his lawyers did not represent the half of his possessions. It was hardly a fortnight before a brother and sister turned up, each claiming the estate, and through them it was learned that the old man must have been possessed of at least $85,000 in gold when he died. Of this sum only about $200 could be found. The town was turned upside down over the affair, and it had got into court when we moved into the village. That was in midwinter. As a boy, I could not understand or interest myself in the legal complications of the case, but the fact that old Parker had hidden a big lot of gold somewhere appealed to me very strongly. The sawmill and all his houses were searched, but no trace could be found. It was generally believed that he had buried it, but until the snow melted no effort could be made to find the cache.

On the 14th day of March, with six inches of snow still on the ground, I went with my father into the woods after a load of wood. We had a yoke of oxen and a sled, and when the first load was heaped up my father drove off with it and left me behind to cut down a dead ash and clear a road around a bit of a swamp.

After he was out of sight I sat down on a log to watch a rabbit hopping about. I may have spent five minutes watching the animal when a slight noise at my right startled me, and I looked around to find old John Parker sitting within ten feet of me. He had been described so often that there could be no mistake. It was the little old man with the stoop shoulders, the long hair, the seedy garments, the catskin cap he wore every day in the year. He had a dry hacking cough; he had bushy gray eyebrows; he had missing teeth. He sat there and rubbed his skinny hands together and looked at the ground at his feet, and I took in every detail as clearly as you see this print before you.

Was I frightened? Strangely enough, I was not. Perhaps this was because I had never seen the old man when living. He looked so real before me that I never thought of spooks or ghosts. I simply believed that his dying had been a mistake—that he had gone away instead of dying. I was no more in fear of him than of the trees about me. I wondered a bit how he could have approached me so closely without my having heard him, for the snow had a frosty crust to it, but there he was, and it was not long before I said to him:

"Did you come out here to see my father?"

Old John did not look about, though he continued to rub his hands. I repeated the question in a louder voice, but the result was the same. I looked to see if he had an ax or a gun, but nothing was in sight. So far as I could tell, he had not yet seen me, and, feeling a bit embarrassed over the situation, I rose up and moved over to make my presence known. I had started to repeat my question, and my eyes were full on him, when he dissolved. He faded out of my eyes as a wet finger mark fades from a school slate, and I found myself looking at a snow covered log. I looked for his tracks, but there was none. I looked for the spot where he had sat, but the snow had not been disturbed in the slightest. I did not have a fit of the shivers and run away. It was a sunshiny day, and I thought the glare on the snow had in some way played me a trick. I had the tree down and the road cleared when father returned, and when I told him of my strange visitor I expected to be laughed at. Indeed, I laughed as I told it, but father didn't. He began to question me very closely, and by the time he had loaded the sled I could see that he took the matter seriously. When we were ready to go, he asked me to point out the exact spot where old John had sat. This was easy though to know, as my own tracks were there in the snow. The snow on the log was piled up and frozen hard, but father soon cleared it off with the ax. Then he pounded on the log, found it hollow and cut into it. He had hardly struck 20 blows when there came a sound to show that the ax had struck something besides wood, and five minutes later we had old Parker's missing gold out of the hollow log. It was in two tin boxes, and there were many papers with it to clear up the mystery of his life and assist the heirs in settling up the estate. They were generous to me in settlement, and it was part of the legal records of the county that I saw a ghost at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of a bright day and recovered the treasure because of it.

Nature Is Kind In California.

The New England farmer must fortify himself in his stronghold against the seasons. He must be ready to adapt himself to a year that permits him to prosper only upon decidedly hard terms, says The International Monthly. But the Californian in the country has during the drought more leisure unless, indeed, his ambition for wealth too much engrosses him. His horses are plenty and cheap. His fruit crops thrive easily. He is able to supply his table with fewer purchases with less commercial independence.

His position is therefore less that of the knight in his castle and more that of the free dweller in the summer cottage, who is, indeed, not at leisure, but can easily determine how he shall be busy. It is of little importance to him who his next neighbor is. At pleasure he can ride or drive to find his friends, can choose, like the southern planter of former days, his own range of hospitality: can devote himself, if a man of cultivation, to reading during a good many hours at his own choice or, if a man of sport, can find during a great part of the year easy opportunities for hunting or for camping both by himself and for the young people of his family.

In the dry season he knows beforehand what engagements can be made without regard to the state of the weather, since the state of the weather is predetermined.

Americans In England.

Whatever may be the points of contrast between us, there is no doubt that Americans in ever increasing numbers are settling in England. It is remarkable how many have made permanent homes in London. They like to live there.

When an American has made a fortune, he finds it almost impossible to live quietly in his own country. There is something in the very atmosphere of the United States that makes people wish to burn the candle at both ends. Over here they may subdue the incandescence to the veriest glimmer. But chief among the attractions that this country has for Americans is that they can escape the newspapers. Here wealthy persons can spend their money as freely as they wish, and they still remain private persons.

These are some of the reasons why the American colony in the British metropolis grows every year. But there is a more subtle reason. Americans love to come here. The writer has talked to very many Americans, and almost all of them admit that in coming to England they are coming to a place for which they have a great respect and love, where they expect to find everything finished and orderly and quiet.—London Telegraph.

ARE YOUR EYES BAD?

Dr. M. F. STEIN,

THE FAMOUS SPECIALIST

Will cure you. Many people become all but totally blind and at an early age, simply because they pay no attention to their eyes. They notice a dimness and a soreness after reading awhile and when a miserable headache comes to them they ascribe it to any cause but the right one and take a pill. The real cause, but the misery, is that their eyes are weak and every time they read or write means an added strain and the eyes made still weaker. Consultation with a specialist means the ending of all misery and the saving to you of your eye-sight. Dr. Stein is reliable. You do not see him once and then look for him again in vain. He makes regular visits to your city. Come and see him and have your eyes scientifically tested free of charge, that you may have comfort when you read and write.

The Adrian and Tecumseh lodges of Rathbone sisters were entertained by the Tipton lodge at Tipton last night. Several were initiated, the Adrian lodge doing the work.

One of Avery & Co.'s clerks has discovered that it is almost impossible to go down stairs without an elevator. At least, V. Stevens has invented one. Last Wednesday as he was going down cellar carrying a 50 pound can of lard, he slipped on the second step and is now laid up with a lame back.

Mrs. M. E. Harris, the hair dresser will be in Tecumseh Feb. 20 and 21.
MRS. M. E. HARRIS.

Probably no clothiers have met with any more success in Tecumseh than McCann Bros. They came here from Bunker Hill in 1893 and have stocked up a neat little store, in fact their stock is complete. Ready to wear suits, neckties, hats and in fact a neater gents furnishing department would be hard to find. They keep one clerk all the time and their trade is increasing daily.

No matter what you desire in the furniture line. We have it and sell the goods at the right prices.

Wednesday's Evening News contained a picture of "A Child Violinist" reproduced from a crayon sketch by Miss Amelia Lockner, a young inmate of the Wayne county house, whose hands and feet are badly crippled and who has never taken instructions in drawing. Miss Lockner was the daughter of Geo. F. Lockner, of Adrian, who died in '92, leaving his family in poverty. Miss Lockner, then 16 years of age, did all she could to support her mother and crippled brother. Her mother died in '96 and her brother in '98 and she was then taken to the poor house in Detroit. The doctors have given up all hopes of her recovery but she retains her cheerfulness and is anxious to improve her drawing.

One hundred-thirty leaf tablet larger than the 5 cent kind for 4 cents at The Fair.

Harold Nessel, formerly of Adrian, runs the new novelty store called "The Fair" and carries a fine stock of stationary and books. His assortment of writing materials cannot be beaten in this or any other town of its size. The school children have made that discovery and he receives a good share of their uncertain patronage. There is also a varied assortment of granite ware and other accessories of a well selected stock of novelty goods, which entitles him to a share of the public favor. At holiday time there were to be found many gems on the book table, poems and classics in pretty and cheap bindings that were very attractive and we understand it is Mr. Nessel's intention to keep this line full and make it one of the leading features of the Fair.

About 40 of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. William Powell surprised them completely last Wednesday evening by taking possession of the house and waiting their return from town. Cards were the chief amusement of the evening. Refreshments were served after which the guests departed.

The postoffice floor is slippery. J. F. Jenkins found it so at any rate. Thursday as he was going into the postoffice, he slipped and fell to the floor and his fist came down a little too heavy on the register, which gave way under such a great pressure, therefore a heavy board nailed down securely serves for one half of the register.

Next week is my last week. Have just received an elegant line of goods.
MISS EVA MOROSS.

The case of the people vs. Albert Reattoire was tried Tuesday by a jury before. Justice Frazier for assault and battery. The jury found the defendant guilty and he was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 or 90 days in the house of correction. The case has been appealed to the circuit court. J. N. Sampson appeared for the people and G. R. Gillespie for the defendant.

The Misses Clara Mulligan, Mary Hagen, Florence Kane, Laura Bush, Kittie and Leo Murry, Irene Howley, Mattie Collins, Sadie Albro, Mildred Conelly, May, Mamie and Grace Riley and Messrs Willie Noveskey, Austin Collins and the Misses Katherine Hurley and Julia Kernan as chaperones all of Adrian, came over last night to spend the evening with Agnes Riley.

We take the following from the Santa Anna Celery Blade: D. E. Smeltzer is probably the largest buyer and shipper of celery in the United States, thus making him the Celery King. Twelve years ago when D. E. Smeltzer & Co., first commenced buying celery they procured their stock largely of Wilson Bros., Tecumseh, Mich., thus becoming the first shippers of celery in the rough in United States. Wilson Bros. & Co. are growing largely in the vicinity of Sanford, Florida which Mr. Smeltzer will probably control when it is ready for market, which will be about the 1st. of April.

One hundred and forty-nine correspondents in the State report that the ground has been well covered with snow during January, while four hundred and fourteen report that the ground has been practically bare.

The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed by farmers in January at the flouring mills is 215,585, and at the elevators 79,310 or a total of 294,895 bushels. Of this whole amount 238,033 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties, 45,291 in the central counties and 11,601 in the northern counties. The total number of bushels of wheat reported marketed in the six months, August-January, is 2,349,985, which is 1,821,041 bushels less than reported marketed in the same months last year.

The Farmers' Beet Sugar Co held its annual meeting at Dundee Feb. 13 and elected the following officers:
Pres —Hon. Chas. Flower, Detroit.
Vice Pres.—R. B. Davis, Dundee.
Sec. and Gen. Mgr.—Edward C. Post, Monroe.
Treas.—G. I. Shaefer, Dundee.

In view of the success of last year, the company is arranging to put out a large acreage of beets this season, and have already secured a large number of contracts throughout Monroe, Wayne, Washtenaw and Lenawee Counties. They are giving good inducements, and the farmers are contracting liberally, realizing that the beet is a foundation for the future of agriculture in Michigan. Let every farmer put in a few acres of beets this year, and he will learn much of the details of beet growing.

RAILROAD NEWS.

Henry W. Wentworth Detroit Agent of Lehigh and Wabash dispatch, died at his home in Detroit Sunday, Feb. 10, of consumption, after an illness of several months. He was a talented musician and had composed a number of pieces which have been published. He was 30 years of age and was a general favorite with the other men in his office, and popular among a large circle of acquaintances. The funeral was held at their home in Detroit Tuesday and Wednesday was brought here for burial. After short services here conducted by Rev. S. Louise Haight, the remains were interred on family lot in Brookside. Beside a wife and child one year old, Mr. Wentworth leaves a host of other relatives Mrs. Wentworth was a sister to Wm. Smallidge of this place. Those who accompanied the remains here were Mrs. Wentworth, F. S. Ream, E. P. Stevens and wife, H. G. Peckham, T. S. North, H. Dear, F. Gibbous, F. E. Leland, R. P. Peckham all railroad men, of Detroit, acting as pall-bearers. The family have the sympathy of the entire community, in their sad affliction.

Forty one thousand nine hundred shares of the Cincinnati Northern Railroad Company preferred, $100 each; 26,100 shares of the Cincinnati Northern Railroad Company, common, $100 each; 1,500 shares of Jackson & Cincinnati Railroad common, $100 each; 15,000 shares Detroit, Toledo & Milwaukee Railroad Company first mortgage 5 per cent, 50-year gold bonds.

While this dispatch does not indicate who are the purchasers of the bonds, it is generally supported that the Vanderbilts interests have now control of the securities. With the other securities that the Vanderbilts purchased, they now control the Cincinnati Northern and will be in position to recorganize the property.

Powever, it must be said that in the absence of an official statement anything as to who will control the property is largerly of a speculative nature. The only thing that is assured by the sale is an early reorganization and general improvement of the property. —Toledo Blade.

Good Work.

The work of the Metal Weather Striping is being put in at Thomas Meads residence in Raisin, also a number of residences in Adrian, such as Daniel Metcaff, C. P. Miller, W. H. Rodgers and Mr. Curtis professor of central school. This work is Metal joints between sash and jamb of windows, making it wind proof, dust proof and free from rattling. The work is being put in by A. A. Blood, of Toledo, who is doing a thriving business in that city, employing a number of the best skilled mechanics to do the work.

AROUND TOWN.

Last winter Tom Caldwell was in F. B. Wood's law office for some time and besides reading law and doing some copy work, was supposed to take care of the fires, and keep the office in a clean and presentable condition. Now, Tom is a real good clerical man and painstaking about every little detail but about fires and dusting and matters of this sort, is apt to be absent minded, at times. Besides this, Fred Wood owns the meanest stove in Lenawee county and between the natural meanness of the stove and Tom's absentmindness the fire would extinguish itself nearly every night.

At first Tom used the choicest variety of charcoal and the fire building went on nicely but the charcoal soon gave out and Tom resorted to common pine boxes. Then the neighborhood stores locked up their boxes and Tom resorted to the servant girl's method and common kerosene. This method worked first rate till one morning he loaded the stove with a little too much coal oil and the result was a small sized explosion. When Mr. Wood arrived at the office in the morning, he found Tom in quite a dazed condition. The stove was without doors and lids and stove pipe and soot were scattered all over the place. After many words, a bucket of charcoal and some soothing syrup Tom was "brought to" and the stove again started on its best speed.

About 10 o'clock that same morning, Dr. North was seen carrying his whole stock of stove pipe over to Satterthwaite's store to have it riveted together and in explaining the matter to Lawyer Wood said, "A peculiar gust of wind came down my chimney this morning and blew my stove pipe all over the room and I took it right over and had every joint riveted. Tell you every stove pipe ought to be riveted. It might be needless to state that the stovepipes of both the doctor's and lawyer's stoves run into the same chimney and the doctor does not know of the explosion to this day.

The State 'Phone business in Tecumseh has grown to great proportions. The company now renders service over 320 telephones and the service is usually very good too. The subscribers all being well satisfied and as a rule the business and service works smoothly.

Some few weeks since Chas. Chapin came over from Adrian and proposed giving to Tecumseh free of charge a new telephone directory, containing Tecumseh names as well as all those in the county. The "scheme" looked well and our Tecumseh telephone company took up the plan immediately.

The directories came, but the pages were so mixed up with advertisements intermingled with the names that a subscriber would have to take lessons to find any number whatsoever in the book. The telephone subscribers are all kicking like fun and many of them will refuse to call by number if this thing continues. The book in itself is a good one and could be gotten up with the "ads." in front and back so that it would be convenient to the subscribers besides is a commendable saving to the company, if made convenient to its patrons.

A number of years ago the A. P. A. was organized and in some sections of the country is still running. It was an organization to put down the Catholic church and the methods used were the same the association accused the Catholics of using in putting down Americanism. The movement was a failure and so will be all movements of this kind. "Two wrongs will never make one right."

Mrs. Carrie Nation is attempting to put down whiskey selling in Kansas by disobeying the law, in other words, by doing the same as the saloon keepers are doing. The principle of prohibition may be all right but so far the executive ability of its managers in this country has been so poor that all the places where a prohibition law has been passed, it has been a failure, and one cause of this failure has been the hanging on of a number of just such fanatics as Mrs Carrie Nation, people who have no reason and would have no use for it even with the possession.

The people of Kansas should enforce their laws and commence with locking up Mrs. Nation. Then punish every saloon man doing business in violation of the law and if the laws are wrong change them.

It has been the ambition of the management of the HERALD to make the paper each week as good as possible for the money. It is no easy job to furnish a paper two times each week for $1.00 and have the balance sheet foot up the right way at the end of the year; but notwithstanding, each month something new is done to please and interest the subscribers. The last idea is to print each Tuesday the marriage licenses, probate court proceedings and real estate transfers for the whole county. The HERALD is the only paper outside of Adrian printing them in full and with the getting the reports and setting the extra type it is no small expense. It would be well to keep in mind that in the HERALD is all the news of Tecumseh and printed as soon as it happens.

In Memoriam.

Mary Holtz Henderson was born in the town of Amsterdam, N. Y., Dec. 10, 1865. In 1874 she came to Michigan with her parents, who settled in the township of Ridgeway, Lenawee county. She was married to Edward Henderson, Nov. 26, 1886, and during their residence in Mooreville, she united with the Baptist church of that place in 1897.

Mrs. Henderson's illness was painful and protracted but she bore her suffering with Christian fortitude and patience and expressed herself as ready and willing to go. She departed this life Jan. 26, 1901, leaving one sister, Mrs. Lester, of Britton, a husband and two daughters to mourn her loss

Come! Divide!

A whole lot of people owe the Tecumseh HERALD for their subscription for 1901. Bills have been mailed to the whole outfit and the management will promise faithfully that every subscriber who does not pay by March 1 will be charged the 25 cents extra for not paying in advance. The HERALD at $1.00 gives most for the money of any paper in Lenawee county and must be paid for in advance.

For Bachelor Girls.

A new sort of cozy corner, which girls are affecting just now, is formed by the use of a hammock strung across a draped corner and piled with the usual gay pillows. A low wicker stool takes the place of the regulation tea table, being of a more convenient height for the lazy occupant of the hammock. If the hammock be a handsome one—and it can be made such by the artistic use of oriental drapery and pillows—it will be an addition to the room and a favorite loafing place for the owner and those of her girl friends who are admitted into her sanctum.

John L. Sullivan's Brawn.

Some eminent tragedians were once quizzing John L. Sullivan, then in his heyday. Said one of them:

"Say, John, why don't you try the legitimate? Look at Muldoon. He has played the wrestler until he is as well known in connection with Shakespeare as he is on the mat."

John looked thoughtful for a moment and then growled:

"Say, do you think I could do it?"

"Why, sure. Play 'The Gladiator.' Just the piece for you."

Once again John thought awhile and then said:

"Say, that's a good idea. I think I've got a good scheme to work with it too."

"What is it, John?"

"Why, I'd have a real solid iron arena. I'd come into the arena and holler, 'Bring out your wild ox!' See? Then I'd have 'em bring in a live bull. I'd wrestle round the ring with it until I got a good hold on its horns, and then I'd slowly twist it down and break its neck. Then I'd put my foot on its neck and say, 'Behold the invincible, yours truly, John L. Sullivan, champion of the world!' I'd kill a real live bull for 'em every night. How do you think that'd hit 'em?"

"Great! But great Scott, John! Can you kill a bull like that?"

"Huh! Can I? Come out to the slaughter house and see me do it."—Kansas City Independent.

The Cost of a Duke.

A correspondent of London M. A. P. tells a story of the Duchess of Montrose, whose beauty is no less renowned than her philanthropy. The scene was a bazaar where the duchess was selling photographs. One old Scotchwoman was very anxious to secure a photograph of the duchess, but the price asked was 5 shillings. The old woman hesitated. She wanted the photograph, but she could not well afford so much.

"You can have my husband," said the duchess, with an amused glance at the duke standing near, "for 2s. 6d."

The would be purchaser looked at the duke and then at his photograph contemptuously.

"Half a crown!" she blurted out. "I wouldna give a silver saxpence for him. But," she added insinuatingly, "I am right willing to give hauf a croon for your bonnie sel'."

The duchess was unable to resist this, and herself added the other half crown to the bazaar coffers, or, as another version of the story goes, the despised duke proffered the balance.

The Lost Repeater.

When monsieur—the first monsieur at the court of Louis XIV—discovered at his levee that his watch had been stolen, presumably by one of his valets, he finished dressing hastily and, addressing them all, said: "Gentlemen, the watch strikes. Let us separate as quickly as we can." What a tact and finish were here!

The spirit of monsieur was admirably caught by the French gentleman of the time, who, attacked by robbers at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, simply observed, "Sirs, you have opened very early today."—Cornhill.

AN AGED VETERAN.

A Detroit Veteran Talks of the War And the Legacy it Left Him.

When the annual reunion of the G A. R. is held, Michigan is always well represented. Around the camp fires of the encampment our boys tell of the hardships they have gone through and the listener who knows nothing of war will wonder how they lived to tell the tale. Few men who followed old glory and escaped the shot and shell returned home without some legacy as a constant reminder of their war days. Our representative found Veteran O. P. Newcomb of Detroit, at his place of residence, No. 137 Second street. Mr. Newcomb told him how the little conqueror had rendered him invaluable service. We give his account here and some words of advice tersely told. He said:

"A lake covering about two acres in extent, containing the dead bodies of 20 mules, is not tempting water to drink, but I was one of many who drank it, and all of us would have done so if we had known there was death in every swallow. This illustrates but one of the many hardship and privations passed through during the civil war, and it is no wonder that G. A R. men suffer from aches and pains, the most prevalent of these being due to kidney disorders. I am pleased to note that a great many others who passed through as trying ordeals as I, have now learned how these troubles can be mitigated. When I say Doan's Kidney Pills will cure them I not only speak from experience but from observation. To all old soldiers or anyone suffering from kidney complaint my advice is to try that remedy."

HER SUMMONS CAME.

A SIGN IN WHICH MRS. GALLUP READ HER DEATH WARRANT.

She Dropped the Dishcloth and After That Fatal Warning Spent the Balance of the Evening In Telling Mr. Gallup How She Thought He Ought to Run the Funeral.

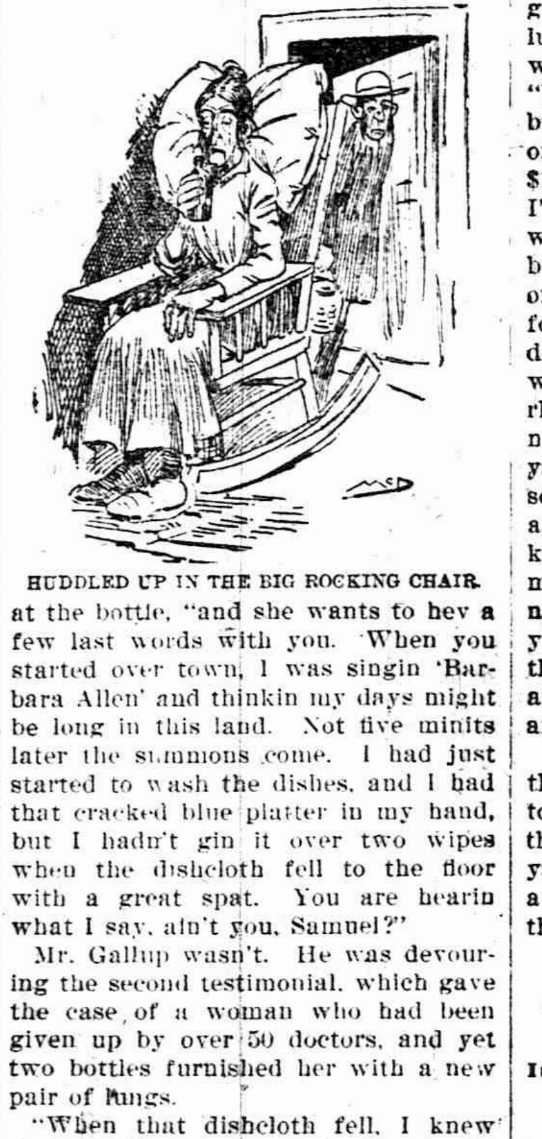
[Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.]

As Mr. Gallup lighted his tin lantern after supper and started out to buy half a pound of Rio coffee for breakfast and call at the postoffice Mrs. Gallup was in excellent spirits and had most of the dishes ready for washing. He was absent 32 minutes, and when he arrived home he found her huddled up in the big rocking chair, with a pillow behind her head and the camphor bottle in her hand. She took three long sniffs at the bottle and gave three long drawn sighs as he entered, but it was labor thrown away. Mr. Gallup blew out his lantern and hung it up behind the cellar door, and, having deposited the coffee on a shelf in the pantry, he removed and hung up his coat and hat, sat down and took off his shoes and then, taking a circular from his pocket and putting on his glasses with great deliberation, began to read. It was a circular regarding a new discovery in the cure of consumption, and he had not yet finished with the first testimonial when Mrs. Gallup sobbed four times in succession and faintly asked:

"Samuel Gallup, do you know that your dyin wife is present in the room?"

He made no reply. That testimonial from one who had been cured after his coffin had been purchased made him hold his breath as he read.

"Yes; she is present," dolefully continued Mrs. Gallup after several sniffs



HUDDLED UP IN THE BIG ROCKING CHAIR.

at the bottle, "and she wants to hev a few last words with you. When you started over town, I was singin 'Barbara Allen' and thinkin my days might be long in this land. Not five minits later the summons come. I had just started to wash the dishes, and I had that cracked blue platter in my hand, but I hadn't gin it over two wipes when the dishcloth fell to the floor with a great spat. You are hearin what I say, ain't you, Samuel?"

Mr. Gallup wasn't. He was devouring the second testimonial, which gave the case of a woman who had been given up by over 50 doctors, and yet two bottles furnished her with a new pair of lungs.

"When that dishcloth fell, I knew that my time had come. That's the way Mrs. Grover and Mrs. Taylor went. Their dishcloths fell, and in 24 hours they was in heaven. I shall be up there by tomorrer night, Samuel, while you'll be free to stay out all night to hear the political news. I'd hev died before you come back home, only I wanted to talk with you a leetle about the funeral. Let's see. If I die tonight, you'll hold the funeral day after tomorrer, won't you, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon?"

Mr. Gallup was listening to a noise outside. He heard something to remind him of a hen trying to crow, and he wondered if it could be that so long after dark.

"If you want it a day sooner, you can hev it," continued Mrs. Gallup after sobs and gasps and sniffs at the bottle, "but you must look out or the nayburs will talk. Better hev it day after tomorrer, and I hope, for your sake, it won't be a rainy day. I've sometimes thought I'd like a big funeral when I went, with over 40 wagons in the purcession and the church bell a-tollin and the dogs a-howlin, but I've given that up. No, Samuel, you needn't make any spread over me. I'm one of the kind that kin go to heaven without any hurrah and fireworks. If there is ten wagons in the purcession, I shall be satisfied. Don't you think ten ought to be 'nuff for a person like me?"

It wasn't a direct question, but had it been Mr. Gallup would not have answered. He was devouring the third testimonial and making up his mind to try a bottle on the sly.

"Ten wagons in the purcession, Samuel, and the bells needn't toll nor nuthin else happen. If anybody is diggin taters or makin soft soap or dyein carpet rags, they needn't stop on my account. If 25 people come to the house, that will be 'nuff. We've got 'leven chairs altogether, countin them with broken backs, and Mrs. Walters will lend you the rest. You'll hev our own preacher, of course, but he needn't go on for an hour or two and tell how good I was and how much you'll miss me. If he says that my toil is o'er, and that you won't never find a more savin wife, that'll be about 'nuff. Shall you do any cryin at the funeral, Samuel?"

No answer.

"I'd do a leetle bit if I was you—jest a leetle. If you don't, folks will talk about it same as they did about Jim Dewitt. He never cried at all, and to this day folks say he didn't use Hanner right. I don't ask you to break down and sob and git up an excitement, but you kin gasp a few times and wipe your eyes and blow your nose. I'm sorry you'll hev to take that long ride to the graveyard, as you could be playin checkers or sunthin, but I don't see how you are to git out of it. However, you won't never hev to go up there ag'in. When you git ready to buy me a gravestun, you kin send it up by a man. I s'pose you'll buy a stun of some sort, won't you?"

Mr. Gallup didn't hear. In the fourth testimonial a man declared that he had been saved after one whole lung and three-quarters of the other were gone, and it was a sketch to thrill the reader clear down to his toes.

"Of course I don't keer about no gravestun for myself," said Mrs. Gallup as she tried to wipe away her tears with the glass stopper of the bottle, "but if you don't put one up the nayburs will call you stingy. Get a cheap one, however. If you kin git one fur $10 and trade a lot of carpet rags in, I'd do it. I used to think I wanted a whole lot of readin on my gravestun, but I've changed my mind. Jest put on that Susan Gallup expired in the forty-ninth year of her age of general disability and that she has found rest where asthma, boils, backaches and rheumatiz cease from troublin. You needn't say a word about makin 40 yards of rag carpet and a bar'l of soft soap last year while enjoyin sore eyes and a boil on my arm or that I allus kept catnip, smartweed and peppermint herbs in the house and was a nurse to all the nayburs. No, Samuel, you needn't—say a word—about them things. Make it—a cheap—gravestun, and you needn't—never go up there—and—and"—

And when Mr. Gallup had finished the testimonials and fully determined to buy at least three bottles and hide them in the wood shed he rose up, yawned and stretched and looked around to find Mrs. Gallup asleep and the camphor wasted on the floor.

That Cough Hangs On

You have used all sorts of cough remedies but it does not yield; it is too deep seated. It may wear itself out in time, but it is more liable to produce la grippe, pneumonia or a serious throat affection. You need something that will give you strength and build up the body.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

will do this when everything else fails. There is no doubt about it. It nourishes, strengthens, builds up and makes the body strong and healthy, not only to throw off this hard cough, but to fortify the system against further attacks. If you are run down or emaciated you should certainly take this nourishing food medicine.

THERE WASN'T ANY ROW.

It Was Simply a Case of Spontaneous Combustion.

He was a very young man, almost too young to be out on the street at that time of the night, 8:30 p. m., and his general appearance indicated that he had been picked up by a cyclone somewhere during his meanderings. He was not utterly demoralized, but there was something in his manner that would lead the close observer to the conclusion that all had not been well with him.

"Gee!" he exclaimed as he spun around the corner and went bump into a policeman.

"Hello," ejaculated that worthy, instinctively grabbing at him; "what's the row?"

"There wasn't any," responded the youth.

"What are you running like that for?" persisted the policeman.

"I've just been up against a case of spontaneous combustion."

"You look too green to burn," chuckled the bluecoat.

"It's on me, just the same. My girl lives around the corner, and I went to see her. I thought it was all"—

"Where does the combustion come in?" interrupted the officer.

"Come out, you mean," corrected the youth.

"Come off!" exclaimed the officer. "Tell me what the row is before I chase you."

"Well, that's what I'm trying to do," pleaded the boy. "The girl's old man and I don't harmonize a little bit, and when he met me at the door he fired me so suddenly that I had vertigo. If you don't call that spontaneous combustion, what the dickens do you call it?"

"Oh, excuse me," apologized the policeman, "you run along home and get into your trundle bed!" and the bluecoat gently wafted the remnant on its way.—Detroit Free Press.

"What lanterns?"

"Didn't you run lanterns up 'em on dark nights?"

"Never heard of anything like that."

"Well, if you don't know enough to keep your lightnin rods showin you needn't blame me. G-lang!"—New York Weekly.

Sometimes.

"Do you subscribe to this statement that a woman ought to look up to her husband?" inquired Mr. Meekton's wife.

DO YOU THINK RED?

After Reading This Curious Article Test Your Favorite Author.

At first sight it may seem rather curious, but it is a fact, that the value of a writer's work may be appraised by the color words he uses.

Shakespeare's favorite color word was red. As a matter of fact that is the characteristic word of most great writers. Out of every hundred color words used by Shakespeare in his poems no fewer than 30 are red. White follows with 22, then comes black, 20; yellow, 17; green, 7; blue, 4.

It is only natural that a writer on country subjects should use a lot of green words. Red must always be the predominant color in writings dealing with the hotter passions, with love and war. Even then the colors used depend in a remarkable manner upon the idiosyncracies of the writer.

Taking the case of the poets, green is the color most used in the "Song of Songs." It is also the color most used by Coleridge, Shelley, Keats and Wordsworth. Black is the predominant color of Homer and white of Catullus, Chaucer and Rossetti, while yellow is the favorite color of that weird writer Poe. Red is the color of Tennyson, Swinburne and Whitman.

It must be taken into consideration that the old writers often used color words in a different sense to their present meaning. Some people go so far as to say that things looked quite different to the ancients and that green and blue have been seen only during the last thousand years.

Red is the most pleasant and vigorous of colors. It is a joyous color, full of life and grit. It is the color of the strongest of passions. In anything dealing with man and woman red must have its predominant place. It is the color of the rich, quick blood of all that's best in life.

White is usually a pleasant color, especially when associated with red, as a woman's white neck and red lips, ivory throat and blushing cheeks, alabaster forehead and rosy ears. Sometimes it represents cold, dull, pale, gray and wan things. Generally it is the color of innocence and purity, of sweet and wholesome things.

Black as a favorite verbal color is usually found in the works of writers of a somber, melancholic disposition. Such works are rarely of a healthy character.

Green and blue are so closely related in the sense used in this article as often to merge. Generally green is a fresh, sweet color, the color of the country and opening life.

Blue has more to do with the imagination. It is a learned, philosophical color. It is ethereal and generally removed from everyday life. The works of a blue writer are deep and thoughtful, but rarely raise one's enthusiasm. The strong, human red interest is lacking.

Yellow is a horrible color. Nearly every one feels a natural antipathy to this jaundiced hue. It and black were the favorite colors of Poe and thus account for the strangeness of that original writer's peculiar imaginings.

Curiously enough, yellow loses its loathsomeness if it possesses a dash of red or if it glistens. Its synonym, golden, is a pleasant word and is often used. A novelist will call his character's hair golden in the case of a heroine; he will call it yellow if she be an objectionable character.

Writers use colors in the sense shown for the simple reason that we unconsciously have all our thoughts tinted. If in good health, we think red. Should our liver be out of order we think yellow.

The bright, healthy majority are naturally red thinkers and read the works of red writers. Your jovial fellow looks at the world through rosy glasses and sees it to be optimistically red. The debilitated, burnt out individual wearily looks through spectacles with yellow glasses, and the prospect is hopelessly miserable.—Pearson's Weekly.

Not to use it during pregnancy is a mistake to be paid for in pain and suffering. Mother's Friend equips the patient with a strong body and clear intellect, which in turn are imparted to the child. It relaxes the muscles and allows them to expand. It relieves morning sickness and nervousness. It puts all the organs concerned in perfect condition for the final hour, so that the actual labor is short and practically painless. GAIN FLESH

An Absolute Necessity in Many Cases.

A DECREASE IN WEIGHT FREQUENTLY INDICATES A DECLINE.

Our Modern Rebuilder, Vinol, Will Help You Do It.

THE WAY IT ACTS ON A DEPLETED CONSTITUTION IS SIMPLY MARVELOUS.

Are you getting thin? If you are you had better watch yourself. Take Vinol. It will build you up quickly and surely.

A healthy man does not vary much from year to year in his weight. This is as it should be. Vinol enables the organs of the body to renew flesh, muscle tissue, bone structure, and attends to purifying the great vital current of the human system, the blood.

Vinol contains the active curative properties of Cod-Liver Oil in a highly concentrated state, and is the most wonderful tonic that we have ever had anything to do with.

Vinol acts upon the stomach in a beneficial way, enabling it to obtain for itself the necessary ingredients from the food that is taken into it to build up the pure healthy body and increase the weight.

Mr. H. M. Stufell, who is a well-known passenger trainman on the Boston and Maine Railroad, suffered, as many railroad men do, with kidney and other troubles. He writes as follows:

"My kidneys troubled me a great deal, my bowels were very irregular, I had great distress in my stomach, suffered with bilious headaches, had no appetite, could not sleep nights, and was losing flesh rapidly. I began to take Vinol, I am now on my third bottle, and it is doing wonders for me. My kidneys are better, my bowels are again regular, my stomach no longer troubles me, and no more headaches, and as for appetite, don't speak of it; I sleep like a top and have gained thirteen pounds. You can count on me always to recommend Vinol as the king of medicines."

With many such testimonials as the above coming before us, it is not strange that we endorse Vinol as strongly as we do. We unhesitatingly agree to return to any one who has taken Vinol and is not satisfied that it has accomplished all that we claim for it every cent that they have paid us for this remedy.

Legislature Is Beating the Recorc in the Matter of Bills Introduced.

RELIEF FOR THE SUPREME COURT

Legislation for Election Reform—Game Warden's Office To Be Probed.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 19.—It is very evident that if the present legislature is to reach final adjournment several weeks in advance of the time its predecessors for several sessions shuffled off, it will, in the language of the curb, have to "get a hump on itself." This observation is due to the fact that present indications are that the total number of bills introduced this year will leave all previous records in the shade. Two years ago the record was 483 bills and joint resolutions in the senate and 1,196 in the house, a total of 1,679. Thus far the senate is fully abreast of last year's total at this period of the session, while the house is fully 200 ahead. The bell will not ring on the fifty-day limit and shut off the flood of bills until midnight tomorrow, and a mighty sight of measures can be sprung in the meantime. The presiding officers and leaders of the two houses are determined to shorten the session and promise to hustle things to this end. As is always the case, the majority of these bills will be slaughtered, and most of them ought to be.

Relief for the Supreme Court.

It is possible that notwithstanding the defeat of the bill to increase the membership of the supreme court, the present legislature may furnish that tribunal some relief, Senator McMullen having proposed a plan which is meeting with considerable favor, and which will not increase the expenses of the judiciary. This plan involves the adoption by the people of a constitutional amendment under which the legislature can establish an intermediate court with final jurisdiction in certain cases, such court to be composed of one justice of the supreme court and two circuit judges, who shall hold court in the various counties as necessity demands. It will be seen that this plan does not involve the payment of any additional salaries, and it is contemplated that the clerks of the several counties shall serve as clerks of the proposed court, there will be no additional expense on that account. A bill providing the necessary details has been introduced as a joint resolution providing for submitting the question to the people.

Addition to the State House.

The fact that the state has been obliged to rent offices in the city building for the state tax commission and that other departments are quartered in the old state office building which is entirely unfitted for the purpose, has induced Senator Robson to introduce a bill making an appropriation of $250,000 for an addition to the state house. It appears that when the capitol building was designed provision was made by the architect, the plan being to carry a wing on the west side out to Walnut street, it being possible to do this without marring the beauty of the building.

The superintendents of the poor of the state are considerably exercised over a bill introduced by Senator Pierson. The measure provides for the election of superintendents of the poor by the people instead of by the boards of supervisors, as has always been the case. It is proposed that one shall be elected every two years at the general spring election. As far as heard from the superintendents are opposed to this bill for various reasons, and it is likely to experience hard sledding.

Election Reform Legislation.

Another twist was given reform legislation last week. Two twists, in fact. After the signal defeat by the senate of the Colby bill abolishing political caucuses in Wayne county it was generally supposed that the Kent county bill drafted along the same lines would meet with a like fate. The bill was passed, however, receiving 19 votes. Its friends were waiting for several absent senators to return, hoping that their arrival would furnish enough votes to give it immediate effect and thereby enable the experiment to be tried at this spring's elections, but in the meantime some sort of a deadly germ invaded the "innards" of either the bill or the senators, for the vote by which the bill was passed was reconsidered and the bill placed on the table, where it now reposes. It is evident that a determined effort is to be made to defeat it, and the chances are that they will be successful.

State Tax Commission.

Governor Bliss' nominations of William T. Dust of Detroit and Charles D. Lawton of Lawton, Van Buren county, for places on the state tax commission created considerable surprise and some disappointment. Those who experienced the latter feeling are inclined to defeat the confirmation of Lawton, but it is doubtful if they will be able to do so. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Lawton is a very able man, with many qualifications which especially fit him for this work, so that when it gets right "down to brass tacks" no good reason for his rejection can be found. In view of this fact it is probable that the opposition to Mr. Lawton will consist mainly of talk, and when it comes down to voting he will be confirmed.

Board Is a Good Investment.

It has become quite the fashion of late years for a legislative onslaught to be made on the state board of health, and especially on Secretary Baker. I have in the course of my business as a newspaper correspondent visited every state department several times a day for the past ten years, and I have no hesitancy in saying that Michigan makes no better investment than the money which it devotes to the maintenance of this board. The usual bill to stir things up in connection with this health work is now pending, having already passed the senate and while the legislators may not see it now, I predict that they will all be ready to confess in the near future that they made a grave mistake if anything is done to cripple this board or throw it into politics. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

Rerefence was made a week or two ago to a bill designed to change the method of providing for the needs of the agricultural college. This bill has been prepared and introduced by Chairman Nevins of the college committee in the house. It provides for the levying of a tax of one-fifteenth of a mill on the equalized valuation of the state for the support of this institution, the plan being to make this allowance cover needs of the college, experiment station work, etc. Any amount yielded by this tax in excess of that needed for current expenses is to be used for buildings and betterments, but no improvement shall be undertaken until a sum sufficient to complete it has accumulated. It is figured that the proposed tax will yield an annual revenue of $73,000. In addition to this the college will receive, as now, $25,000 from the general government, and about $55,000 from its land grant. Last year the expenditures for all purposes were $110,000.

Investigation of the Game Warden.

It is likely that the house will this week order an investigation of the game and fish warden's department. Just before the house adjourned for the week last Friday Representative Mason offered a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee for this purpose, the proposition being similar to the one adopted by the senate on motion of Senator Goodell the previous day. The Mason resolution precipitated such a warm discussion that the matter was temporarily disposed of by being made the special order for this week Thursday. The movement is ostensibly the result of extended criticism that has been indulged in during the past few weeks of the expense accounts of the deputy wardens during the year 1900, but it is understood that it is really backed by the small commercial fishermen of the state who feel that they are not accorded the same degree of freedom that the fish trust enjoys. Much of the criticism is directed at Chief Brewster, and a bill to abolish the office of chief deputy has been introduced in each house.

Usual Number of That Sort.

The usual number of bills affecting both life and fire insurance companies are materializing and some of them look like old friends, having done service in a number of previous legislatures. The most generally important of these is what is known technically as the valued policy bill. It provides that in case of total loss the company shall pay the policyholder the full face of his policy regardless of what his loss actually was. The theory is that the company should pay the full amount upon which it accepts a premium. Insurance men have a way of designating bills of this nature as measures placing a premium upon arson. Other bills provide for increasing the tax rate of life insurance companies from 2 to 3 per cent., thus making it the same as that paid by fire companies and seek to put the various co-operative fraternal and sick and accident benefit organizations on a somewhat more stable basis by requiring them to deposit $1,000 in the state treasury and maintain it there. It is understood that the senate committee on insurance is in favor of increasing the amount of this deposit to $5,000, even at the risk of driving some of the weaker organiaztions out of existence. The members of the committee declare that an organization that cannot raise $5,000 ought not to be permitted to carry on an insurance business. Another bill provides for licensing fire insurance agents doing business in the state, the fee provided ranging from $25 to $100, according to the population of the place where the business is carried on. This bill provides that the license money shall be used to defray the expenses of the state fire marshal's department if one is created as provided for in another bill, otherwise to be credited to the primary school fund.

Representative Gordon believes that the use of firecrackers and other explosives for amusement annually creates a vast amount of sorrow, damages and suffering, and that it ought to be done away with. He has, therefore, introduced a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of these articles for the purpose mentioned, and another bill providing for the licensing of dealers who sell them for other purposes.

Measures of Interest to Farmers.

Representative Hardy has introduced a bill recommended at the recent annual meeting of the Michigan Millers' association. It provides that the agricultural college be authorized to send an expert to visit the wheat fields of Europe for the purpose of selecting varieties of wheat to be introduced into Michigan. As all farmers are aware the wheat yield of Michigan has steadily decreased during the past few years, and the object of the millers is to secure, if possible, hardier varieties that will better withstand the Michigan climate and conditions. The bill carries an appropriation of $1,000.

Another measure in which the farmers of the state generally are interested has been introduced by Representative Nevins, who seeks to place tolls taken by millers on a uniform basis. He says that they now exact about what they please, no two having the same rates. His bill limits the toll to one-sixth of the amount of grain ground. Two years ago Mr. Nevins made a valliant fight for this bill, and is inclined to attribute its failure to become a law to the vigorous opposition of the Michigan Millers' association.

Representative Lowry will seek to do away with the general complaint that the present mortgage tax law results in double taxation, having introduced a bill providing for assessing the interests of the mortgagee and mortgagor separately.

Medical Registration Law Attacked.

The long expected attack of the "independent" or so-called fake medical college graduates on the medical registration law has taken the form of a bill introduced by Representative Randall, which seeks to let the bars down entirely by amending the law so as to provide that any reputable physician who shall be in practice three years prior to June 1, 1901, shall be entitled to registration without examination. Notwithstanding the fight that will be put up in favor of this bill the measure is doubtless doomed to defeat.

FOUR LIVES LOST

Five Men Crushed Under the Walls of a Burning Building.

FOUR WERE TAKEN OUT DEAD

The Other Fatally Injured—Bodies Quickly Recovered—The Men Had Been at Work But Five Minutes When Death Came.

New Haven, Ct., Feb. 19.—Four men were killed and one fatally injured in a fire which destroyed an unoccupied factory on Winchester avenue this morning. The dead:

Capt. Joseph Condren.
Fireman Edward Hale.
Fireman Wm. Riley.
Fireman Frank Williams.

Injured: Henry Powell, fearfully burned.

The fire was discovered at 1:30, and as the building is situated over a mile from the center of the city, had gained considerable headway before the department reached the scene. Before the men had been at work five minutes the front wall fell, burying a number of them in the ruins.

Willing hands set about the rescue and succeeded in reaching Powell, who was near the edge of the wreck. The four dead men were next found. The fire itself, while totally destroying the building in which it originated, was prevented from spreading to the adjacent structures. The loss has not been determined.

Jackson, Tenn., Feb. 19.—Fire Monday night destroyed the Pythian opera house, the Second National bank building, the local offices of the American and Southern Express companies and three adjoining buildings, entailing property loss of $100,000. The cash and valuables in the fire-proof vault of the bank are probably saved, but it is feared that two men lost their lives in the falling of the opera house walls.

A PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT.

Organized in Province of Terlac and Capt. Clark Appointed Governor.

Terlac, Province of Tarlac, Luzon, Feb. 19.—The United States Philippine commission has decided, after a conference, that it would not be wise to postpone the organization of provincial government in the province of Tarlac. As the first step in the work or organization the commission determined to appoint an American as governor of the province, the selection falling upon Capt. Wallis O. Clark of the Twelfth United States infantry.

There are two native factions seeking to control the affairs of Tarlac, the strongest being led by McAbulos, whose loyalty is questioned by all the military officers. The indifference of the people is obvious. There is a manifest lack of enthusiasm. The testimony of those charged with military responsibility here is of unsettled conditions, a lack of schools, a general prevalence of insurgent sentiment and more or less skirmishing still in progress. The people, however, have begun to give truthful information regarding the insurrection.

Representatives of most towns of the province are now here to meet the commission, whose members have been welcomed to the former headquarters of Aguinaldo with bands and arches. All the better class dwellings have been burned and the commissioners are housed at the headquarters of the military, where a public session was held, at which the law was discussed briefly and passed. Then the appointments were announced, including in addition to Capt. Clark as governor, Lieut. Henry M. Morrow of the Thirty-first volunteer infantry, to be treasurer, and Lieut. Robert S. Welsh of the Thirty-ninth United States volunteer infantry to be supervisor. The secretary and the fiscal will be natives.

During a visit to the model district prison the commissioners met Valles, who was director-general of the insurgents and who fell into the hands of United States troops last Saturday. He declined Col. Smith's offer of a release on condition that he furnish information as to the whereabouts of the Ladrones.

Russian Influence.

London, Feb. 19.—In spite of the Copenhagen assertions that negotiations between the United States and Denmark as to the sale of the Danish West Indies have not been abandoned, the Daily News publishes the following from its Copenhagen correspondent: "I hear the Danish government has refused the offer of the United States for the Danish West Indies and that the decision was largely influenced by Russia, which has her own reasons for wishing the islands not to become American."

Returned to New York.

Sanford, Fla., Feb. 19.—Daniel Melville, a plumber, who is wanted in New York to testify in the Kennedy murder trial, left for that city Sunday night, accompanied by Capt. Price of the nineteenth police precinct, and Detective Sergeant Carey. It was Melville's affidavit that secured a new trial for Kennedy, who is charged with the murder of Dolly Reynolds.

A Crisis Imminent.

Vienna, Feb. 19.—It is asserted here that consternation has been produced in Sofia by an article in the St. Petersburg Viedomosti, declaring that events in the Balkans, particularly in Burgaria, are coming to a crisis which will attract the attention of all the European powers.

American Girl Graduated.

Berlin, Feb. 19.—With elaborate ceremonies, Miss Caroline T. Stewart of Memphis, Tenn., was promoted to the degree of doctor of philosophy at the University of Berlin. For the first time all competitors were women, Miss Stewart's opponents being Miss Jane Scherzer, Miss Mary Montgomery and Frau Herter.

Booth and "Richard III."

In her book on "Some Players" Amy Leslie says that Edwin Booth's detestation of Richard III was frank and incurable. One night, when in the most magnificent instant of Richard a super fell in a writhing, squirming attack, which set the country audience laughing, Booth said quietly, after the fall of the curtain, amid shouts of misguided laughs:

"What was the matter, captain?"

The trembling captain owned reluctantly that one of his 25 cent men had been seized in a fit.

"Please pay 30 cents next time, and employ one whose fits may not interfere with Richard. Richard is unendurable enough without the addition of rented fits."

CARRIE IN JAIL.

She Refused to Give Bail and Now Languishes.

Topeka, Kan., Feb. 19.—Mrs. Nation is now in the county jail as a result of her trial on a peace warrant before Judge Hazen Monday. The warrant was sworn to by the Moeser Cold Storage Co., whose plant Mrs. Nation entered Sunday morning.

Mrs. Nation acted as her own attorney in the trial. Judge Hazen placed her under $2,000 bond to keep the peace and ordered her to appear before him at the next term of court.

Mrs. Nation refused to give the bond and said she would go to jail. She is now detained in the hospital room of the county jail, where she will probably remain for some time.

In the city court, arguments were given in the case brought against Mrs. Nation by the proprietors of the wrecked Senate saloon. Judge McCabe said he would take the matter under advisement until Thursday morning.

It is not likely that Mrs. Nation will be able to give bond, because she declares that she will resume her smashing crusade against the joints immediately upon her release. Her friends have been advised that Judge Hazen will make her release conditional upon the promise that she be sent to her home at Medicine Lodge. Judge Hazen Monday night placed Cal McDonald, Mrs. Rose Crist and Miss Madeline Southard under peace bonds. McDonald's bond is $1,000, the others are $500 each. The judge delivered a scathing address to the three Nation lieutenants. He expressed the opinion that Mrs. Nation is insane and said those persons who encourage her methods of reform ought to be ashamed of themselves.

THEY PROTESTED.

Resolutions Adopted Regarding Secretary Gage's Ruling.

Chicago, Feb. 19.—At a special meeting of the board of directors of the Illinois Manufacturers association, held Monday, the following was adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the board of directors of the Illinois Manufacturers association that the recent ruling of the treasury department on the matter of importation of sugar from Russia will, under existing circumstances and the retaliatory attitude taken by the Russian government, seriously affect, if not destroy, the export trade of this country to Russia. That the total imports of sugar from Russia amounted in 1900 to but $340,000 and the exports from this to that country amounted to over $30,000,000, of which amount more than one-half went from Illinois. That the exports from this country to Russia have been annually largely increasing, with every prospect of so continuing. That the ruling of the treasury department is believed not to be within the spirit of the intent of the law, and if it stands unreserved will work great injustice to our manufacturing interests and the many thousands employed therein.

Resolved, That a meeting of the members of the Illinois association be called for Saturday, Feb. 23, at 2 p. m., at the Grand Pacific hotel, to determine upon such action as may be necessary to secure a rehearing or a reversal of the decision.

Desires More Legislation.

Washington, Feb. 19.—The secretary of the treasury sent to the senate Monday a letter from the commissioner general of immigration, requesting mandatory legislation for the purpose of requiring steamship companies bringing Chinese persons to ports of the United States to return to China those who may be rejected by the United States authorities. The present law is intended to accomplish this purpose, but it is not considered sufficiently specific, it having been found from experience that Chinamen who are refused admission change their destination to contiguous foreign territory, thus securing admission into the United States through comparatively unguarded points along our northern and southern boundary. The commissioner general also suggests an amendment to the existing law authorizing Chinese and immigrant inspectors to make summary arrest of Chinese believed by them to be unlawfully in this country.

Still No Choice.

Lincoln, Neb., Feb. 19.—The vote on United States senator Monday was as follows: D. E. Thompson, 29; Currie, 12; Crouse, 5; Hainer, 5; Hinshaw, 10; Harlan, 2; Kinkaid, 4; Martin, 8; Hitchcock, fusion, 19; Allen, fusion, 35; W. H. Thompson, fusion, 28; Rosewater, 15; Berge, fusion, 6; Meiklejohn, 28; scattering, 5. At the republican caucus Monday night six ballots were taken, without result or material changes.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 19.—The vote for senator Monday was: Mantle, 29; Maginnis, 23; Frank, 21; Cooper, 7; Coburn, 2; Conrad, 2; Toole, 1.

Salem, On., Feb. 19.—The senatorial ballot Monday resulted: Corbett, 32; Hermann, 28; Inman, 26; C. E. S. Wood, 1; Williams, 1; absent, 2.

In the Squared Circle.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 19.—Bobby Dobbs of Memphis and Young Peter Jackson of California fought 20 rounds to a draw at the Phoenix Athletic club Monday night.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 19.—"Spike" Sullivan of New York was Monday night given the decision over Tom Kearns of Brooklyn on points after 20 rounds of rough fighting before the xSouthern Athletic club.

Conditions in Mexico.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Powell Clayton, United States ambassador to Mexico, has arrived in Washington on leave of absence and is going to his home in Arkansas. He speaks in glowing terms of the conditions in Mexico, paying a high tribute to the energy with which the internal resources are being developed and laying particular stress on the cordial welcome given to American ideas and Americans.

Told the Truth.

Mother—Now, Georgie, I shall tell your papa to punish you severely for telling an untruth. You said you didn't touch one of those six peaches, and there is only one left, and I found the five stones in your nursery.

Georgie—I told no story, mamma. The peach I didn't touch is the one that's left.

Spoiled His Breakfast.

"How is the landlady this morning?" asked one of the boarders.

"Threatening and cooler," answered the man with the newspaper, misunderstanding the question.

And the other boarder, who was notoriously slow in settling with the landlady, looked partly cloudy.—Chicago Tribune.

TO INSPECT BEER

Senator Atwood Introduces a Bill for That Purpose.

WILL ADD TO STATE REVENUE

Forty-seven Bills Introduced in the Senate, While Sixty-six Were Introduced in the House—Only Two More Days.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 19.—In the senate Monday night Senator Atwood introduced a bill providing for the inspection by the dairy and food commissioner of beer manufactured and sold in this state; also stating what ingredients shall be in beer. An inspection fee of 1 cent a gallon is provided for. About 200,000 gallons of beer were manufactured in Michigan last year, and Senator Atwood says the state will realize about $300,000 a year from beer inspection fees, if his bill goes through.

Beer brought into the state for sale is also to be inspected. Stamps are to be furnished by the state treasurer and placed on original beer packages. The bill provides that malt, hops and rice shall be used in manufacturing beer.

Senator Atwood says the purpose of his bill is to provide for the manufacture and sale of pure beer. Small manufacturers say they want such a bill passed.

Senator Bangham moved to take from the table the bill which passed the senate last week to reorganize the state board of health, but the motion was lost.

Senator Holmes had the committee of the whole discharged from further consideration of Rep. Hunt's house bill to increase the length of the regular session of the Detroit board of estimates from 10 to 20 days. Provision is made in the bill for a member of the board of public works to sit as an ex-officio member of the board of estimates.

Senators Atwood and Doherty raised the question that it might be well to insert the words "superintendent of public works," as the "board of public works" had recently been abolished.

Senator Murfin explained that the bill passed by the legislature last week provided that the superintendent of works attend to the duties and work formerly performed by members of the board of public works.

The bill was then passed, and Senator Holmes had it given immediate effect. Later in the proceedings Holmes had this action reconsidered and the bill went back to the committee for correction.

There were 47 bills introduced in the senate Monday night.

There were 66 bills introduced in the house last evening. A great rush is expected to-day and Wednesday, these being the last two days for the introduction of bills.

Rep. McCall introduced his bill for the taxation of railroads, union depot and station companies. The state tax commission is to have charge of the work. A board of review to consist of the state tax commissioners, the state railroad commissioner and the secretary of state, is provided for.

Rep. Martindale noticed a bill dividing the township of Ecorse into three parts and to be known as Ecorse, Ford and Grand Port townships.

Rep. Colby has a bill for licensing butchers, while Rep. Hunt has one to prevent butcher shops from keeping open on Sunday.

Rep. Ames has a skeleton bill providing that Detroit public school teachers shall be retained after having been employed five years.

Two Drowned.

Thompsonville, Mich., Feb. 19.—The dam at the village electric lighting plant gave way at noon Monday, carrying away the entire structure, together with four men, George Hiney, A. B. Fox, and Ed and Ernest Crandall. The Crandall brothers were drowned, but the others were rescued. A team of horses was also drowned. The dam had just been completed, and the electric lighting plant removed. The appropriation for moving the plant was $5,500, and was all expended. The loss will fall on the taxpayers, and will be heavy. The village was in darkness last night and will remain for some time to come. It was intended to remove the water works also, but this had not yet been accomplished, and the village still has its fire protection.

Fractured Hips.

Jackson, Mich., Feb. 19.—James A. Parkinson of Jackson, ex-prosecuting attorney, and a lawyer well known throughout the state, slipped, fracturing the right hip in a serious manner, at the home of his father, near Albion, Saturday night.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Feb. 19.—A. R. Jahr, a bridge carpenter, fell from a 40-foot trestle Monday, sustaining a broken hip and arm, and other serious injuries.

Musicians' Trouble Over.

Port Huron, Mich., Feb. 19.—The trouble between the union and non-union musicians was settled Sunday afternoon, when 13 new applications for membership were received and acted on favorably. This included the members of two orchestras which have heretofore been bucking the union musicians. A number of lady pianists have also joined the union. Everything hereafter in the musical line will be union.

Robbed of $25.

Ionia, Mich., Feb. 19.—J. White struck town Sunday with a carload of cattle for Six Lakes. He had to stop over night, and claims that during Sunday evening he was prevailed upon to visit a local saloon, where he says he was robbed of $25 in money by a hobo. The sheriff was notified and is scouring the country in search of the transient, who is alleged to have skipped out.

Drowned in a Tub.

Reed City, Mich., Jan. 22.—The 18-months-old son of Edward Kenitz fell into a tub of water Monday and was drowned.

Will Boom His Business.

S. Laval, a merchant of Dallas, Tex., writes: "I thought I would have to give up business, after two years of suffering from general debility brought on by overwork and long hours, but four bottles of Electric Bitters gave me new life. I can now eat anything, sleep well and feel like working all the time. It's the best medicine on earth." It's a wonderful tonic and health builder for tired, weak, sickly and run-down people. Try it. THE TECUMSEH HERALD
SEMI-WEEKLY.

WILL CUT IT OUT.

Greek and Latin May Be Abolished for U. of M. Students.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 19.—The following resolution was passed by the literary faculty Monday night:

"Resolved, That the board of regents be requested to enact as follows: Beginning on June 1, 1901, the degree of 'A. B.' shall be conferred upon every student who has satisfied anyone of the four sets of requirements for graduation now in force in the literary department.

"Resolved, That the president be authorized, in case of the approval of the foregoing resolutions by the board of regents, to appoint a committee of nine, of which he shall be chairman, charged to take into consideration the requirement for graduation and the readjustment of freshman work, and report to the faculty at as early a date as convenient."

This is a very important action, cutting out, as it does, the degree of bachelor of philosophy, bachelor of science and bachelor of letters. It means that Greek and Latin will be no longer required for the degrees of bachelor of arts.

The courses for the first year students will be arranged in such a manner, however, that they cannot jump into "snaps." The action was taken behind closed doors and is one of the epochs of the University of Michigan. It will undoubtedly be adopted by the board of regents.

DEATHS IN MICHIGAN.

The Number for 1900 Reported at Lansing Was 33,320.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 19.—Chief Wilbur of the division of vital statistics of the secretary of state's office, Monday completed the compilations of deaths occurring in Michigan during the year 1900. This is the earliest this information has ever been given to the public, and the statistics from which it was compiled are most accurate.

The compilation shows that the total number of deaths in Michigan last year was 33,320, the rate per thousand being 13.9, as compared with a total of 33,159 and a rate of 14.1 for 1899. Of the total number of deaths in 1900, there were 1,433 still births, 6,542 children under 1 year old, 2,562 between 1 and 4 years, 8,754 of persons 65 years old and over. The number of deaths from the principal causes was as follows: Pulmonary tuberculosis, 562; typhoid fever, 860; diphtheria, 383; croup, 153; scarlet fever, 267; measles, 307; whooping cough, 198; pneumonia, 2,799; diarrheal diseases under 5 years of age, 2,524; cerebrospinal meningitis, 402; influenza, 490; puerperal septicemia, 190; cancer, 1,406; violence, 1,756.

Schools Closed.

Mt. Pleasant, Mich., Feb. 19.—This city was excited Sunday afternoon by the report that three cases of smallpox existed here. The health officer ordered all public places of meeting closed, including the schools, until the status of the disease could be determined. The state board of health was requested to examine into the matter.

Yesterday Dr. Ranney of Lansing announced that smallpox existed in a mild form in several places, with but one typical case, that of a young lady student resident of Elwell. Four weeks ago an outside picture agent canvassed the city for a few days. He sought medical treatment for a skin trouble that was pronounced chickenpox and then disappeared. Several were infected and were quite sick. As the present cases resemble his, it is thought he is responsible for the infection.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Michigan pensions were granted Monday as follows: Original—Charles H. Carle, Detroit, $6. Additional—Charles E. Paddock, Williamston, $10; Wm. Y. Cady, Portage, $8. Increase—Sam Bigham, Sebewa, $12; Hugh McLean, Saginaw, $12; Peter McNally, Clio, $72; Wm. W. Burnett, Hamilton, $17; Charles Rosenhauer, Muskegon Heights, $12; Napoleon B. Bowker, Ashley, $10; Sheldon R. Curtiss, Saranac, $17; Emmett H. Brower, Carson City, $17; John Pickett, Eureka, $8. Reissue and increase—Richard F. Austin, Conway, $14. Widows—Maria A. Wilson, Jackson, $8; Cecelia S. Babcock, Ferrysburg, $8.

Probable Fatal Injury.

Coloma, Mich., Feb. 19.—While engaged in moving a building near his home in Covert, Van Buren county, Zachariah Burnham was probably fatally injured. While descending a declivity, the building in some way got away from the workmen, and Mr. Burnham was thrown to the ground and drawn partially under the runners. No bones were broken, but he was terribly bruised about the hips and internally injured.

$631 a Year for Sparrows.

Pontiac, Mich., Feb. 19.—Oakland county is still paying out big money in sparrow bounties, although the treasurer's receipts show that the amount paid annually is decreasing. In 1899, $686.88 was paid out, and in 1900, $631.10. The average of late has been about $50 per month.

Insanity in the Family.

Adrian, Mich., Feb. 19.—John Schlieman, an aged German, was taken to jail here Saturday night in an insane condition. His son, Andrew Schlieman, committed suicide some time ago, after a short period of insanity.

Treasury Statement.

Washington, Feb. 19.—Monday's statement of the treasury balance in the general fund, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve in the division of redemption, shows: Available cash balance, $145,975,852; gold, $75,915,297.

Crisis Feared.

Berlin, Feb. 19.—The Berliner Post continues to issue favorable bulletins regarding the condition of Dowager Empress Frederick, but in well-informed private circles it is feared that a crisis in the disease may come at any moment.

Not True to Its Name.

Arms and The Woman

By Harold MacGrath

Copyright, 1900, By Harold MacGrath.

I followed his advice, and the first return brought me news. Gretchen was at present in Vienna. So we journeyed to Vienna futilely. Then commenced a dogged, persistent search. I dragged my cousin hither and thither about the kingdom, from village to train, from train to city, till his life became a burden to him and his patience threadbare. At Hohenphalia, the capital, we were treated coldly. We were not known. They were preparing the palace for the coronation of her serene highness the Princess Elizabeth. The Princess Hildegarde might be in Brussels.

At Brussels her highness was in Munich, at Munich she was in Heidelberg, and so on and so on. It was truly discouraging. The vaguest rumor brought me to the railway, Pembroke, laughing and grumbling, always at my heels. At last I wrote to Phyllis. It was the one hope left. Her reply was to the effect that she, too, did not know where her sister was, that she was becoming a puzzle to her and concluded with the advice to wait till the coronation, when Gretchen would put in an appearance, her presence being imperative. So weeks multiplied and became months, winter passed, the snows fell from the mountains, the floods rose and subsided, summer was at hand with her white boughs and green grasses. May was blooming into June. Still Gretchen remained in obscurity.

"I shall be a physical wreck," said Pembroke when we finally returned to B——, "if you keep this up much longer."

"Look at me!" was my gloomy rejoinder.

"Well, you have that interesting pallor," he admitted, "which women ascribe to lovers."

Thrusting my elbows on the table, I buried my chin in my hands and stared. After awhile I said, "I do not believe she wants to be found."

"That has been my idea this long while," he replied, "only I did not wish to make you more despondent than you were."

One morning when I had grown outwardly calm I said to Pembroke, "Philip, I shall go with you to India."

"Here is a letter for you," he replied. "It may change your plans."

My mail since leaving the journalistic field had become so small that to receive a letter was an event. Inside of the envelope I discovered only six words, but they meant all the world to me. "She is here at the inn." It was unsigned. I waved the slip of paper before Pembroke's eyes.

"She is found!" I cried.

"Then go in search of her," he said.

"And you will go with me?"

"Not I! I prefer tigers to princesses. By the way, here is an article in the Zeitung on the coming coronation of her serene highness the Princess Elizabeth of Hohenphalia. I'm afraid that I shan't be present to witness the event." He thrust the paper into my hands and approached the window, out of which he leaned and stared at the garden flowers below. "When I asked her why it could not be, she answered that she had no love to give in return for mine."

"She may change her mind," I said, putting a hand on his. "Most women do."

"But there are exceptions," he replied, regarding me with earnest eyes as if to read what was going on behind mine. "There are some women who never change. Her highness is one of these. As I remarked before, she has no love to give me. It is gone, and as it is gone without reward she will make no attempt to recall it to give to another. I love her all the more for that. The game fate plays with our hearts is a cruel one. For one affinity there are ten unfinished lives. Her highness loves a good man."

My hand fell from his, and I went over to the window. This was the first intimation he had given to me that he knew the secret, the secret which had made me so sad, the secret which I tried not to believe.

"You are determined to go to India?" I said without turning my head. I could find no other words.

"Yes. It will be the best thing in the world."

"You will promise to write?"

"Whenever I strike the post. Marry and be happy. It is the lot of the few."

That night he started for Bombay by the way of England, and the next morning I put out for the feudal inn.

CHAPTER XXV.

I was passing along the highway, a pipe between my teeth. It was the beginning of twilight, the trysting hour of all our reveries, when the old days come back with a perfume as sweet and vague as that which hovers over a jar of spiced rose leaves. I was thinking of the year which was gone; how I first came to the inn; of the hour when I first held her in my arms and kissed her and vowed my love to her; of the parting, when she of her own will had thrown her arms about my neck and confessed.

The inn loomed up against the sky, gray and lonely. Behind me, far away down the river, I could catch occasional glimpses of the lamps of the village. Presently there came a faint yellow glow in the east, and I knew that Diana was approaching.

She tosses loose her locks upon the night
And through the dim wood Dian threads her way.
